In his report, in respect to the charges made against the Trust Company in the second Amended and Supplemental Ancillary Bill of Complaint, the Master has made an elaborate examination of the facts and law relied upon by the receiver of the Belt Company, and, also, incidentally by the Southern Company, (which is in effect the successor of the Belt), to show that the Trust Company, for its own selfish purposes, dominated and controlled the corporate acts of the Belt Company, to such extent that such acts became and were so unjust and inequitable that they should be absolutely avoided, or, if not set aside, then that they should be inquired into for the purpose of determining what would be right and just in each transaction in controversy. The conclusions there reached and stated on the question of the alleged domination and control of the Belt Company by the Trust Company, and the legal effect thereof in this cause will be and are applicable to the like issues raised and submitted by the Southern Company in its intervening petition. For the reasons heretofore stated, and for the purposes of this intervention, the finding of the Master will be and is against the "domination and control" theory of the intervenor, and in favor of the legality of the acts of the Belt directory in the different matters complained about in the petition, so far as they may be affected by the domination question, and that too, regardless of the dual officers of the Belt and Trust Companies, the commingling of corporate interests, and the 875 manifest powerful influence of Stilwell, which unquestionably permeated and in some measure, at least, directed, even if it did not control, the Belt Company and all the allied or auxiliary companies, which had been financed by the Trust Company; in other words, that, as to the transactions about which the intervenor complains, the findings of the Master are based on the voluntary atcion of the Belt directory along legitimate lines, in respect to such transactions, leaving open for determination the question of the legal right of the directory otherwise to pledge the Belt securities for the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company, under the circumstances shown in the record.

As to its Trusteeship Disabling the Trust Company from Accepting Belt Securities in Pledge.

3. The intervenor contends, in substance, that, independently of every other question in this cause, the Trust Company as trustee in the Belt mortgage given to secure the bonds, to be used in the construction and equipment of the Belt railroad, undertook to perform the trust reposed in it and thereby became trustee for all the bondholders, and, that by reason of such trustee relation to the properties in controversy, it is estopped to hold any of the properties pledged as security for its own indebtedness; that, in its trustee capacity, the Trust Company assumed an obligation to care for and protect the interests and rights of every bond holder. and that its duties arose from the express terms of the mortgage and such implications therefrom, as the law itself creates; that, while acting as such trustee, and sustaining such trust relation to said properties and to the bondholders, the law will not permit the Trust Company to take or receive any of the Belt assets or properties and appropriate them as security for its own indebtedness; that the courts are so jealous, in guarding the interests of the beneficiaries, that they will not permit a trustee to accept an equivocal position, for otherwise the interest of the trustee and the beneficiary might conflict, and it would be offering a temtation to human weakness to put it in the power of the trustee to decide which of the two duties it will perform; and, further, that such disability of the trustee would exist whether the properties turned over were included in the mortgage or otherwise. Counsel in support of intervenor's contention, have cited the case of King v. Remington, 29 N. W. Rep. 352, decided by the Supreme Court of Minnesota. In that case, King, owner of a large quantity of real estate, was largely indebted, beyond his ability to pay, without sacrificing his property. His wife also owned considerable real estate, and, on June 15, 1875, the two conveyed the greater part of their real estate to Remington by deeds absolute in terms.
876 At the same time, King and Remington executed an agreement in writing, acknowledging the conveyance to have been made as security for advances to King, made and to be made by Remington, and containing provisions in respect to the future advances of money and credit, which Remington covenanted to make, and, from which the purpose of the transaction appears to have been to enable King, by means of the advances so to be made, to pay off his debt, and to save so much of his property as might remain after disposing of enough to reimburse Remington for all advances made and to be made, including interest and expenses. The contract gave to Remington peculiar powers with respect to the holding and disposition of the lands conveyed.

It was held that "this created such a relation of trust and confidence between the parties as disabled Remington to purchase under judgments or mortgages or bankruptcy proceedings, and held against King, and for his own benefit, property of King, whether included in the deeds executed as security or not."

That is to say, that Remington, having accepted his deed to certain specific property to be held by him as security for advances made and to be made to King, thereby assumed such trust relations to King and his property as to disable him from becoming a purchaser at any sale, execution sale or bankruptcy sale, of any property belonging to King, even though it was not the property included in the trust arrangement. As a reason for such ruling the court say:

"Of the main questions in the case, the first that occurs is, what was the character of the relations between the Kings and Remington created by the conveyance and contract of June 15, 1875? The appellants insist that those instruments created merely a mortgage with power to enforce the security by private sales of the lands, and that the relations between the parties was only that of mortgagors and mortgagee, with no other rights, duties, and disabilities than pertain to that relation. The respondents argue that they created a trust, and between the parties the relation of trustee and cestui que trust, they did vest a valid power in trust. As Remington's only right to the lands then conveyed was as security for his advances made and to be made, it would be immaterial whether the transaction was a mere mortgage, or a mortgage with a trust, or with a power in trust added, were it not for the acquiring by Remington of outstanding titles through execution and mortgage and bankruptcy sales, and the claim by appellents of the right to hold 877 them adversely to plaintiff; for, whether the transaction be as claimed by plaintiffs or defendant, there is, unless it had been cut off by the titles thus acquired, a right to call Remington to account for sales made. And this is, in substance, an action for accounting, and not one to enforce the performance of any supposed trust, or to test the validity of any act done under a supposed power in trust. But it is important to consider the character of the transaction far enough to ascertain whether it created such a relation between the parties as, according to the rules of equity jurisprudence, disable Remington to acquire and hold, against the Kings title to the property.

The rule which disables one occupying a confidential or fiduciary relation, in respect to property the subject of a sale, from purchasing for his own benefit, and regarding him as trustee if he do purchase, is absolute, and looks to no other facts than the relation and the purchaser. No fraud in fact need be shown by the cestui que trust, and no excuse will be heard from the trustees. The fact established, and the result inevitably follows. The rule is entirely independent of the fact whether any fraud has intervened. It is to avoid the necessity of such inquiry that the rule takes so general a form. The general interests of society require it to be so, as no court is equal to the examination and ascertainment of the truth in much the greater number of cases. The rule stands on the moral obligation to refrain from placing one's self in relations which will ordinarily excite a conflict between self-interest and integrity. It seeks to remove the temptation that might arise out of such a relation to serve one's self interest at the expense of one's integrity and duty to another, by making it impossible to profit by yielding to the temptation. Nor is the application of the rule confined to a particular class of persons; as guardians, solicitors, attorneys, etc. It applies universally, to all who come within its principles; which principle is that no party can be permitted to purchase an interest in property, and hold it for his own benefit, where he has a duty to perform in relation to such property which is inconsistent with the character of a purchaser on his own account and for his individual use. The duty in relation to the property need not be a legal one, such as the law will enforce a performance of. If it be a moral duty, growing out of confidence and trust reposed by one and accepted by another, in business relations and transactions, it is enough."

As further illustrations of the application of this principle, counsel referred to the following cases:

878 In Ex parte James, 8 Ves. 337, and in Ex Parte Bennett, 10 Ves. 381, it was applied to a solicitor for a commission in bankruptcy in respect to a sale by the commission; In Poillon v. Martin, 1 Sandf. Ch. 589, to the clerk of an attorney conducting a sale of the property, in Duncomb v. New York, H. & N. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 190, to a director of a corporation purchasing its bonds; in Case v. Carroll, 35 N. Y. 385, to an attorney, who had been consulted by an owner of land, on which there was a mortgage then being foreclosed by suit, in respect how to obtain and use the mortgage to perfect her title. The attorney, having brought suit to foreclose the mortgage, conducted it to a foreclosure, and bid in the property, and the rule was held to apply; in Gardner v. Ogden, 22 N. Y. 327, to the clerk of a broker to sell real estate who had access to the correspondence between his principal and the vendor; in Ex parte Hughes, 6 Ves. 617, to a creditor of a bonkrupt, he having been consulted as to the mode of sale by the assignee; in Fulton v. Whitney, 86 N. Y. 548, to the trustee of a fund created by will, purchasing at the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate of the deceased (not part of the trust fund), as the deficiency on the foreclosure would be chargeable as a debt against the estate, and so might diminish the trust fund; in Oliver v. Court, 8 Price, 127, trustees to sell lands for payment of debts employed a land surveyor and auctioneer. He was assisted by his son, a land surveyor and auctioneer. The son acted as auctioneer at an attempt to sell the lands at auction, which failed for want of bidders, and he afterwards bought at private sale. It was held that the rule applied to him.

It is insisted by intervenor's counsel that in none of these cases was there any legal trust, or legal enforceable duty in respect to the property, the subject of the sale, the person in each case occupying a position, because of which more or less confidence and trust were reposed in him in respect to the property, or by means of which he may have acquired information, or possessed some advantage in relation to it, not common to others; and, further, that it is against good conscience that one, occupying such a position, should make a profit to himself by use of the information or advantage which the confidence reposed in him gives him, to the prejudice, perhaps of the person reposing such trust and confidence in him.

It is strongly urged that that doctrine is especially applicable to the Trust Company, not only by virtue of its trusteeship, but, also, because of its intimate knowledge of Belt affairs, and the close and friendly relations existing between the Belt and Trust Companies, and their respective managements.

879 The Master is unable to approve the Intervenor's contention in respect to the duties, responsibilities and obligations of the Trust Company, as applicable to the proofs in this cause, however correct the principles enunciated may be as to other trust relationships. It is true that the inter-relations of the Belt and Trust Companies were exceedingly intimate and of such character as not only to warrant, but, perhaps, to exact the most scrutinizing investigation of any questionable transactions between them, at the instance of any interested party; but, it is also true that the Trust Company, as the financial support of the Belt Company, advanced to it thousands of dollars, which were used for the betterment of Belt affairs, and it would seem that every consideration of good faith and common fairness would entitle the Trust Company to be secured for all its advancements, and to be reimbursed from the securities, provided, of course, that no paramount principle of law was violated in so doing. For the reasons, hereinafter stated, the Master is of the opinion that the Trust Compny was under no such duty to the Belt bondholders as would prohibit it from taking collateral security to secure an indebtedness to it from the Belt Company, nor was there any express covenant in the mortgage creating such duty, nor was there any such duty by implication of law.

In Article III, of the Belt mortgage (Rec. Vol. 48-28932), it is provided that until default is made by the Belt Company, it should be suffered and permitted to possess, operate and enjoy the mortgaged property, and, further, that, in case of default in the payment of any of the obligations secured by it, the trustee should have the right to enter into possession and operate the mortgaged property and sell the same, and, upon such sale, to apply the proceeds in payment of the debt secured. The mortgage also contained the following further provision:

"And the trustee may be removed by a majority in interest of the holders of all said bonds hereby secured, in writing, under their hands and seals, or by a vote of a meeting duly held as herein provided."

It seems to be reasonably clear, from a careful reading of the mortgage provisions, that no active duties were by the mortgage required of or cast upon the trustees until a default had occurred, nor is there any covenant in the mortgage from which, by implication, any such active duties would devolve upon the trustee before such default. The Trust Company was not even authorized to collect interest on the bonds, the same being payable at the office of the Union Trust Company, in Philadelphia, Pa.

880 The authorities justify the contention of counsel for the Trust Company to the effect that until default the duties of a trustee in a railroad mortgage are merely nominal, and that there is no such fiduciary relationship between the trustee and the bondholders as will prevent the trustee from receiving in pledge, to secure its own indebtedness from the mortgagor, any property not included within the lien of the mortgage.

Commonwealth v. R. R. 122 Pa. State, 306.
Sturges v. Knapp, 31 Vt. 1.
Perry on Trusts, Sec. 749.
National Water Works Co. v. Kansas City, 78 Fed. at p. 433, per Brewer, Judge.
Gasquet v. Fidelity Trust Co., 75 Fed. 343.

In Commonwealth v. R. R. 122 Pa. State, 306, the court said:

"Until default is made in the payment of the bonds or the interest falling due upon them, the trustee has no active duties to perform, but is simply the repository of the title to the property mortgaged, in trust for the whole creditor class secured thereby. The actual possession of the franchises and the property remains in the railroad company, to enable it to discharge its duties to the public and earn an income from which to pay its liabilities. But when a default occurs, the duties of the trustee become active and important. He represents all the bondholders, and is under obligations to protect them so far as the property in his hands in trust for them will enable him to do so. If he neglects or refuses to move, any bondholder may proceed by bill, filed on behalf of himself and the other members of the class of creditors to which he belongs, to compel a sale of the mortgaged premises, a removal of the trustee, or such other relief as may be appropriate."

In National Water Works Company v. Kansas City, supra, Judge Brewer said:

"There are in existence certain trust companies, who are in the business of acting as trustees in mortgages, especially railroad mortgages. They are often trustees in successive mortgages from the same grantor, or from different corporations, having a common interest and control. Any question as to the extent of the notice which these trustees take of the transactions of their mortgagors, and the effect of such notice upon parties purchasing bonds from them, is of vast importance. * * * It must be borne in mind that the trustee was selected and the terms of the trust prescribed by 881 the mortgagor alone, and that, until after the bonds were negotiated, it was acting only as the latter's agent. It is true that, after the purchase of the bonds, the bondholders look to the trustee for the discharge of certain duties, but only such duties as it was promised to perform; and, to the extent that those duties inure to their benefit, they may properly hold it liable for any default therein. If, by the terms of a mortgage, neither the principal nor the interest is payable at the office of the trustee, or through its agency, the bondholders, after purchase, deal directly with the mortgagor, and generally only in case of default do they invoke action on the part of the trustee."

In the case of Gould v. R. R. 52 Fed. 680, Judge Caldwell said:

"The corporation is under the same obligation to pay a bona fide debt due to one of its directors and stockholders that it is to pay a debt to a stranger, and security given for a debt due to a director and stockholder, is as valid as a security given to any other creditor."

In that case, it appears that four directors of the railroad company and in control of its affairs, caused the company to execute a deed of trust in their favor to secure certain individual advances made by them to the company. Thereupon, certain of the stockholders sought to have the deed of trust set aside on the ground that these directors stood in a fiduciary relation to the railroad company, and hence could not lawfully receive from it its property in pledge as security for their individual advances. The substance of Judge Caldwell's opinion is that if the indebtedness owing the directors was contracted in good faith, they had the right to take security therefor, though the corporation was insolvent at the time, and even though the effect of the transaction might be to give them priority over other creditors in the payment of their claims.

In respect to the retention by the corporation of the money which the directors had loaned to it, the court said:

"The attack upon the validity of the trust deed must fail upon another ground. Treating the directors as trustees, is not open to the company or any of its creditors to avoid the security given in pursuance of the direction of the stockholders, as well as the directors, so long as the company retains the money which was loaned in good faith, and actually appropriated to legitimate corporate uses.

The payment of the debt [th*is*] contracted is an essential pre-882 requisite to the avoidance of the deed of trust given to secure its payment. And, in the language of the Court of Appeals of New York, "this is true whether the pledge be taken for a present or precedent debt. In either case the equity to be regarded equally exists."

♦

As to the Properties Pledged by the Belt with the Trust Company Being within the Lien of the Belt Mortgage.

4. The Belt mortgage, in its entirety, will be found in Rec. Vol. 48-28932, and the parts thereof descriptive of the properties intended to be covered by its provisions have already been stated herein. Article III of said mortgage is as follows:

"Until default shall be made by the company in the payment of the principal or interest of the said bonds hereby secured, or some one or more of them, or in the performance or observance of any of the covenants, stipulations or agreements herein required to be by it kept, performed or fulfilled, the company, its successor or successors, lessee or lessees, or assigns, shall be suffered and permitted to possess, operate and enjoy the said railroad, premises, property, appurtenances, rights, privileges, immunities and franchises heretofore mentioned, and to take and apply to its or their own use the tolls, incomes, revenues, rents, issues and profits thereof, and to dispose of the same in any manner not inconsistent with these presents or which shall not impair its ability, fully and promptly, to comply with, perform and fulfill all the stipulations covenants and agreements herein contained by it to be complied with, performed or fulfilled."

The properties pledged by the Belt to the Trust Company as security for the Belt indebtedness, are as follows:

19,927 shares of stock of Union Terminal R. R.
4,994 shares of stock of Air Line.
99 first mortgage Northern Connecting bonds.
315 First mortgage Northern Connecting bonds.
15 second mortgage Northern Connecting bonds.
67.9 second mortgage Northern Connecting bonds.
13,920 shares of stock of Northern Connecting.
1,120 shares of stock of Central Improvement Company.
25 shares of stock of Fairmount Amusement Company.
439 shares of stock of Northern Townsite Company.
425 shares of stock of Mo. Elevator & T. Company.

An open account against Gulf Company for accrued switching charges in amount about $133,000.00, assigned by Belt Company to Trust Company.

In addition to these securities, the Belt Company, by its bill of sale of February 1, 1900, delivered to the Trust Company 883 600 tons, more or less, of steel rails and fastenings, which were subsequently sold by the Trust Company, and appiled in part payment on the Belt indebtedness.

The foregoing list of pledged properties is compiled from promissory notes, given by the Belt to the Trust Company, containing a description of the collaterals, and which notes will be found in Rec. Vol. 2-5807 to 5827.

In support of the proposition that the "after acquired property" clause of the Belt mortgage covers the stocks and bonds of the Air Line, Union and Connecting Companies, the intervenor relies upon Section 1061, R. S. Mo. 1899, which in general terms provides for acquiring stocks and bonds of other companies as follows:

"Any railroad company, heretofore organized, or which may be hereafter organized, under the laws of this state, may extend its line of railroad beyond this state into or through any other state or territory, and may acquire any line of railroad, within or without this state, which shall form a continuous line with the road operated by such company by direct connection, or over any other line or lines constructed or to be constructed, and which such company shall have the right by contract or otherwise, when completed, to use or operate, and may acquire and may hold the obligations and stocks of other companies owning or operating any such lines of road."

The claim of counsel for intervenor, in respect to the applicability of this section to the question of the stocks and bonds of said railroad companies being covered by the terms of the Belt mortgage, may be summarized as in the following manner.

It is charged that this section gives to a railroad company the power to acquire the stocks and bonds of another railroad company when the two railroads form a connecting and continuous line, and hence that, the power existed at the outset, on the part of the Suburban Company, if it had so desired, to have itself constructed the Air Line and the Consolidated railroads; that the Suburban Company had the corporate power to do so, and, if it had in fact constructed the lines of the Air Line, Consolidated and Union Companies, that then the physical properties of these roads would have come under the after acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage, the lien of which would have extended to and bound all the properties of these railroads, respectively; that, instead of actually constructing these railroads, the Suburban 884 Company took over all stock of the Union Terminal and Air Line, and thereafter operated both roads by virtue of its large stockholdings therein; that, in as much as the Belt Company was authorized by law to build these lines, or to acquire them by purchase, neither of which it did, but, it is claimed, on the contrary, arrived at the same object by purchasing the stocks of these companies and holding them, which, under the Missouri statutes, the Belt had the right to do, as the roads formed a connecting, continuous line, it follows that those stocks now stand in the place of the properties belonging to such railroad companies, and that a court of equity will look through and beyond the shares of stock, and fasten the lien of the mortgages upon the physical properties of those companies, whose stocks were so held by the Belt Company; and, ynally, that the language of the Suburban Belt mortgage is broad enough to include the railroads and properties of the Belt, and that, whether the railroads are owned by having the title thereto actually conveyed to the Suburban Belt or by virtue of the holding of its stock ownership in the other companies, would make no difference; in other words, that a court of equity will look beyond mere forms and get at the substance and that, for example, if the Belt Company owned all the capital stock of the Air Line, then in contemplation of law it would be the owner of the Air Line, so far as a court of equity is concerned.

The case of the New England Water Works Co. v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 136 Fed. Rep. 521, has been cited as showing that, where a second company is formed for the express purpose of doing certain things, which were part of the functions of the first or original company, then a court of equity will look beyond the corporate form of the second company, and fasten upon the property acquired by it the lien of the after acquired property clause of the mortgage of the original company. In the same way, it is contended that the lien of the Suburban Belt mortgage properly attaches to and fastens itself upon the stock of the other companies held by the Belt, and, further, that it was the intention of the parties, at the time the mortgage was made, to include other railroads, whether owned by the Suburban Belt by the conveyance to it of their physical properties, or by the ownership of their stock, or bonds, or both; and the fact that the Belt Company, because of its ownership of the stocks of the Air Line and Union Terminal, took upon itself the operation of these roads, without any leases, or other authority, except its stock control, is referred to as sustaining intervenor's contention that these roads were considered as parts of the Belt System, and that by the construction thereby placed upon the transactions by the parties themselves, the Air Line and Union Companies were not re-885 garded as distinct or separate companies, except for the purpose of issuing their securities, and that, after that was done, all distinction was apparently lost, and the Air Line and Terminal roads became practically parts of the Belt System; and, by way of suggestion, as tending in the same direction, reference was made to the original charter of the Suburban Company to show that it contemplated a railroad that should encircle the City of Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas, and hence it is claimed that the incorporation of all these other companies was intended to carry out the original purpose for which the Belt was organized, and, also, that the construction of the Union Terminal road in Kansas was a part of the same general plan.

It is insisted that the same line of argument applies to the stock and bonds of the Connecting Company, whose railroad was really constructed through the instrumentality of the Belt Company, which was required to take its stocks and bonds in payment for the construction of the road, and that these stocks and bonds became charged with the lien of the after acquired property clause, since the statute gave the railroad company the right to own stocks and bonds of other companies, as above stated.

It is not otherwise contended by counsel for the Southern Company that the Belt mortgage in terms creates a lien on the stocks and bonds of these other companies, at least until such time as the Belt Company defaulted in the payment of its obligations, and possession had been taken by the trustee or other legal representative of the bondholders.

As to the railroads of the Union Company, Air Line and Belt Company being connecting railroads, and forming a continuous line of railroad with the Belt Company, see Wilcox's testimony (Rec. 34-18368), wherein he states that the Air Line, Union Company and Belt Company were connecting and formed a continuous line of railroad, and that, as early as 1896, the Belt had acquired the stock of the Air Line and Union Company through exchange, and at that time the old Suburban Company had consolidated with the Consolidated Company, and thereafter forming the Belt Company.

The foregoing reasons, given by the intervenor in favor of the proposition that the Belt's mortgage lien attached to and covered the stocks and bonds of the other railroad companies mentioned, are, in the judgment of the Master, unsound in law. It is undisputed that each of the railroad corporations, whose stocks and bonds are in controversy, was a distinct and separate legal entity, organized for the specific purpose of building its own railroad between 886 two certain points, and connecting, either directly with the Belt, as in the cases of the Air Line and Consolidated, or indirectly through another road that did so connect with the Belt, as in the case of the Union Terminal in Kansas, which connected with the Consolidated and which latter in turn connected with the Belt, the whole forming what was known as the Belt System. In order to construct and build these railroads, it became necessary for each company to place a mortgage upon its own franchises, proposed railroad and properties, to secure the bond issue, which had to be floated, and, from the proceeds of the bonds sold, the funds were obtained with which to build the projected railroad. The money for that purpose did not come from the Suburban Company or the Belt Company, however much interested, as a business measure, they were, or might have been in the successful construction and building of the several allied railroad lines, which were to become such important feeders or adjuncts of the main Belt road; on the contrary, the needful funds for building each road came from the sale of the corporate securities of the particular company, organized to build such road. The mere fact that the Belt Company acquired some of the stocks and bonds of the allied companies for a consideration, whether of money or services, in connection with the building of one or more of these roads, and, possibly, in pursuance of a plan of its own, in respect to building up the Belt system, as an entirety, by means of these separate railroad corporations, does not, in the least, militate against the proposition that they were, in a corporate sense, entirely free and independent of the Belt, and owned their respective properties, without any equitable claim thereon or therein, by the Belt. It is true that the Belt Company had the statutory right to buy and own the stocks and bonds of other connecting lines just as it might do as to other personal property, but that right of itself in no way affects favorably the broad proposition of the intervenor that, through the ownership of said stocks and bonds, the physical properties of these roads became subject to the Belt mortgage lien, that is, presumably, the equity in such properties, as the prior mortgage executed by each road, as above stated, was admittedly the first lien thereon.

In conclusion, this is not a case, then, where the Belt had used its own money in building another road whereby, under some circumstances, it might possibly acquire an equitable lien on or right to the railroad property it had helped to bring into existence but, on the contrary, these allied roads were built from their own resources, and the fact that the Belt Company might have built them, in the exercise of its statutory right, does not change 887 the real situation here involved and presented for determination.

The Trust Company denies that any part of the stocks and bonds in controversy were covered by the terms of the Belt mortgage, or that they were in any way appurtenant or necessary to the operation of the Belt railroad, and then alleges that they were all acquired after the consolidation between the Suburban and Consolidated Companies, forming the Belt Company, which acquired the railroads of the Consolidated and Suburban, subject to the mortgages placed by those companies on their properties prior to the consolidation, and, on account of which it is claimed that the intervenor acquired no right, title or interest to said stocks, or any part thereof, by means of the foreclosure proceedings.

This same statement as to the effect of said consolidation applies to all the stocks, bonds, securities or properties pledged to the Trust Company all of which are claimed to have been acquired by the Belt Company after the consolidation; and it is to be inferred that the Trust Company means to assert that the after-acquired property clause of the Suburban Company mortgage (herein otherwise referred to as the Belt mortgage) applies only to the properties acquired by the old Suburban Company, which went out of existence by the consolidation in 1892, and not to properties acquired by the new company, called the Belt Company, after the year 1892.

Now, is that proposition tenable, in view of the Articles of Consolidation, and of Section 1059 (R. S. Mo. 1899), which latter imposes upon the Consolidated Company all of the contracts and liabilities of the constituent companies. This section is as follows:

"Any two or more railroad companies in this state, existing under either general or special laws, and owning railroads constructed wholly or in part, which, when completed and connected, will form in the whole or in the main one continuous line of railroad, are hereby authorized to consolidate in the whole or in the main, and form one company owning and controlling such continuous line of road, with all the powers, rights, privileges and immunities and subject to all the obligations and liabilities to the state, or otherwise, which belonged to or rested upon either of the companies making such consolidation."

In the Articles of Consolidation between the Consolidated Terminal Railway Company and the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, articles 1, 2, 8, and 9, are as follows:

888 Article I. "The said Consolidated Terminal Railway Company of Kansas City and The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company do hereby severally and mutually agree with each other to consolidate and to form a permanent union of their interests, rights and management, and do hereby unite and consolidate their respective companies, properties and franchises into one consolidated company which shall succeed to, possess and enjoy all the property, franchises, powers, rights, privileges and immunities, which belong or belonged to the said constituent companies hereby consolidated, or to either of them, and which shall have the power to sue and be sued in all courts of competent jurisdiction, and shall have and enjoy all the benefits, immunities, grants, rights, powers and franchises conferred upon incorporated railroad companies by the laws of the State of Missouri."

Article II. "The name of the new company formed by this consolidation shall be "Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company."

Article VIII. "The two constituent companies the parties hereto, do by these presents assign, transfer, set over and convey unto the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, the new consolidated Company, hereby formed, subject to all liens now on the same, all the rights, privileges, powers and franchises of each of the constituent companies and all the property real, personal and mixed, and all choses in action, accounts, claims, and demands, of whatever nature owing or belonging to either of said constituent companies, and all rights of way, leases, leasehold interests, depots, station houses, turntables, tanks, terminal yards and terminal facilities, tracks, roadbeds, rail, iron, rolling stock, tools and implements, including all the property of every name, nature and description belonging to either of the constituent companies with all the rights, privileges and appurtenances thereunto appertaining; to have [to] to hold unto and to be owned and controlled by the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, the consolidated company hereby formed, and its successors and assigns, as fully and completely to all intents and purposes as either or both of the constituent companies can now own, hold, use, enjoy and control the same;

And the said constituent companies hereby covenant and agree with the said new company, and with its successors and assigns, that they and each of them will, upon the demand or request of the new company, its successors or assigns, duly execute and deliver any and all such further assurances, assignments, transfers and deeds of conveyance to the said described property, or any part 889 thereof, as may be deemed necessary to vest in said new company, its successors and assigns, a good and sufficient title thereto, subject to all liens which may exist against any of said property at the time this consolidation shall be consummated, including a mortgage or deed of trust, dated February 1st, 1892, given by the said Consolidated Terminal Railway Company to the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Trust Company and The Provident Life and Trust Company of Phialdelphia, as Trustee, to secure its issue of seven hundred and fifty thousand (750,000) Dollars of bonds, all of which liens the new company hereby formed shall assume and pay."

Article IX. "The consolidated company hereby formed shall assume, pay, satisfy and discharge all and every the debts, duties and obligations of each of the constituent companies and said consolidated Company shall assume, perform, fulfill and satisfy all of the obligations and contracts of each of the constituent companies of whatever kind or nature."

It appears that, independently of said statutory provision there is an express assumption by the Belt Company of all of the debts, duties and obligations and contracts of each of the constituent companies; and, furthermore, there was an adjudication of this liability question in certain foreclosure suits in this court to which The Trust Company was a party. The foreclosure bills were against the new consolidated company, and the decree rendered therein recited that the Suburban Company consolidated with the Consolidated Company in 1892 and by the terms of which consolidation the new company assumed and agreed to pay all the obligations and liabilities of the constituent companies, which became merged in the Belt Company.

In the opinion of the Master, however, the legal effect of said consolidation is immaterial in this cause, in so far as it might affect the merits of the claim of the intervenor, in respect to the alleged Belt mortgage lien on the securities and properties pledged by the Belt to the Trust Company, in view of the conclusion reached by the Master that, in law, no such lien existed, and, hence, the intervenor, as the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, could not be subrogated to any such lien.

IV.

As to Shares of Stock of the Union Company and Air Line Pledged as Security to the Trust Company.

There were 19997 shares of Union Company stock and 4994 shares of Air Line stock pledged as collateral security for the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company, and these constituted, outside of a few shares held to qualify the directors of the Union 890 Company and the Air Line Company, respectively, all of the outstanding capital stock of these companies, and which had been acquired by the Belt Company by exchanging its own stock for the Union Company and Air Line stocks. (Rec. Vol. 34-18368).

As will be more fully hereinafter shown, the Philadelphia Committee, a Committee of bondholders interested in the Belt and Gulf Companies and allied railroad companies, associated themselves together for the purpose of reorganizing the railroads belonging to said companies, and working out some plan, by which the Committee should bring within its control the capital stock of the Air Line and the Union Company, which had been theretofore pledged by the Belt Company to secure its indebtedness to the Trust Company. Thereupon, this Committee selected one of its members, Max Pam, to enter into negotiations with the Trust Company for a surrender by it of the Air Line and Union Company stocks, and, as a result of these negotiations, the Committee of bondholders purchased these stocks for the sum of $35,000.00, which was paid to the Trust Company, and applied by it upon the Belt indebtedness. These facts will be disclosed by the minutes of the proceedings of the Reorganization Committee, found in Vol. 41, pp. 22208, 22226, 22233, 22255, 22256, and 22304.

At a meeting of the Committee of June 6, 1900, the following resolution was adopted:

"It was resolved that the Mercantile Trust Company be authorized to pay the sum of $35,000.00 upon delivery to it, for account of this committee, of 20,000 shares of the Union Terminal Railway Company's and 5,000 shares of the Kansas City and Independence Air Line Company's stock, less the outstanding shares, for qualifying directors of the company." (Rec. Vol. 41, p. 22304.)

The Trust Company contends that, in as much as the bondholders

Committee, which was succeeded by the Southern Company, recognized the Trust Company's title to the stocks in question, the Southern Company, which had been incorporated in June, 1900, when this transaction took place, is not now in a position to attack such title. The Southern Company had then acquired, through the Committee, substantially all of the bonds of the Belt Company, and, in all respects the Southern Company received the benefits of the reorganized plans of the Philadelphia Committee, and stands relatively in the same position to the transaction, conducted by that Committee, as it would have stood, provided it, the Southern Company, had personally conducted such transactions. These Air Line and Union Company stocks were acquired by the Committee 891 for the Southern in order that the latter might be able to include such stock in its general mortgage as further security to the new security holders or bondholders thereunder. It would seem to be clear, then, that the Southern Company, having received the benefits of the Committee's purchase of this stock, has ratified the Committee's acts, and cannot be now heard to repudiate the transaction and claim any advantages adverse to it, for it cannot be contended that even if, as an original matter, the Trust Company was guilty of fraud in taking the Air Line and Union Company stock in pledge, yet the bondholders' Committee had the right to waive any alleged breach of duty, and which they unquestionably did when they purchased the stock from the Trust Company, thereby recognizing that it had a title to sell to them.

For the foregoing reason, it is wholly immaterial whether said stocks came within the lien of the Belt mortgage or not, for, in the opinion of the Master, the intervenor, under the circumstances above stated, has neither a legal nor equitable right to the $35,000.00 received by the Trust Company for said Union and Air Line stocks; and the finding as to that issue is in favor of the Trust Company and against the Southern Company.

V.

Bonds and Stocks of Connecting Company, Alleged to Have Been Converted by the Trust Company.

These bonds and stocks of the Connecting Company, which were pledged by the Belt to the Trust Company, are as follows:

99 first mortgage bonds.
315 first mortgage bonds.
15 second mortgage bonds.
67.9 second mortgage bonds.
13920 shares of stock.

In the 9th paragraph of the intervening petition, it is charged that, in the year 1896, the Trust Company caused the incorporation of the Connecting Company, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Kansas City to Pattonsburg, Missouri, in order to connect with railroads at that point, running eastwardly to Quincy,

Illinois, and northwardly to Council Bluffs, Iowa; that the Trust Company caused the Connecting Company to issue its capital stock, and to execute its bonds, secured by mortgage upon all its properties, and, also, caused the Connecting Company and the Belt Company to enter into a contract, under which the Belt Company undertook to acquire the right-of-way and to construct the 892 railroad for said Connecting Company, and, under which the Connecting Company agreed to give the Belt Company its bonds and stocks.

The Trust Company admits that such a contract was made between the Belt and Connecting Companies, but it states that the contract was made freely, and of their own accord, and without any interference on the part of the Trust Company; that the railroad of the Connecting Company formed a direct connection with the Belt Company, the two making a continuous line of railroad, and, that, in pursuance of said contract, it is admitted by the Trust Company that the Belt Company began the construction of a railroad for the Connecting Company, and the acquisition of its right-of-way, and receiving, as consideration for so doing, a large amount of the first mortgage bonds and all the capital stock of the Connecting Company, and that the Belt Company held such stock and bonds, on and prior to July 20, 1899.

The intervenor also charged that, at various dates, the Trust Company took and converted to its own use the following Connecting Company stocks and bonds, then owned by the Belt Company;

1130 first mortgage bonds of the value of.....	$845,415.00
16 second mortgage bonds of the value of.....	7,200.00
and 6250 shares of stock, of the value of.....	35,500.00

The intervenor further charges that on or about July 20, 1899, the Trust Company took from the Belt Company 414 first mortgage bonds, and 3920 shares of stock of the Connecting Company, being the property of the Belt Company, and claimed to hold the same as collateral security for an alleged indebtedness from the Belt Company to it; that all of said bonds and stocks came under the after acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage, and were charged with an equitable lien to secure the Belt bonds, and, that the Trust Company at all times knew such to be the fact; that, by the foreclosure proceedings and sale to the intervenor, above referred to, the equitable title to said stocks and bonds, or the proceeds thereof, when they had been sold by the Trust Company, vested in the intervenor, which is now the equitable owner thereof; that, on or about September 30, 1899, the Trust Company claims to have sold said 3920 shares of Connecting Company stock for $19,885.71.

The Trust Company denies that said bonds or stocks, or any of them, came under the after acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage, or that they, or any of them, were charged with an equitable lien to secure the bonds of the Belt Company, or 893 that, by reason of the foreclosure proceedings and sale thereunder, the equitable title to said stocks and bonds, or the proceeds thereof, vested in equity in the intervenor; but, on the contrary, the Trust Company states that said mortgage did not by its terms cover said bonds and stocks, or any part thereof, that they were not necessary or appurtenant to the operation of the railroad, and were all acquired after the consolidation between the Suburban Company and Consolidated Company into the Belt Company, and, that said intervenor acquired no right, title or interest of any kind whatsoever in said stocks and bonds by means of said foreclosure proceedings.

The Trust Company admits that, on or about September 30, 1899, it sold 13920 (not 3920) shares of Connecting Company stock, which it had theretofore held as collateral security for the sum of $19,885.71, being the full and fair value thereof, but alleges that, prior to said sale, it had accepted said stock as part payment of its indebtedness at the same price, for which it afterwards sold the same.

The intervenor further charges that the Trust Company sold all of said first mortgage bonds, and received, as the proceeds thereof, the sum of $995,415.00, and to which the intervenor claims it is entitled, in equity and good conscience, for the reason that the proceeds of all said stocks and bonds so disposed of, stand in equity for the securities themselves.

The claim of the intervenor, when analyzed, is to the effect that 414 first mortgage bonds and 82.9 second mortgage bonds and 3920 shares of stocks of the Connecting Company, were pledged by the Belt Company to the Trust Company as collateral security for the Belt indebtedness to it; and, also, that the Trust Company otherwise took and converted to its own use 1130 of said first mortgage bonds, including those pledged as above stated, and all being of the alleged value of $845,415.00, and 6250 shares of Connecting Company stock of the alleged value of $37,500.00.

First, as to the pledged stock and bonds of the Connecting Company, 315 first mortgage bonds were taken as collateral to a Belt note for $109,500.00, dated February 8, 1900. (Rec. 11-5816) and were sold by the Trust Company, on October 23, 1900, at 35 cents on the dollar, to the National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City, Missouri, and the proceeds, amounting to $110,250.00, were applied on the Belt debt. (Rec. Vol. 11-5805, and Vol. 15-8231);

894 23 first mortgage bonds were given to the Trust Company as collateral security to a Belt note for $23,056.41, dated September 21, 1899, (Rec. Vol. 14, p. 7806-7815);

50 First mortgage bonds, as collateral to Belt [nore] for $25,000, dated January 25, 1900, (Rec. Vol. 11, p. 5807 and Vol. 14, pp. 7806 to 7815);

26 first mortgage bonls, as collateral to Belt note for $10,400.00, dated February 9, 1900, (Rec. Vol. 11-5827).

The 99 first mortgage bonds, together with 381 coupons, were sold, on November 1, 1901, under an order made by Judge Thayer in the Bierce case, dated October 30, 1901, and pending in this court for $40,001.25, and which sum, under said order, was, by the receiver of the Guardian Trust Company, appointed in that case, placed in a separate fund to await the outcome of this litigation, (Rec. Vol. 2-5795, and Vol. 15-8231), as both the Cambria and Southern Companies as well as the Trust Company, claim this money.

The 13920 (not 3920, as stated in intervening petition) shares of Connecting Company stock were by the Trust Company sold to John Lambert, one of the associates of John W. Gates, at $1.42-6/7 per share, or $19,885.71, and the proceeds credited upon the Belt debt. This sale to Lambert was made on September 30, 1899, and long before any default was made by the Belt Company in the payment of interest on its bonds. (Rec. Vol. 2-5809; Vol. 15-7840-7844), and at a time when, under the terms of the mortgage, the Belt Company was authorized to own, possess, use and enjoy its property and the income thereof.

The second mortgage bonds are now on hand, but are utterly worthless by reason of the foreclosure of the first mortgage on the railroad of the Connecting Company.

It is not controverted that such foreclosure under the first mortgage, was made, and that, after applying the proceeds of the foreclosure sale on account of the bonded indebtedness, there was left unpaid a large deficiency on the first mortgage bonds in addition to all the second mortgage bonds.

The history of the incorporation of the Connecting Company and the construction of its road by the Belt Company, unmistakably shows that it could not have been intended that the bonds, issued by the Connecting Company, and acquired by the Belt Company, were to be within the lien of the after-acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage.

It appears from the record that the Connecting Company made a construction contract with the Belt Company, dated June 895 30, 1896 (Rec. Vol. 15, pp. 8174 to 8191), whereby the latter loaned its money and credit to the former in exchange for the securities, bonds and stocks of the Connecting Company, which were to be in the way of compensation to the Belt for the building, construction and equipping of the Connecting road, and, in view of the transaction as conducted between these companies and the Trust Company in the disposition of these securities, it necessarily follows that it could not have been contemplated between the Belt and Connecting Companies that these securities of the latter Company should be held and retained in the Belt treasury as part of the mortgage security of the Belt bondholders. On the contrary, it was clearly the intention of all parties concerned that the Belt should raise money on these securities, in order to provide the necessary funds for the construction of the Connecting road, for, otherwise, as shown by the record, and about which there is no controversy, the Belt Company had no other means of raising the funds required to build the railroad of the Connecting Company, which was approximately 90 miles in length.

In fact, one of the main complaints, made by the intervenor against the Trust Company, is based upon the alleged domination and control of the Belt by the Trust Company, by reason of which the intervenor claims that the Trust Company financially involved the Belt Company in the building of the Connecting Company's railroad alleged to be an unprofitable venture on the part of the Belt Company.

It is shown in the record that, as the work of building this road progressed, these securities were turned over to the Belt Company from time to time, and, in lieu thereof the Belt Company, operating largely through the Trust Company, furnished the funds with which to carry on the construction work. The Connecting Company was a distinct and independent organization from the Belt Company, and, during the construction period especially, was managed and operated by its own officers, though afterwards, by reason of Belt ownership of all its capital stock, it became largely a Belt institution. There can be no doubt that, perhaps the principal motive actuating the Belt Company, in entering into the construction contract with the Connecting Company, was that the latter Company would become a tenant line of the Belt, under the terminal contract for its switching, thereby increasing the earnings and revenues of the Belt Company, and, in addition, it is reasonable to suppose that the Belt Company intended, and in fact expected, to make some profits out of the construction of the Connecting railroad. It was intended then, as a business transaction, mutually beneficial to each 896 of the contracting companies.

Second, as to the unpledged stocks and bonds of the Connecting Company, disposed of by the Trust Company:

The Connecting Company stocks and bonds, obtained by the Belt Company, were turned over to the Trust Company and sold and disposed of by it. (Wilcox's testimony, Rec. Vol. 34, pp. 18068-69, 18367-69, and '70).

In Johnson's statement, (Rec. Vol. 15, pp. 8225-8226) there is shown the disposition of 1306 first mortgage bonds of the Connecting Company, all of which were either disposed of to the Trust Company, or by it to others, except 176 bonds, which were disposed of by others than the Trust Company, and thereby leaving 1130 first mortgage bonds, including those pledged to it, which were either acquired by the Trust Company or disposed of by it, for an aggregate sum of $845,415.00.

Sixteen second mortgage bonds of Connecting Company, belonging to the Belt, were acquired by the Trust Company, pledgee, for $7200.00. (Johnson's statement, Rec. Vol. 15-8227), and 6250 shares of Connecting Company stock were acquired by the Trust Company at the price of $37,500.00 (Rec. Vol. 31, pp. 16679-16680, and Johnson's statement, Rec. Vol. 15-8224).

No useful purpose would be subserved by here showing the particulars of the various transactions had by the Belt and Trust Companies in respect to the disposition of said Connecting Company securities, as it appears, from the statements in the record as to the disposition thereof, that the Trust Company has fully accounted for the proceeds of all sales of said bonds and stocks, made to it directly or through it to others.

Briefly stated, the reasons heretofore given and conclusions reached, to the effect that the Union and Air Line securities are not within the lien of the Belt mortgage, are equally applicable to the stocks and bonds of the Connecting Company.

The Master is of the opinion that the intervenor's contention, in respect to the Connecting Company securities, is not sustained by the proofs, and the law of the case, and, his finding is adverse to intervenor's claim.

VI.

Account of Belt Company against Gulf Company for About $133,000.00, and Assigned by Belt to Trust Company as Collateral Security for Belt Indebtedness.

897 This account is now the subject of an intervening petition, filed by the Trust Company in the Gulf foreclosure case in this court, and the intervention is still pending there, awaiting the determination of the issue in this case, and nothing whatever has yet been realized on the open account.

In paragraph 10, of the intervening petition, it is charged that the Trust Company caused the Belt Company to enter into a terminal contract with the Gulf Company, by the terms of which the Belt gave to the Gulf an entrance into Kansas City, and certain valuable terminal rights and facilities, and that the Gulf undertook and agreed to pay the Belt certain sums of money as rental for such rights and privileges, both parties entering upon the performance of the contract, and continuing to so perform, until April 1, 1899, when receivers were appointed for the Gulf Company, at which time, it is alleged that the Gulf was indebted to the Belt, on account of said contract, to an amount in excess of $133,000.00. It is charged by the intervenor that, by virtue of the after acquired property clause in the Belt mortgage, said terminal contract became charged in equity with the mortgage lien to secure the Belt bonds, and, that the rents, issues and profits at that time due the Belt Company under said contract also became charged in equity with such mortgage lien, and, further, that, by reason of said foreclosure proceedings and the sale thereunder to the intervenor, the latter acquired "all equitable right and title to said contract and to the rentals due thereon, as the Trust Company, at all times well knew."

It is, also, charged that the Belt Company, on or about February 1, 1900, undertook to transfer and assign said account to the Trust Company, as collateral security to secure an alleged indebtedness to the Trust Company from the Belt, and that the Trust Company now claims to be the assignee of said account.

The Trust Company admits that the parties operated under said contract until April 1, 1899, when receivers for the Gulf Company were appointed, and that there was then due from the Gulf to the Belt, under said contract, the sum of about $133,000.00, and that, on or about February 1, 1900, the Belt Company transferred and assigned to the Trust Company, its said account against the Gulf Company as collateral security for and to the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company.

The Trust Company, however, denies that it caused the Belt Company to enter into said terminal contract with the Gulf Company, or that, under the after acquired property clause in the Belt mortgage, the said contract became charged in equity with a mort-898 gage lien to secure the Belt bonds, or, that the rents, issues and profits, accruing under said contract, became charged in equity with such mortgage lien, or that, by virtue of the foreclosure proceedings and sale thereunder to the intervenor, the latter acquired any equitable title or right to said contracts, and the rentals, issues, and profits due thereon. The Trust Company, on the contrary, contends that said contract, its rentals and profits, are not covered by the terms of said Belt mortgage, and are in no way appurtenant to the operation of the Belt railroad; and, further, that, in as much as said contract was made and the rentals and earnings accrued thereunder, after the consolidation hereinbefore mentioned between the Suburban Company and Consolidated Company into the Belt Company, the said rentals and earnings are not within the after acquired clause of the Belt mortgage. The effect of this consolidation has already been considered by the Master, and, the conclusion there reached will suffice for the purpose of this intervention, wherever the same contention is made in Trust Company's answer.

There is a slight discrepancy in the record as to the amount owing by the Gulf Company on said terminal contract. From the testimony of witness Ingals, the total claim appears to be $132,805.48, which is taken as correct for the purpose of this intervention. As for the items comprising that amount, see Ingals' testimony, and exhibit, in Rec. Vol. 48, pp. 28823 to 28850.)

In Rec. Vol. 52-31429, will be found a record of a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Belt Company, held in February 1, 1900, at which there was adopted a resolution, reciting the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company, and directing the Belt officers to execute an assignment to the Trust Company of the account, held by the Belt against the Gulf Company, aggregating the sum of $133,058.04, and which represented past due charges for switching services and terminal facilities furnished by the Belt to the Gulf as provided in a written contract between them. The furnishing of these terminal facilities and switching services constituted an important source of income and revenue to the Belt Company, and, the intervenor claims that such account is included within the lien of the Belt mortgage. This account is strictly for the revenue or earnings of the Belt Company, accruing from its daily operations and without which it could not be expected to continue its legitimate or ordinary business affairs, or, in other words, exercise its proper corporate functions. It is well settled that the income or earnings of such a railroad company are not included within its mortgage, and further, that neither the bondholders, nor the trustee in 899 the mortgage, are entitled to the income or earnings which accrued and had been disposed of, prior to the time possession is taken by the trustee or receiver. In this case, the receivers were not appointed, nor was possession taken until September 6, 1900, which was some seven or eight months after the assignment of the claim to the Trust Company.

Jones, in his work on Corporate Bonds and Mortgages, Section 80, says:

"The earnings of a railroad, which is allowed to remain in the possession of the mortgagor, are not subject to the lien of the mortgage, although in terms the mortgage covers the tolls of the road, if at the same time the mortgage implies that the mortgagor is to hold possession and receive the earnings of the road until the mortgagee takes possession."

Counsel for the Trust Company also cite the following authorities:

Gilman v. Railroad, 91 U. S., 603, 617;
R. R. v. Cowdry, 11 Wallace, U. S. 459;
American Bridge Co. v. Heidelbach, 94 U. S., 798;
Dow v. R. R. 124, U. S., 652;
N. Y. Security Co. v. Gas Company, 159 N. Y., 137;
See also 45 L. R. A., 132.

It has been held that the money, which is in the hands of the treasurer of a railroad company, at the time when possession is taken of its properties and assets under a mortgage covering such properties and earnings, belongs to the railroad corporation itself, and not to the trustee in the mortgage, that is, in case the mortgage provides that until default the company may retain possession; and if, in such case, the trustee should take possession of the money, it will be subject to garnishment, at the suit of general creditors of the company, because of the fact that it is not subject to the lien of the mortgage, and hence, legally belongs to the corporation, and not to the trustee or bondholders.

Jones on Corporate Bonds and Mortgages, Sec. 86.
Schmidt v. Railroad, 112, Ky. 717.

Counsel for the Southern Company contend that this claim for switching charges was included within the Belt mortgage, because of the fact that the mortgage conveyed "all the terminals, terminal rights, privileges, contracts, leases * * * which the company now owns and holds, and which it may hereafter own and hold for use in connection with its said railroad," the point of the contention being that the word "contracts", as used in that con-
900 nection, must be deemed to mean terminal contracts, and, that therefore, in as much as these switching charges arose out of a terminal contract between the Gulf and Belt Companies, it follows that this open account was subject to the mortgage.

From an examination of the authorities cited, the conclusion has been reached that even in cases where the mortgage expressly covered income tolls and earnings, yet, if it further provided that the mortgagee was to remain in possession until default, then the bondholders and the trustee in the mortgage are not entitled to the earnings or income of the road, earned prior to the taking of possession, and certainly not to such as had theretofore been disposed of to bona fide creditors; and it follows that all such earnings and income belong to the general creditors of the corporation, and not to the mortgagee.

In the judgment of the Master, this claim for switching charges falls strictly within the earnings and income of the Belt, and for that reason is not, under the facts of this case, within the terms of the Belt mortgage; and, for the reasons above mentioned, the finding of the Master, as to this item, is against the claim of the Southern Company.

VII.

Steel Rails and Fastenings Pledged by the Belt Company to the Trust Company.

As to the alleged appropriation by the Trust Company, on February 1, 1900, of 600 tons of steel rails, and 20 tons of fastenings, belonging to the Belt Company, the Southern Company, in paragraph 7 of its intervening petition, charges that, on February 1, 1900, and prior thereto, the Belt Company was the owner and in possession of, approximately, 600 tons, more or less, of steel rails, and 20 tons of fastenings for use in connection therewith, and that, by virtue of the after acquired property clause in the Belt mortgage, the steel rails and fastenings became charged with a lien to secure the payment of the Belt bonds, secured by the Belt mortgage, and that, upon the foreclosure of the Belt mortgage, and the sale had thereunder, the equitable title to said rails and fastenings passed to and vested in the intervenor, who became the equitable owner thereof.

The intervenor denies that the Trust Company has any right or claim to the rails and fastenings, and asks that it be required to account therefor at the rate of $35.00 per ton.

901 In paragraph 7 of its answer, the Trust Company denies that said rails and fastenings were covered by, or became charged with, the lien of the Belt mortgage, by reason of the after acquired property clause, or that the intervenor became the equitable owner of said properties, upon the foreclosure of said mortgage and the sale thereunder.

The Trust Company also alleged that there were less than 360 tons of said rails and fastenings and that they were purchased after the consolidation of the Suburban and Consolidated Companies, thereby forming the new company, called the Belt Company, and long after the execution of the Belt mortgage; that said rails and fastenings were not appurtenant to the operation of the Belt railroad, and are held by the Trust Company as collateral security to the Belt indebtedness to it; that said rails and fastenings were sold for about $11,000.00, and that the net proceeds of the sale has been credited by the Trust Company on its indebtedness against the Belt Company; and, further, that notwithstanding the Belt Company had theretofore given said rails and fastenings to the Trust Company as collateral security for its indebtedness against the Belt Company the latter afterwards refused to deliver the same to the Trust Company, and, thereupon, it was compelled to bring a replevin suit for such rails and fastenings, in the Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri, and which suit was subsequently determined in favor of the Trust Company, and, by reason of which, it is claimed by the Trust Company that the judgment rendered therein is res adjudicata and cannot be here inquired into.

The Trust Company acquired these rails and fastenings by reason of the proceedings at the Belt Directors' meeting of February 1, 1900, (Rec. 52, pp. 31429 to 31432), and, in this connection, see Martin's testimony, as to what occurred at that directors' meeting of February 1, 1900, and the reasons given for the Trust Company's taking additional collateral security, and, also, Wilcox's testimony as to the rails being taken as collateral security by the Trust Company on that date, and as a part of what he understood was the general plan of the Trust Company to get all the collateral it could from the Belt, in view of the probable loss of control of the Belt Company. (Rec. 53-32816, and Rec. 34-18294).

E. L. Martin further stated that these rails had been brought from the Cambria Company, and were, on February 1, 1900, available for any purpose in connection with the Belt Company (Rec. 55-33760 to 33761), and, Neal S. Doran, stated that it was his recollection that the rails were down in the East Bottoms yards, (Rec. 51-31215).

902 The statement of account between the Trust Company and the Belt Company (Rec. 1-137) shows the sale of 16-1712/2000 tons of fastenings at $33.00 per ton, and also the sale of iron rails at $33.00 per ton, the net proceeds being $11,133.06, which were credited upon the Trust Company's open account against the Belt Company. There is a dispute as to the number of tons of rails acquired by the Trust Company, the intervenor [—] that there were 600 tons and the Trust Company claiming that there was only 343-1940/2040 tons, but the Master finds that the amount in the hands of the Trust Company, as proceeds of said rails and fastenings, is $11,133.06.

It appears, on page 167, of the testimony taken by counsel for the Cambria Steel Company, before the Special Master, upon the application for a temporary injunction in this cause, and filed with the Clerk of this Court on November 27, 1900, and which by agreement of counsel is made part of the record of this cause, that witness Johnson identified a letter from the Belt Purchasing Agent, reading as follows:

"The rails are intended for use in constructing new yards for the Kansas City and Northern Connecting; also these splice bars are intended for use in connection with the rails recently received for the new yards of the Kansas City & N. C. R. R. at Kansas City."

It is not disputed that in April, 1900, the so-called Stilwell management retired from the management of the Belt Company, and thereupon Stuart R. Knott became the manager thereof, and that, on September 6, 1900, said Knott and E. F. Swinney were appointed receivers of the Belt Company, that the Trust Company demanded possession of said rails and fastenings, and, upon being refused, brought an action in replevin against the Belt Company in the State Circuit Court; that, on October 9, 1900, the Belt filed its answer in the replevin suit, and on January 25, 1904, judgment was rendered in favor of the Trust Company for the possession of said properties, and damages for the detention thereof. (Rec. 53-36690).

It appears from the record that, during the pendency of that suit, the said Knott was the president of the Belt and Southern Companies, and was also one of the receivers of the Belt Company, and, for such reasons, it is contended by the Trust Company, that it cannot reasonably be claimed that the Southern Company, as well as the Belt receiver, did not have actual notice of the pendency of the replevin suit, even though neither the Southern Company nor the Belt receiver were made parties to said suit.

903 The Trust Company, having so obtained possession of the rails and fastenings in question, sold the same on September 26, 1900, and credited the net proceeds of $11,133.06, upon the open account due the Trust Company from the Belt Company. (Rec. 1-137).

Counsel for the Southern Company insist that, inasmuch as the replevin suit was not brought against it, the judgment rendered therein does not in any wise affect its rights to the rails and fastenings in controversy.

Counsel for the Trust Company, however, contend that the judgment in the replevin suit is res adjudicata and is conclusive on the Southern; and, also, that the replevin suit did not abate the appointment of receivers for the Belt, and, further that, in view of the official connection of Receiver Knott with the Southern and Belt Companies, as above stated, the Southern after its long waiting, ought not now be permitted to dispute the title of the Trust Company to the rails in controversy.

The Master does not deem it necessary to express an opinion as to the "res-adjudicata" proposition involved, for, independently of the legal effect of the judgment in the replevin suit, that is, whether it is binding on the intervenor, or otherwise, the main question for determination is whether the rails and fastenings in question were part of the mortgaged property, and covered by the after acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage.

After a careful examination of the provisions of the Belt mortgage, and the authorities on the subject, the Master has reached the conclusion that it does not purport to convey after acquired rails, or other materials, which are not part of the roadbed. The mortgage mentions specifically, many kinds of properties, which are intended to be included within its provisions, whether then owned or thereafter to be acquired, as, for example, water tanks, fuel, tools, implements, machinery, etc., but nowhere does it mention or specify materials. The necessities of railroads frequently require them to dispose of their old surplus materials, and acquire new or different materials for their purposes, and, for that reason, the omission of the word "material" was doubtless intentional, and for the very purpose of not interfering with the usual and customary right of railroads in disposing of their surplus materials, such as ties, rails, etc. Jones, in his work on Corporate Bonds and Mortgages, Sec. 104, says:

"A mortgage conveying a railroad, with its superstructure, track and all other appurtenances, made or to be made, and also 904 the railroad furniture, including engines, tenders, cars of every description, tools, materials, machinery, and every other kind of personal property which shall be used for operating said railroad, does not purport to grant property thereafter to be acquired by the company, except so far as it becomes appurtenant to the road, or is used in it. Chairs intended for fastening down the rails afterwards acquired, which were never used in its construction, but were lying upon the ground in heaps, are not appurtenant to the road or used in operating it, within the terms of the mortgage, and consequently are not covered by it. There is no language in the instruments which purports to convey materials, to be after acquired for the construction or repair of the road," citing cases.

The cases of "Farmers Loan & Tr. Co., v. Bank, 11 Wis. 207, and 15 Wis. 424," and "Dinsmore v. R. R. 12 Wis. 649", are to the same effect.

In the case at bar, it appears that the materials in dispute were intended for use on the Connecting Company road, rather than the Belt road.

The conclusion of the Master is that the intervenor's claim as to said rails and fastenings, cannot be maintained, and, hence, that the Trust Company should not be held to account to the intervenor for said properties, or their proceeds.

VIII.

Central Improvement Company Properties and Stock.

One of the most valuable collateral securities, turned over to the Trust Company by the Belt Company, is 1120 shares of stock of the Central Improvement Company, herein called Central Company, and, the claim of the Southern Company, as the purchaser at the Belt foreclosure sale, by reason of the after acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage, is found in the sixth paragraph of the intervening petition, in which the intervenor states, in substance, that the Trust Company caused the Central Company to be incorporated in 1895, with its directors and officers made up from those of the Trust Company, and its purposes being to hold the title to such real estate as might be needed for rights of way, or other uses in connection with the operation of the different railroads, alleged to be dominated and controlled by the Trust Company, the title in some instances being taken by the Central Company to enable it to give back a first deed of trust on the property purchased, to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and so as not to be subject to the lien of the general mortgage given by such road upon its own properties.

905 In pursuance of this plan, large amounts of money were contributed by the Gulf, Belt and Air Line Companies, respectively, for the purchase of such rights of way and terminal properties as were necessary for the use and operation of their respective railroads, the titles thereto being, for convenience merely, placed in the Central Company, and, the money to pay for such properties being furnished by the partcular company, for whose benefit the purchase was made, and either paid directly to the vendor of the property, or to the Central Company, which issued its capital stock to the Company furnishing the money to the extent, approximately, of the amount so furnished.

In this way there were issued by the Central Company 1407 shares, and of which, 817 shares were to the Belt Company, 334 shares to the Union Company, 22 shares to the Air Line and 234 shares to the Gulf Company, said companies having furnished, from time to time, for the purposes above stated, the following amounts: Belt Company, $129,571.50, Air Line, $16,104.41, and Gulf Company, $23,673.89, making the total sum of $169,349.60, and being the only money furnished to the Central Company, which did not have any assets, other than the properties bought by it for said companies respectively.

Intervenor charges that, by reason of the premises, the Central Company is, and was, at all said times, a mere trustee, holding the legal title to the various properties, in trust, for the railways, for whose use and benefit said lands were bought, and that immediately upon the vesting of the legal title in the Central Company, the particular railroad interested in any such purchase, because the equitable owner, and entitled to the conveyance of the property purchased; and, also, that all the properties so purchased were necessary for the use and operation of the railroads purchasing them, and came within the after acquired property clause of the general mortgage placed upon said railroads, respectively, "so that the equitable liens of said mortgages attached to and became a charge upon the said properties, in favor of the bondholders of said companies, respectively; that the proceeds of some of said properties, sold by the receiver of the Central Company, under the orders of this Court, are now in the receiver's possession.

Intervenor further charges that, by reason of the foreclosure proceedings, and sales thereunder, it acquired the equitable title to all of said properties, so held by the Central Company, and became and is [not] entitled to the conveyance thereof, and to the proceeds of all sales thereof made by the receiver of the Central Company under the order of this Court, and now held by such receiver. The prayer of the petition is as follows:

906 "Wherefore, your petitioner prays:

a. For a judgment order and decree of this court requiring the Central Improvement Company and its receiver to convey to your intervenor all the real estate or other property standing in its name and to turn over to your intervenor all the moneys held [by] the Central Improvement Company, or its receiver, or owing to it, or them or arising from the sale of the proceeds of said property, and for such other relief as may be equitable and just." (Int. Pet. 28).

The Trust Company, in its answer, denied all the material averments of the intervening petition, excepting the organization of the Central Company, and, then alleged, in substance, that its officers and directors were freely elected by its stockholders and had no personal interest in procuring any benefit or advantage, for respondent, at the expense of the Central Company, and did not procure any such advantage; that the Central Company was organized, by the procurement of the Belt and Gulf Companies, for the purpose of securing and acquiring the title for various tracts of land in and about Kansas City, the money for the purchase of which lands was to be furnished and paid by the Gulf, Belt and Air Line Companies, respectively, and for which payments, the capital stock of the Central Company was issued, from time to time, to each company, according to the amount of the payments; that the interest of the company, so advancing the money, is represented by the Central stock, and, in that way, the three companies, through their stock representation, became the beneficial owners of the properties of the Central Company, subject to any liens thereon; and the Trust Company further alleged that no part of the Central Company properties was covered by any of the general mortgage liens, which were foreclosed in the foreclosure proceedings of the Belt and constituent companies, nor were any of said properties appurtenant or necessary to the operation of the foreclosed railroads, nor did the intervenor acquire title to any of said properties by reason of said foreclosures.

1. The Central Company was organized March 21, 1895, with a capital stock of $50,000.00, afterwards increased to $200,000.00, and its corporate purposes, as expressed in its Articles of Association, were to buy, own, rent, hold and improve real estate [to] the states of Missouri, Kansas and other states; to sell, rent, lease, mortgage, and otherwise dispose of the same for pecuniary profits or gain (Rec. Vol. 18-9160).

It is not controverted that the evidence in the record (Vol. 53 31895 to 32375), discloses that, from time to time, the Gulf 907 Belt, Air Line, and Union Terminal railroads, deemed it expedient or necessary to arrange for the purchase or control of more real estate than was then absolutely required for their respective rights-of-way purposes. In some instances, lands were bought or leased for the purpose of erecting, either for the railroads or for some vendee, industrial plants along the lines of the railroads, with a view to increasing their traffic. In other cases, tracts of vacant property were acquired for the use of terminal yards for switching, in view both of present and future necessities; and, again, as in the case of Fairmount Park, large tracts of land were bought or leased for use as amusement parks, and for the purpose of building up the business of the Air Line and Suburban Belt roads. In still other cases, such lands were bought for the purpose, in part, of providing the necessary right-of-way for the road making such purchase, and, in as much as the entire tract through which the right-of-way was projected could be purchased for about the same price that the right-of-way would cost, the whole tract would be brought, and the surplus held for future use.

Before the organization of the Central Company, another corporation, called the State Realty Company, mainly managed by officers of the Trust Company, had been organized and used as an instrumentality for taking the title to such land as was acquired by foreclosure by the M. K. & T. Real Estate Trust Company, which preceded the Trust Company, and the State Realty Company also took and held the titles to such lands as the various railroads mentioned desired to control, and later on, as these properties increased in number, it was seen that there was a necessity for divorcing and separating from the business of the State Realty Company the business of the various railroad companies, and, to accomplish such purpose, the Central Improvement Company was organized. It is also shown in the record, and not controverted, that one of the chief underlying purposes of so vesting in the Central Company the title of the real estate investments of the different railroads, of the nature above indicated, was that it was intended thereby to prevent said properties from being subject to the lien of the railroad mortgages, which had been executed by said railroads and covering after acquired properties, and in that way, the object was to enable the Central Company, as the corporation holding such titles, to make such disposition of said lands as might be desired, from time to time.

The Belt Company was strictly a switching road, and, in order to enable it to build up its business, it was deemed necessary for it to develop and enlarge its own traffic arrangements by encour-908 aging industries to locate along its lines, and, with that end in view, real estate was acquired adjoining the Belt right-of-way with the view of erecting elevators and other plants thereon, so as to make business for the road. The same object was attempted to be attained by the Air Line, when it acquired the Fairmount Park tract for the purpose of increasing its passenger traffic over it and the Belt road.

When the Central Company was organized, the lands held by the State Realty Company were quitclaimed to it, and the railroad companies, holding stock in the State Realty Company, surrendered the same, and took in lieu thereof the stock of the Central Company, which made a full and complete settlement with the Realty Company, (Vol. 53-32353) and from that time forth the function, theretofore performed by the Realty Company, in the respect mentioned as to such railroad purchases, was taken up and performed by the Central Company. The Realty Company billed these properties, so conveyed to the Central Company, at their actual cost, that is to say, at their original purchase price, with all taxes and other fixed charges thereon, and thereupon, the Central Company charged the amounts thus fixed against each property to the various railroads, along whose route the lands thus acquired laid, and against those charges the Central Company credited itself with its own capital stock, which it issued out of its treasury to the railroad companies, respectively.

From time to time, the Central Company made other purchases and the cost of such lands were in each instance charged to the particular railroad purchasing the same, the custom of conducting the business being to make a requisition upon such road for the necessary funds to pay for the land purchased, and the railroad company would respond by issuing to the Central Company its voucher, covering the cost of the land and the expenses incident to the purchase, such as attorneys fees, recording fees, abstract, etc.; and, all such advances made by any railroad company, on account of land purchased, were credited to it by the Central Company, and, for the exact amount of which the stock of the Central Company was issued to such railroad company (Vol. 53-31120). This business was conducted in an accurate and systematic way, and certificates were always issued, calling for even hundreds of dollars, par value, and, in case the amount advanced by any railroad company to the Central Company, was more or less than an even hundred dollars, then the Central Company would issue its capital stock for an even amount and either issue its voucher for the remainder in excess of one hundred dollars, or it would issue to the railroad company up to 909 the next one hundred dollars, and then collect from it the difference between the amount of stock so issued and the actual amount paid in by the company on the purchase in question. As to taxes, insurance and other fixed charges, paid at the time of the acquisition of the lands, they were charged direct to the railroad company interested in each particular purchase, and stock issued therefor, but as to taxes, insurance and other fixed charges accruing after the title was taken by the Central Company, the evidence is somewhat confusing, though, in many instances, these amounts were paid out of the funds in the Central Company treasury, and charged to profit and loss, as is claimed by respondent.

The financial resources of the Central Company were derived from the amounts received from the Gulf, Belt and Air Line Companies on account of land purchases by these roads, and for which the Central Company stock was issued, as herein stated, and, also, from the rents and sales of buildings on the properties purchased by it with the funds supplied by said companies. The Trust Company, however, contends that the income from rents and sales of properties went into the common treasury of the Central Company, and was disbursed by it for general purposes, and applied to the payment of expenses of all the real estate, without any discrimination, and, in proof of such contention, relies on the testimony of expert accountant Francis A. Wright, which tends strongly to such conclusion. Another source of income was about $16,000.00, which was realized by the Central Company on its note executed on December 18, 1896, to the Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company, and secured by mortgage on real estate purchase No. 6, which said Wright states is the only purchase listed as Gulf property on the Central Company ledger (Rec. Vol. 54-33063-'067), and, which mortgage upon its maturity, was purchased by the Southern Company, and is now owned and held by it and stands unreleased on the record. (Rec. Vol. 53-32360). The Trust Company insists that the holding of this mortgage by intervenor is wholly inconsistent with its claim that the Central Company should be treated as a mere form or nullity, while the intervenor suggests that, in as much as said notes were indorsed by the Gulf Company (Rec. Vol. 18-9537 to 9566), such fact is indicative of the existence of a greater interest in the Gulf at that time in said real estate purchase No. 6, than that of a mere stockholder, who does not ordinarily feel called upon to make himself personally responsible for such large corporate liability; in other words, that, instead of being against it, the 910 $16,000.00 mortgage transaction tends strongly to support the intervenor's theory that the Central Company was a mere trustee, holding the title for the Gulf Company, which was simply taking care of its own property in that transaction, as it should have done, in view of the alleged trust relation existing between it and the Central Company.

It appears from the testimony of expert accountant Johnson (Vol. 21-10713 to 10718) that the total amount advanced by the Belt, Gulf and Air Line Companies, direct to the vendors of the properties purchased and conveyed to the Central Company, or to the Central Company itself, on account thereof, is as follows:

Belt Company	$129,571.50
Air Line	16,104.41
Gulf Company	23,673.89
Making a total of.....	$169,349.60

To this should be added the sum of $18,502.90, paid by the Southern Company in order to protect real estate purchase No. 6, and thereby making a total amount paid by all of said companies, including the Southern, of $187,852.50, and all of which came from said railroad companies, or from rentals received from the properties purchased, or from sales of buildings upon said properties.

It also appears from said Johnson's statement that the Belt item of $129,571.30, included $10,327.00, paid by the Kansas City Terminal Construction Company on account of the Belt railroad; and further, that the total payments made by the Belt, Gulf and Air Line Companies direct to parties, from whom the properties were bought, or to their agents, were $46,961.68, by the Belt Company, $6,204.41 by the Air Line Company, and $19,002.90 by the Gulf Company, making a total of $72,168.99, so paid direct to the vendors of the properties purchased; and further, that the amount, advanced by these same companies, as shown by Central Company's cash book, is $115.683.51, which, added to said $72,168.99, totals $187,852.50, the full amount paid by said companies, as above stated; and it further appears by said Johnson's statement that the actual cost of all said properties was $173,863.67, and, that the difference of $13,988.83 (in excess of actual cost) was used in paying the expenses of the Central Company, and taxes, excepting about $228.00, turned over to the receiver of the Central Company, but since then, several tracts of land have been sold and the proceeds thereof used by the receiver of the Central Company in paying taxes and other fixed charges, including his fees, as will be hereinafter shown.

911 The Air Line ceased making advancements to the Central Company, after December 23, 1897, and, thereafter, the payments, on account of Air Line properties, were made by the Belt Company (Vol. 21-10719); and the Belt Company, also, responded for the Union Company (Vol. 55-33030).

For funds, supplied by the Belt, Air Line and Gulf Companies, in connection with real estate purchases, the Central Company issued to them its stock, from time to time, until finally their holdings of Central stock aggregated as follows:

Belt Company, 817 shares; Gulf Company, 234 shares; Union Company, 334 shares; Air Line, 22 shares; making a total of 1407 shares. Ten shares were also issued to A. E. Stilwell, but it does not appear that the Central Company received any consideration therefor. The Trust Company, as trustee, holds 58 shares of Central stock, and in which it disclaims any interest. It also holds and claims 1120 shares of Central stock, pledged to it as collateral security by the Belt Company, in connection with other like securities, as has hereinbefore been fully stated, in respect to the pledging thereof for the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company (Rec. Vol. 18-9215-9262).

Nature and Conduct of Central Company's Business.

2. For the purpose of giving the Court a clearer idea of the objects intended to be accomplished by the conveyance of properties to the Central Company, it is thought best to call special attention to the statements of the persons at that time directly concerned in the acquisition of the properties claimed by the intervenor; and then, also, refer to certain communications between the Central, Trust and Belt Companies, in respect to the manner of conducting the business of buying and paying for lands acquired by the Central Company.

The statements of Frank B. Wilcox, E. L. Martin and J. H. Pickering, concerning Central Company matters, are given because of their special familiarity with the relations existing between the Central, Belt and Trust Companies.

Frank B. Wilcox, a former officer of the Trust Company, stated in substance that, in furtherance of the general policy of the Trust Company, in respect to developing the natural resources, locating townsites and creating business enterprises in connection with the Belt and Gulf systems, various companies were organized, and controlled mainly by the same men who were officers of the Trust Company, and, among these companies, were the Central Company, the State Realty Company, and the Second Street Improvement Company, all of which followed out the general policy of 912 the Trust Company in their organization, and were regarded as subsidiary companies, the Central Company, and the Second Street Improvement Company, being engaged in purchasing lots and lands for railway purposes, and for business purposes, adjacent to said railroads. (Rec. 34-17999-18001).

The books of the Central Company were kept in the office of the Trust Company, and the clerical work was done by the Trust Company clerks. (Rec. 34-18010-18011).

The reason for the organization of the Central Company was to provide the means, in the form of a corporation, by which properties could be acquired for the railway corporations, in which the Trust Company was interested, and to thereby enable them to acquire lands for rights-of-way or other purposes in connection with the railway uses, and for which the stock of the Central Company, representing the investment would be issued, it being intended that through this process the after acquirement clause of the mortgage, securing the railroad companies' bonds might be overcome, and these properties not pass directly under the mortgages already created, but leave the properties clear of those mortgages. (Rec. 34-18038-18039).

E. L. Martin testified, in part, that the Central Company was organized for the purpose of taking title to lands lying along the road of the Suburban Belt. In some instances, the Belt road had to buy more land that was then actually needed for its own railroad uses, and, in order to reserve that part, which was not so needed for railroad purposes, it became necessary to place it in the name of some other person or corporation than that owning the railroad, so that such reserved portion would not be held under or subject to the general railroad mortgage, and the Central Improvement Company was organized to hold the title to such properties. (Rec. pp. 32829-32830).

In some cases, part of the lands purchased was for the future use of the railroad; and other lands were bought because frequently the whole tract could be purchased on better terms than to force the railroad right-of-way through it, thereby leaving the remainder of such land to be sold to some industry at a profit, and, without being incumbered with the railroad mortgage, which might have prevented a sale, if such property had been conveyed direct to the railroad company, and an opportunity had arisen to sell the same.

If it had not been for the railroad mortgage the land would have been conveyed to the railroads. (Rec. 53-32831).

913 The Central Company was incorporated for the purpose of taking titles to properties, running along and adjoining the railroads, and, of buying rights-of-way for them. One of the purposes of handling these transactions through the Central Company, was to prevent the properties, purchased for right-of-way and switch purposes, from coming under the after-acquired clause of the railroad mortgage, and, so that the portion not needed for right-of-way could be disposed of, and, the sale thereof not be hindered by reason of the railroad mortgages. The lands, the titles to which were taken in the name of the Central Company, were situated in and about Kansas City, and along the Belt, Union Terminal, Consolidated Terminal, and Air Line and Gulf; and, in cases where more land was bought than was actually needed for the then present requirements of the right-of-way, it was the intention to hold it, if desired, to use for additional terminal facilities, or for such other future uses, as might be necessitated by the growth of the railroad. The properties were acquired by and conveyed to the Central Company with moneys, furnished and provided by the Belt, Air Line and Gulf, and, upon his (Martin's) recommendation, as an officer of all said railroads, including the Union Terminal. At the time he recommended these purchases of property by the Central Improvement Company, it was his opinion that they were required by, or useful to, the particular railroad company which he represented in each purchase. It was his recollection that no properties were purchased with the Belt money, except upon his recommendation as President of the Belt. The right-of-way was secured expressly for the railroad, and the balance of the purchase was for such disposition as might be needed for the future requirements of the road. (Rec. 55, pp. 33655-33661).

The 1120 shares of Central Company stock represented and covered real estate purchased for the use of the Suburban Belt Railroad Company, part of which is clear, and part of which has mortgages upon it for part of the original purchase price. (Rec. 55, pp. 33699-33700).

The Trust Company had nothing to do with the Central Company and the Second Street Improvement Company, further than to organize them, and find subscribers to their stock. (Rec. 55-33761).

James H. Pickering, in part, testified that he became General Superintendent of the Belt in 1892, continuing as such until March, 1899, (Rec. 35, pp. 18581-2), and that, after he became connected with the Belt Company, he was instrumental in urging the acquire-914 ment of certain lands for yards, side tracks and rights-of-way, in connection with the Union Terminal, the Belt and the Consolidated Terminal railroads, the terminal facilities, including ample switching yards and side tracks, being absolutely necessary to railroads like the Belt and its allied lines. Railroad companies, after having projected their lines, frequently find that the values of properties along it which are desired for terminal facilities and switching yards, have become greatly increased. (Rec. 35, pp. 18689-18690).

The usual width of a right of way is one hundred feet, though the least economical right of way for roads, such as the Belt and its allied lines, fifty feet. (Rec. 35, pp. 18705-6).

The Union Terminal, Consolidated Terminal, Belt and Air Line are all single track roads, except the Belt, which is a double track, and spurs and sidings and switch yards are especially important for single track railroads. In order to have switches for passing tracks, there must be additional grounds than the mere right of way; and switches play an important part on roads like the Union Terminal and Consolidated Terminal, and add greatly to the economy in handling cars and are essentially necessary.

It is absolutely necessary that proper side tracks and terminal yards should be furnished in order to handle the business of any railroad, and particularly the Belt lines. Railroads acquiring properly for yards and such as that always buy for future requirements.

They always purchase more ground than they absolutely need at the time the purchase is made. That is the invariable custom of all new roads. That is the policy pursued, and it is a good business policy. (Rec. 35, pp. 18829 to 18832.)

The following letters and other memoranda tend to throw light upon and explain the nature of the Central Company transactions with the Belt and other companies.

As to the purpose of the Central Improvement Company, see letter of C. A. Braley, (at that time a director of the Central Company, and attorney for the Trust Company), dated April 19, 1895, and addressed to State Realty Company, wherein is the following recital:

"The Central Improvement Company has now been incorporated for the purpose of taking title to all of such tracts of land and reimbursing you through the Suburban Belt for all moneys expended in reference to such purchases for the benefit of said Railroad Company." (Vol. 21-10745).

Neal S. Doran, auditor of the Belt Company, in his letter (Rec. 55-33199), says "The total capital stock of the Central Im-915 provement Company is 2000 shares. This company is authorized to secure property for the Suburban Belt, the Union Terminal, the Air Line and the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroads."

In the letter of Auditor Doran to Willey, auditor of the Trust Company, December 6, 1899, appearing in Rec. 55-34046, he says that, in compliance with Willey's request, he inclosed certain statements, a portion of the latter being "statement of real estate, title to which is in the name of the Central Improvement Company, and purchased by them for the use of the Union Terminal R. R. and the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and the Kansas City & Independence Air Line. The interest of the Kansas City Sub. Belt. R. R. in these properties is represented by 1153 shares of Central Improvement Co. stock purchased."

The letter of Trimble & Braley, attorneys for the Trust Company, (Rec. 32-17068), in respect to one of the Central Improvement Company's purchases, is attached to Belt voucher in Rec. 32-17069, and by reference thereto, it will be seen that this purchase of property was by the Belt Company charged to right of way of the Union Terminal Railroad Company. The Belt Journal voucher (in Rec. 32-17144), shows that the moneys advanced the Central Company are charged by Belt Company to right-of-way the body of the voucher being as follows:

"Kansas City Suburban Belt R. R. Journal Voucher.

Right of way real estate represented.

By capital stock of Central Imp. Co. March 31, 1898: For 795 shares of the capital stock of the Central Improvement Company, owned by this Company on March 31st.	To stocks and bonds owned. $79,500.00	$79,500.00

The ownership of this stock represents right of ways lands, and lands adjacent to our right of way, occupied by this Company. As this is practically a part of the cost of road, the above account is opened to show it as such."

In the connection, see letter of Nolthenius, vice president of the Trust Company, to Doran, auditor of Belt, Belt Company voucher, based upon said letter, appearing in Rec. 32, pp. 17146-47, wherein it is shown that the Belt Company made payment of $800 to the Clerk of the Circuit Court in condemnation proceedings on lands of the Union Elevator Company, (this being on real estate purchase No. 27). By reference to the Belt voucher, it will be seen that 916 this expenditure was charged by the Belt Company to its right of way.

In the letter to said Doran by Nolthenius, treasurer of Central Improvement Company, and Belt voucher (Rec. 32-17170-'71), it appears that, in connection with real estate purchase No. 30, the costs of that property, as shown by the Belt Company on account of the same, was $813.86, and, by reference to the voucher thereto attached, $493.53 of this amount was charged to right-of-way, and the balance was charged to taxes, *sus*pense, etc.

As shown by the testimony in Rec. 25-13377, R. J. McCarty, auditor of the Belt Company, on April 3, 1900, gave a receipt to the Trust Company for the Central Improvement Company's books.

Wright's statement concerning Central Improvement Company:

In the testimony of Accountant Wright, the following statements are made, in respect to the Central Improvement Company: That the Central Company paid no salary of any kind to its officers or clerks (Rec. 54-32965); that money was paid by the railroad companies for taxes and interest on Central Company property, but no Central Company stock was issued therefor; that the Belt Company paid more money to the Central Company than it had stock issued for the same, that is, the Belt Company paid money to the Central Company for taxes and other exepnses, for which the Belt Company was credited by the Central Company, but the same was charged to the account of interest and taxes (Rec. 54-32930-'31, 32938 and 33289).

In Central Company voucher (Rec. 54-32373), is shown the payment by Belt Company to Central Company of $2,665.21, for which only $1,600 of Central stock was issued, the balance being taken up by the taxes and interest paid by the railroad company. In Rec. 54-33374-'75, there is a letter from Hastings, assistant treasurer of the Central Company, calling for $74.14 for payment of taxes upon real estate purchase No. 10, and a Belt voucher, showing this amount charged by Belt Company to accrued taxes; and in Rec. 54-33376 to 33382 inclusive, there are shown letters of Barnhart, tax commissioner, and of Hastings, assistant treasurer of the Central Company, wherein is listed the Central Company "property, held in trust for the K. C. Sub. Belt R. R." and showing a call by Hastings upon the Belt for $318.67 and $504.13 for taxes upon certain Central Company real estate therein mentioned; and it will be seen that the Belt voucher, at page 33382, charged to 917 "Accrued Taxes" the total amount of this payment of $822.80 made to the Central Company. Johnson's statement (Rec. 18-9217 to 9244) shows that the Central Company from its inception to March 23, 1900, received but $974.26 in rents, none of it coming from the railroads, for the use of a certain Central Improvement Company property; and, as shown by Wright's testimony (Rec. 54-33084) there is no evidence of the railroad companies involved ever paying the Central Improvement Company any rent for the use of the properties standing in the name of the Central Company.

Real Estate Purchases Nos. 1 to 30, inclusive, and "A" and "B".

3. The intervenor's claim, as the purchaser at the foreclosure sales, is based, principally, upon the proposition that all these properties were necessary for the use and operation of the railroads, for which they were respectively bought, and that, under the circumstances shown in evidence, each property came under the after acquired property clause of the general mortgage executed by the railroad interested in that property. It became important, then, to state the facts as to each purchase for the purpose of ascertaining whether it is or is not covered by any of the general railroad mortgages in controversy, and under which the intervenor claims title.

These facts must come almost entirely from two witnesses, the said James H. Pickering, and George C. Ward. Their testimony on this subject covers several volumes of the record, and to which are attached blueprints, showing locations of the different tracts of land; the title to those shown in yellow being still standing in name of Central Company, while those tracts shown in red have passed out of the Central Company.

Witness Ward was tax collector for the Southern Company, and prepared a deed record for the Gulf road from Kansas City to Port Arthur, and, also, as to all the terminal properties; and having examined the records with reference to all the various tracts in [troversy,], stated he was familiar with the titles to all said properties (Rec. Vol. 25-13276-'7). For convenience, these properties are herein referred to as "Real Estate Purchase No. 1", etc., to avoid lengthy descriptions, which can readily be had, if desired, by reference to the records, cited in respect to each tract.

In the following statements, in reference to the testimony of Pickering and Ward, the intention is merely to give the effect, or substance, and not the full statements of the witnesses.

Real Estate Purchase Number 1.

918 For map showing Purchase No. 1, see blue print, Rec. 25-13299-a. Pickering testified that purchase No. 1 is on a switch from the main line, extending on First Street towards Central Avenue some distance from Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Packing House; that he built the railroad track which runs up over purchase No. 1, and that Purchase No. 1 is on the Union Terminal and is convenient for team track advantages, and team tracks are very important in connection with the Union Terminal road (Rec. 35-18690-1-2); that the whole spur on Tract No. 1 is used for an unloading track, there being a demand therefor, and it became necessary to accommodate certain business that had been offered to the road; that Tract No. 1 is excellently located for additional team tracks to be built upon it (Rec. 35-18839-'40).

Ward testified that purchase No. 1 stands in the name of the Central Company, (Rec. 25-13279).

Real Estate Purchase No. 2.

For map showing Purchase No. 2, see blue print, page 13299-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that he urged the purchasing of the tract, called Real Estate Purchase No. 2, for switching yards, which were needed for switching facilities in Kansas; that two tracks were built upon this land and were used for switching and storing cars, the tract being necessary for the economical handling of cars, and absolutely necessary to the railroad as it existed at that time, and also at the time he testified (Rec. 35-18692-'3); that at the time this tract of land was purchased, he didn't expect to at once fill the entire tract with railroad tracks, but intended to use as much as was necessary, with the idea that, in the future, additional tracks would have to be put there, and that, from an economical standpoint of railroading, he considered this tract to be absolutely necessary and indispensible to the operation of the Union Terminal railroad, its present and future necessities, and for that reason advised the purchase of it (Rec. 35-18697); that tract No. 2 is of such a character that it could only be used for railroad tracks, spurs or switches (Rec. 35-18695), and, with industries along the ground, such as factories and the like, which would have to be reached, he thought this purchase No. 2 was advisable for the handling of cars and switching tracks to such industries, etc.; that the tract was not purchased for the purpose of locating factories on it, but for the purpose of placing tracks on it for switching purposes (Rec. 35-18807-8-9).

919 Ward testified that Real Estate Purchase No. 2 stands in the name of the Central Company (Rec. 25-13279), and lies along the right of way of the Union Terminal and adjoins it (Rec. 25-13299).

Real Estate Purchase Number 3.

For map showing Purchase No. 3, see blue print, page 13308 Record 25.

Pickering testified that Purchase No. 3 is the approach into the Schwarzschild & Sulzberger plant, and the purchase was absolutely necessary to enable the Union Terminal road to obtain a connection with Schwarzschild & Sulzberger; that he built the tracks upon this tract, which tracks required only a part of the whole tract but it was found to be more economical to purchase the entire tract of land, as the balance of it, not so used for the track to said plant, is of such a character that it could only be used for railroad purposes, spurs or switches (Rec. 35-18694-'5); that tract No. 3 is absolutely necessary and indispensable to the Belt railroad, is cut off on both sides by railroad tracks and could not, for that reason, be used for business industries or factories (Rec. 35-18809-'10, and 18697).

Ward testified that Purchase No. 3 stands in the name of the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13279), and adjoins the right of way on the main track of the Belt road, and has a spur into the Schwarzschild and Sulzberger packing house (Rec. 25-13300).

Real Estate Purchase No. 4.

For map showing Purchase No. 6, see blueprint, page 13305-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that he urged the acquisition of Real Estate Purchase No. 4, as being necessary for the Union Terminal railroad because needed for tracks and for economical handling of its business, and it was so situated as to be an ideal location for railroad yards, and for which purpose it was purchased; that he built tracks upon this tract, and, the Santa Fe yards being just south of it, the transfer of cars from the Santa Fe yards could be switched to this before being taken east for distribution; that, in his judgment, this tract is a desirable and necessary property for the Belt road and its allied lines, and it was economical railroading to acquire it (Rec. 35-18695-'6-'7); that at the time of its purchase, it was not intended to build railroad tracks over the entire tract at that time, but 920 it was thought that the growth of the railroad company's business which might reasonably be expected, would be such as to require additional tracks to handle such business in the future a large part coming from the Santa Fe, and that he regarded this tract as necessary for the construction of the tracks, which — would require for switching purposes, and, for that reason, he advised its purchase (Rec. 35-18695, 18810, to 14).

Ward testified that Purchase No. 4 stands in the name of the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13279); that it is at the end of the Union Terminal in Argentine, has a connection with the Santa Fe track, and lies between the main line of the Union Terminal and the spur that connects with the Santa Fe (Rec. 25-13301).

Real Estate Purchase Number 5.

For map showing Purchase No. 5, see blue print, page 13302-a, Record 25. This tract of land has been disposed of.

Pickering testified that there was a switch track known as "Commercial" switch, run down through tract No. 5, in the East Bottoms, to accommodate a paper mill, which was afterwards burned down, or was moved away. (Rec. 35-18813-'14.)

Ward testified that this tract No. 5, has been sold by the Central Improvement Company to the Heim Brewery Company (Rec. 25-13279).

Real Estate Purchase Number 6.

For map showing Purchase No. 6, see blueprint, page 13305-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that he urged that this tract be acquired for the purpose of getting connections with the Union Pacific and Wabash roads, and that he built the connections running down to those roads; that a freight house was put on this land for the use of the Frisco Road under a contract made by the Belt to build such freight house for the Frisco which used the track for loading and unloading its merchandise, and the balance of the ground was used for the approaches to the freight house, and for teams to load, and unload upon this track No. 6; that there was a great volume of business done there, and this tract of land was, at the time it was purchased, and is now, absolutely necessary for the operation of the road (Rec. 35-18697-'99).

Ward testified that the title to tract No. 6, stands in the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13280) and that the main line of the Belt passes through this tract of land, and there is, also, 921 a connecting track from the Belt running on Santa Fe Street to the connection with the Wabash, Santa Fe and Union Pacific roads, and has a freight depot or shed on it (Rec. 25-13304).

Real Estate Purchase Number 7.

Johnson's testimony in Record 19, pages 9616-9625, shows that the title to this tract was taken in the Central Company by error, and that the land was afterwards transferred to the Trust Company.

Ward testified that the title was taken in the name of the Trust Company originally, but that it was afterwards put on the books of the Central Improvement Company by error (Rec. 25-13280).

Real Estate Purchase Numbers 8, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

For map showing purchases Nos. 8, 14, 15, 16, and 17, see blue print, page 13308-a, Record 25. Title to all these properties, comprising 57 acres, has passed from Central Improvement Company to J. P. Kerr (Rec. 25-13280-'87), by order of this court, and since this action was instituted.

Pickering testified that the object of having Fairmount Park was to create traffic, for the Belt and the Air Line, and that the park did create a very heavy passenger traffic during the summer months (Rec. 35-18770-1-2-3-4).

These purchases constitute a part of Fairmount Park (Rec. 25-13280-'87, and blue print, page 13308-a).

Real Estate Purchase Number 9.

For a map showing purchase No. 9, see blue print, page 13306-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that, after Real Estate Purchase No. 9, was acquired, some tracks were constructed on it, the spur, marked "YY", running to an elevator, and to another industry on Owen Avenue; that the spur on this tract was built by him, and, at the time he left the railroad, and at the present time, this tract of land was absolutely necessary and indispensable to the railroad for the operation of the road (Rec. 35-18700-'1).

Ward testified that the title to tract No. 9 is in the name of Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13280), and that a spur track runs through it (Rec. 25-13306).

Real Estate Purchase Number 10.

For map showing Purchase No. 10, see blue print, page 13306-a, Record 25.

922 Pickering testified that, as to Purchase No. 10, track "YY", running through it is the Missouri Pacific connection with the Belt, also connection with one or two industries located on the track and the main line of the Belt runs through this tract of land; that he built two spurs on the river bottom there on this tract No. 10, because they were necessary, and that portion of Tract No. 10, marked "River' is of such a nature that, if it was filled and brought to a level of the track, it could be used for switches, and this land when filled, would become valuable for switching purposes; that this whole track No. 10 is valuable for additional tracks, and is so located that its ownership is necessary for the economical operation of the Belt and its allied lines, and, it was and is absolutely indispensable in the light of economical railroading, that this tract should have been acquired and held by the Belt for such tracks and spurs as might be needed (Rec. 35-18701-2-3), and that, if that portion of it, lying towards the river, had been filled, he would have built additional tracks on it that this tract No. 10, is of such a nature and size that it can be used to great advantage for storage tracks, side tracks, switches or spurs (Rec. 35-18703-'4).

Ward testified that the title to Purchase No. 10 is in the name of the Central Improvement Company, subject to the reservations of one hundred foot right of way of the Kansas City Suburban Belt (Rec. 25-13280 and 13306), which now runs through it.

Real Estate Purchase Number 11.

For may showing Purchase No. 11, see blue print, page 13307-a, Record 25.

Pickering Testified that he was and is acquainted with the location of the lots, representing Purchase No. 11, and that it was economical railroading to acquire the entire lots, instead of the bare right-of-way, in as much as the Union Terminal railroad runs diagonally across them; that one hundred feet is the usual width of right-of-way, though fifty feet would be the least economical width right-of-way, and, that the property included in this Purchase No.

11, is absolutely necessary for the operation of the Union Terminal Railroad (Rec. 35-18705-'6).

NOTE.—By reference to the scale of measurement on the blue prints, showing Purchase No. 11 (Rec. 25-13307-a, b and c,) it will be seen that, in order to have the usual width of right-of-way of one hundred feet the entire lots covered by Purchase No. 11, would be taken in. The scale is one inch to one hundred and fifty feet, and there is no point on this Purchase No. 11, where a full width 923 right-of-way of one hundred feet would not take in all of the lots, represented by Purchase No. 11, with the possible exception of a very small portion of the lots set out on page 13307-a.

Ward testified that the portion of Purchase No. 11, lying south and west, of the Union Terminal right-of-way, of lots 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, in Loomis' Riverside Addition to Kansas City, Kansas, was sold to August Uihlein, on April 4, 1904, by T. T. Crittenden, receiver of Central Company, for $2,500.00, and the balance of it stands in the name of Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13280-'1, 13307).

The description of the portion sold of Tract No. 11 is found in the copy of receiver's deed, made under the order of this Court, and appearing in record 25, pp. 13282-'6, inclusive.

Real Estate Purchase Numbers 12 and 13.

For map showing Purchase Nos. 12 and 13, see blue print page 13305-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that the right of way of the old Consolidated Terminal passes over the south ends of Purchases 12 and 13, which lots run down in the direction of the river and are below the grade of the Consolidated Terminal road, which is 50 feet above the river, though if a double track should be desired or needed, these lots could be used on which to build it (Rec. 35-18707-18709).

NOTE.—The usual width of right-of-way, as heretofore testified to by withess Pickering, will take in practically the full depth of these lots, and the intervenors feel that the situation of tract 12 and 13 is such that they should be entitled to the entire tract of land.

Ward testified that the title to tracks Nos. 12 and 13 stands in the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13287), and that the main line of the Belt runs through them (Rec. 25-13304).

Real Estate Purchase Number 18.

It appears from Johnson's testimony (Rec. 20, pp. 10145 and 10198) that the title to this tract is in the State Realty Company by tax deed.

Ward testified that the principal part of Purchase 18 is in the name of Belt Railroad Company by sheriff's deed by order of court, and that it was never in the name of Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13287-'8). The title, not being in the Central Company, the property is not involved in this cause.

Real Estate Purchase Number 19.

924 From Johnson's testimony (Rec. 20, pp. 10198 to 10223, and 10219), it appears that the title to this property was conveyed by the Central Company to the Belt Company, which apparently owns it, and hence, this property is not involved in this cause.

Real Estate Purchase Number 20.

For map showing Purchase No. 20, see blue print, page 13309-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that if a depot should be located on tract No. 20, the whole of it was necessary, the point in question being a very desirable one for a depot, and, that in acquiring ground for depot purposes, there ought to be sufficient ground secured, as it would not be good policy to acquire a small amount when a sufficient amount could be acquired at a low price; that, at the point in question, a large piece of land should be acquired, such as Tract No. 20, which is no more than would be necessary in view of the location of the depot (Rec. 35-18837-'38-'39).

Ward testified that this Purchase No. 20 is in the name of Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13288), lies just west of the Belt right-of-way (Rec. 25-13309), and that there is a little depot there, about half way (Rec. 25-13317-'18).

Real Estate Purchase Number 21.

For a map showing Purchase No. 21, see blue print, page 13305-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that a part of the freight house at Second and Wyandotte, and of the terminal tracks, is located upon this tract No. 21, this land being also used for team tracks and for loading and unloading freight; that he was and is acquainted with the terminal facilities at Second and Wyandotte, and that this tract was absolutely necessary and indispensable to the railroad (Rec. 35-18709-'10).

Ward testified that the Central Company has title to an undivided one-half of that tract, and the Belt Company has a deed to the other undivided half of the lot (Rec. 25-13288); and that the freight house, and one of the tracts running into it, are located on this tract, which lies north of the Grand Central Depot, the space around it being used for tracks and terminals at the depot (Rec. 25-13305).

Real Estate Purchase Numbers 22 and 23.

For a map showing Purchases Nos. 22 and 23, see blue print page 13305-a, Record 25.

925 Pickering testified that the Main line of the Union Terminal, or the old Consolidated Terminal, runs through Purchases 22 and 23, and there are one or two spur tracks located upon them, which tracks he built because they were necessary team tracks; that a team track is used for loading and unloading freight, and that portion of tracts 22 and 23, not covered by railroad tracks, is used for an approach by the teams to the cars for the purpose of loading and unloading them, and both said tracts 22 and 23 are absolutely necessary for the railroad purposes of the Belt and allied lines (Rec. 35-18710-'11); and, that said tracts are used by the main line and team tracks located thereon, and also as an approach for the team tracks (Rec. 35-18822).

Ward testified that a part of this tract has been sold, the description of the sold portion being set out in deed (Rec. 25-13290-'2); and that the deed was made on October 26, 1896, by the Central Company, and conveys all that portion of this purchase that lies north of the Belt right-of-way, and the remainder of the two tracts, Nos. 22 and 23, is in the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13293).

Real Estate Purchase Number 24.

For a map showing Purchase No. 24, see blue print, page 13305-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that tract 24 was purchased, in order to get a switch into the yards, a switch being constructed at that point, and that the ground was absolutely necessary to get an approach to the yards, the leads, and that he built the lead tracks, indicated by the white lines shown on this tract 24; and further, that the portion of the tract, not already covered by these leads, could be used for additional leads, and, that the acquisition of tract 24 was absolutely necessary to utilize the yards there (Rec. 25-18711-'12).

By reference to the map, showing Purchase 24, at page 13305-a, it will be seen that the same leads and tracks cover it now as testified to by the witness Pickering, being right in the heart of the present Kansas City Southern.

Ward testified that purchase No. 24 stands in the name of the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13293), and, lying adjacent to the right of way of the Belt, has some of the lead tracks into the Santa Fe yards—the freight yards (Rec. 25-13303-'4).

Real Estate Purchase Number 25.

926 For a map showing Purchase No. 25, see blue print, page 13305-a, Record 25. This property has been disposed of.

Ward testified that this tract, having been foreclosed by the Trust Company, the title does not stand in the name of the Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13293).

Real Estate Purchase Number 26.

From Johnson's testimony (Rec. 20-10499 to 10523), it appears that the title to this property is in the Belt Company; and hence that this tract is not in controversy in this cause.

Real Estate Purchase Number 27.

For a map showing Purchase No. 27, see blue print, page 13305-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that a part of the freight house, located on said purchase or tract No. 6, is built upon tract No. 27, which became necessary in order to build a freight house of sufficient size, and, that the portion of tract No. 27, not occupied by the freight house, is used for an approach to the freight house and a platform for the approach of teams; and this tract of land was and is absolutely necessary to the operation of the railroad (Rec. 35-18699-18700).

Ward testified that the title to this tract is in Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13293).

Real Estate Purchase No. 28.

It appears from the testimony of Johnson (Rec. 20-10600 to 10-610) and of Ward, (Rec. 25-13293), that the title to this property was taken in the name of the Belt Company.

Real Estate Purchase Number 29.

For a map showing Purchase No. 29, see blue print, page 13306-a, Record 25.

Pickering testified that Purchase No. 29 is of such a nature that, if filled and brought to a level of the main line of the Belt, it could be used advantageously in connection with No. 10, for building sidings and spurs, and that it would be economical railroading to have the ownership of tracts numbered 29 and 10; that a spur track was built out on purchase No. 29 under his supervision, two tracks were there, and he would have built more if the balance of tract 29 had not been in the river, there being just enough room for the two tracks, and, if that portion of tracks 29 and 10 in the river had been filled, it would have been needed for additional tracks; and he would have built such additional tracks (Rec. 35-18702-'3).

927 Ward testified that the title to this tract stands in the name of Central Improvement Company (Rec. 25-13293); and that the right-of-way of the Belt runs through this tract 29 (Rec. 25-13306).

Real Estate Purchase No. 30.

For a map showing purchase No. 30, see blue print, page 13310-a, Record 25.

Title to this tract has passed from Central Improvement Company, by deed executed by T. T. Crittenden, Receiver, on May 16, 1903, for a consideration of $1.00 and payment of taxes and assessments against the property (Rec. 25-13294).

Real Estate Purchases "A" and "B".

As to Purchases "A" and "B," appearing on Ward's Exhibit 5, in Record 25, page 13305-a, witness Pickering says that they were absolutely necessary in the operation of the Consolidated Terminal or Belt road, for switch yard purposes down there, and that the plat shows that the ground was covered solidly with tracks, in fact all the tracks that could be placed upon it; and that switch yards are located upon said tracks, which were needed to accommodate such yards in the proper operation of the railroad (Rec. 35, pp. 18819 to 18821, and 18834-'35).

The master, for his findings, adopts the statements of witness

Pickering, in respect to the utility and necessity of said tracts of land for the railroads adjoining or contiguous to which they are situated; in other words, he finds that the titles to the following tracts should be vested by a decree in the Southern Company, to-wit:

Real Estate purchases No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, No. 6, No. 9, No. 10, the unsold part of No. 11, Nos. 12 and 13, No. 20, an undivided half of No. 21, Nos. 22 and 23, No. 24, No. 27, No. 29, and real estate purchases "A" and "B".

It has been conclusively shown by the proofs in this cause that each real estate purchase was made at the direction of the railroad company interested in such purchase, and not by the directors of the common interests of all the stockholders alike, as should have been done in case all such stockholders were intended to be interested alike in each and all of the purchases so made.

It has been suggested by counsel for the defendant that there are discrepancies in book-keeping, which do not at all times indicate that the exact amount of money required for each purchase 928 was furnished by the particular road alleged to be interested in such purchase. It would seem that, though such be the case in some rare instances, yet that fact should not militate against the principle involved in this controversy, and that is, that each road interested in these respective tracts of lands indicated what it desired the Central Company to buy, how much was to be paid for the tract bought, and generally arranged the details of such purchase. It is shown by the foregoing facts that the object in placing the titles to these properties in the Central Company was to avoid the effect of the general mortgages executed by these different railroads upon their properties then owned, and thereafter to be acquired. These properties in controversy were acquired subsequently to the execution of these mortgages, and it was unquestionably the effort of these different railroad companies to place the titles to these properties in the Central Company, so as to avoid the operation of the general mortgage upon their properties, and one object in doing so was unquestionably to have these properties so that any surplus, not then actually needed for railroad purposes, could be sold to an advantage, and the money realized therefrom go to the railroad companies, respectively, rather than be held for the satisfaction of the general mortgage indebtedness.

Francis A. Wright, the principal accountant for the defendant, in his cross-examination, admits that whenever money was received by the Central Company, the railroad supplying or paying it was credited accordingly on the Central books, and that such credit was likewise made when moneys were paid for taxes or interest, though sometimes carried to the interest on tax account, and in that way, no stock would be issued for such items of payments (Rec. 54-33028); and further, that when calls were made, from time to time, to pay interest or taxes, they were always made upon the company which, according to the "heading" in the company's ledger, was interested in such property (Rec. 54-33029).

Counsel for defendants have suggested that after the various railroad companies acquired the Central Company stock, they bought and sold such stock to each other, and call attention to an instance where the Gulf Company purchased from the Belt Company at par, 40 shares of Central Company stock, and paid the Belt Company $4000.00 in cash therefor (Rec. 53-32280). Mr. Wright, however, explains that transaction in a very satisfactory manner, as appears in his testimony (Rec. 54-33033 to 33035), in which he states in substance, that the Gulf Company had $19,000.00 of stock issued to it, but, by the stock ledger of the Central Company, it is 929 shown that the Gulf had 235 shares of Central stock, or $23,500.00, par value. The Gulf Company received five shares from the Belt, and also 40 shares from the Belt, and the balance of 190 shares was issued direct to the Gulf Company; Five Hundred (500) dollars was originally advanced by the Belt upon Purchase No. 6, and later on, the Gulf refunded the amount to the Belt, thereby simply equalizing between them, and issuing stock to the right party as to this No. 6, purchase (Rec. 54-33034); and as to the 40 shares obtained from the Belt, the $4000.00 was paid by the Gulf to the Belt, (not entered on Central Company book), and thereby simply adjusting this matter as between the Gulf and the Belt Companies (Rec. 54-33033).

In this connection the defendant has cited the case of Humphreys v. McKissick, 140 U. S., 304, in which several railroad companies combined to construct an elevator to be connected with their respective roads, each to contribute an equal amount towards its cost, and each to receive corresponding certificates of stock in a corporation organized to take title to the elevator and to construct it. This arrangement was carried out. The Wabash, one of the railroads, had executed a mortgage on its railroad between certain termini, in which the following language was used: "as said railroad now is, or may be hereafter constructed, maintained, operated, or acquired, together with all the privileges, rights, franchises real estate, right of way, depots, depot grounds, side tracks, water tanks, engines, cars and other appurtenances thereunto belonging." It was contended in that case that the Wabash Company had a separable interest in the elevator property, and that it was within the lien of the Wabash mortgage, but it was finally held by the United States Supreme Court, on an appeal from the Circuit Court, that the interest of each railroad company in the elevator was as a stockholder in the company which constructed the elevator, that neither company had any separable interest in the elevator property, and that neither the stock of the elevator company, nor any interest in the elevator itself, was within the mortgage lien.

In the case of Pardee v. Aldridge, 189 U. S., 429 (also cited by defendant), it was held that where a railroad company mortgages its road, including all appurtenances and appendages of said railroad, then owned, or afterwards to be acquired, or used for and pertaining to the operation of said railroad, a sale under said mortgage does not include land acquired by the Company after the mortgage, for the purpose of re-sale, notwithstanding there was evidence that the company intended to use the land for main track, 930 sheds, and such switches and side tracks as should be necessary for the operation of the road.

Counsel for defendant have also made further citations of authorities, to the effect that a Congressional or State land grant to aid in the construction of a railroad, does not pass as an appurtenance thereto; R. R. v. Parker, 143 U. S., 43; Wilson v. Beckwith, 117 Mo., 61; nor would land purchased by the railroad for the purpose of cutting wood and timber therefrom, and to be used on the railroads; Dinsmore v. R. R., 12 Wis., 649; nor will town lots or other lands situated outside of the layout of the roadway, and purchased by the Company for re-sale, be included within the mortgage; Calhoun v. R. R., 2 Fipp. U. S., 242; R. R. v. Livermore, 47 Pa. St., 469; Seymour v. R. R., 25 Barb., N. Y., 284; nor will the mortgage include land purchased by a railway company for a general manufactory for cars, and intended for the use and accommodation of the road; Eldredge v. Smith, 34 Vt., 484.

In the judgment of the Master, these authorities do not reach the point involved in the case at bar for the reason that the proofs here show that the specific properties desired by each of the three railroad companies involved, were paid for by and with the moneys of that company, and for its purposes. There were no undivided interests, as in the elevator case, where three roads built the same elevator.

The theory upon which the conclusion of the Master is reached, is based upon the principle that the Central Company was simply used for the purpose of holding the titles to the particular properties belonging to each one of these railroads, and to all intends and purposes, it acted as a trustee, and was not a beneficial owner, the intention being, as already stated, to place these properties beyond the lien of the general railroad mortgage, which covered after acquired properties.

The proofs show that the intervenor acquired, at the foreclosure sales, all the interests of the Gulf, Air Line and Belt Companies, as to all properties legally covered and included in the mortgages foreclosed; hence it must be shown that the real estate purchases in controversy were appurtenant to the railroads, along which they are contiguous, for if they are not appurtenant, and do not come within the class of cases which would otherwise bring these properties within the lien of the general railroad mortgage, then, of course, the titles to such properties did not pass by the foreclosure sales to the intervenor, and they would still be in the Central Company, giving value to its stock.

Under the facts, the Master finds that a certain portion of said 931 properties were and are appurtenant and needful for railroad purposes, and are of such character as would come within the after acquired property clause of the mortgages.

The Belt Company pledged its Central Company stock to the Trust Company, for the purpose of securing its large indebtedness to that company, and, subject to the rights of the intervenor herein the Trust Company has the undoubted right to subject such collateral to the payment of the Belt obligations to it, in so far as it affects the properties which have not been purchased by the intervenor at such foreclosure sales.

It is the opinion of the Master, and he so finds, that the intervenor is entitled to the judgment order and decree of this court, requiring the Central Company and its receiver, to convey to said intervenor those portions of said real estate hereinbefore found to be appurtenant to said railroads, and included within the after acquired property clause of their mortgages.

IX.

Townsite Company Stocks and Lands.

In paragraph 11 of the intervening petition, the intervenor states that in connection with the contract between the Belt Company and the Connecting Company, and as a part of the obligation of the Belt thereunder to procure a right of way for the railroad of the Connecting Company, the Belt Company purchased and acquired certain lands along the line of said railroad in addition to those required for the right of way, and took the title to such other lands in a Missouri corporation called the "Northern Townsite Company", hereinafter referred to as the "Townsite Company"; that in so purchasing land for the right of way, it frequently became necessary, in the economical handling thereof, to purchase larger tracts than required for the purposes of the right of way, out of which the right of way would be carved, and also to purchase lands for townsites, and the title to the latter class was also taken in the name of the Townsite Company; that all of the money used in the purchasing said lands, aggregating $46,463.75, was furnished and provided by the Belt Company, excepting $6720.07, which was furnished by the Trust Company; that the capital stock of the Townsite Company to the extent of 439 shares was issued to the Belt Company to represent the moneys contributed by it in the purchase of said lands, the purchase of which was incidental to the construction of the railroad, and the titles to said lands (excepting such as may be held to have been purchased with moneys furnished by the Trust Company) in equity belonged to the Belt Company and were covered by the after-acquired property clause in the mortgage of the Connecting Company, which has been foreclosed and by virtue of which foreclosure the intervenor 932 became vested with the title to said lands, so owned in equity by the Belt Company, and became entitled to the capital stock so issued by the Townsite Company to the Belt Company; that the Trust Company denies the right of the intervenor to said lands or the capital stock or any part thereof, and claims to hold said capital stock as collateral security to an alleged indebtedness from the Belt Company to the defendant Trust Company; wherefore, the intervenor asks for a decree, requiring the Trust Company to turn over to it all of the capital stock representing moneys advanced by the Belt Company, the cancellation of any and all capital stock of the Townsite Company issued without consideration, or the conveyance to the Belt Company of all of the properties and assets of the Townsite Company upon repayment to the Trust Company by the intervenor of the said sum of $6720.07, so advanced by it to the Townsite Company.

The Trust Company, in paragraph 11 of its answer to the intervening petition, alleges that the Townsite Company was organized by its own stockholders for the purpose of acquiring and dealing in lands along the line of the railroad of the Connecting Company, but denies that the Belt Company and the Trust Company furnished $46,463.75; but, on the contrary, states that a much smaller amount was furnished, and that the total amount furnished by the Belt Company for the purchase of said lands in which the Townsite Company had, or claimed to have, an interest, was $6286.57, and that the Belt Company received from said townsite Company 439 shares of its capital stock, of the par value of $100.00 each, on account thereof; and that the total amount furnished by the Trust Company for the purchase of said lands in which the Townsite Company had, or claimed to have an interest, was $6720.07, and that it received therefor 489 shares of the capital stock of said Townsite Company; defendant denies that in equity the lands represented by the money furnished by the Belt Company belong to it, or were covered by the after acquired property clause in the Connecting Company mortgage, or that the foreclosure proceeding vested the title to said lands, or any part of them, or of the capital stock, in the intervenor. Defendant alleges that it holds said 439 shares of the capital stock as collateral security to a bona fide indebtedness from the Belt Company to the defendant; wherefore, defendant claims that the intervenor is not entitled in law or equity to any interest or title in said land or stock, and that the same were not covered by the terms of the mortgage.

It is not controverted that it was the duty of the Belt Company, under its contract with the Connecting Company to furnish the right of way for the latter's railroad (Rec. 15, pp. 8174 to 933 8191); that the Townsite Company was organized for the purpose of acquiring this right of way, together with other real estate along the line of the railroad, or that lands, other than the right of way, were so acquired and the title taken in the name of the Townsite Company. There is a dispute, however, as to the amounts of money actually furnished and paid out by the Belt Company or the Trust Company in the purchase of these lands. The Trust Company contended that the Belt Constructing the Connecting Company road advanced $30,062.75 in payment of lands, the title to which was taken in the name of the Townsite Company, and in addition thereto paid the Townsite Company $6288.57, in part payment of Townsite Company stock, that the Trust Company also paid the Townsite Company $6720.07 in part payment of Townsite stock, and, further that the Townsite Company received $10,053.24 from various parties in payment of certain lands that had theretofore been purchased by the Belt Company and the title taken in the name of the Townsite Company, and that these amounts are the only moneys that the Townsite Company ever received from any source.

Under the issues made by the pleadings, the material inquiry here is simply as to whether or not the Belt Company, in equity, has acquired title to any part of these lands, or to the Townsite Company stock by reason of the foreclosure proceeding under the Connecting Company mortgage, or whether said Townsite Company stock, now held by the Trust Company, shall be retained by it as collateral security for its indebtedness against the Belt Company.

It is not thought necessary to encumber the record with the legal descriptions of all of the properties standing in the name of the Townsite Company at the time of the filing of its answer but a list of such properties will appear in the answer of the Townsite Company and its receivers. In Johnson's testimony (Rec. 16, p. 8443) he gives a list of the properties purchased and describes them.

A copy of the deeds of trust executed by the Belt and Consolidated Companies will be found in Rec. 21, pages 10953 to 10977 and 10978 to 11001; a Decree of Sale in Rec. 48, pages 28775 to 28809; a Commissioner's Report of Sale, Rec. 57, pages 34811 to 34832; an Order and Decree Affirming Sale, Rec. Vol. 57, pages 34833 to 34838; a Commissioners' Deed to the Southern Company, Rec. 48, pages 28877 to 28893.

The circumstances under which the Trust Company acquired said Townsite Company stock have already been stated in connection with the other collateral securities turned over to it and need not be again repeated.

934 In their argument before the Master, counsel for the complainants have endeavored to show that the Southern Company has very much the same rights to those lands held by the Townsite Company, or to its stock, as to those lands held by the Central Company but, in the judgment of the master, the difference is a very material one. There is no proof in this record that any particular parts of the funds furnished by either the Belt Company or the Trust Company went into the purchase of any specific lands; in other words, the funds furnished by the Belt Company were provided by it by reason of its contract with the Connecting Company to build the railroad belonging to that company, and it became its duty to acquire the necessary right of way for that purpose. As an incident to the purchase of such right of way, it was deemed wise to also purchase additional lands out of which to carve the right of way or to [pay] out townsites, etc.

In the discussion of the other collateral turned over to the Trust Company, and occupying relatively the same position as this Townsite Company stock, the conclusion has heretofore been reached by the master that such stocks were not included within the after-acquired property clause of the mortgages, and that same conclusion applies to this stock. Inasmuch then as the stock in controversy, was turned over by the Belt to the Trust Company as collateral security and is unaffected by the lien of the Connecting Company mortgage, it necessarily follows that the Trust Company is entitled to retain such stock for the purposes of the pledge.

The Townsite Company and its receivers, by virtue of the sale of a portion of the lands purchased, as shown in Rec. 16 at page 8443, had on hand on June 10, 1905, the sum of $10,560.48.

For the reasons above stated, the master is of the opinion and so finds, that the complainants are not entitled to a decree requiring the Trust Company to turn over said shares of the capital stock of the Townsite Company to them, or to a decree requiring the Townsite Company to make a conveyance to the Belt Company of all its properties and assets upon the payment to the Trust Company of $6720.07, so advanced by it to the Townsite Company.

X.

Amusement Company Stock; Elevator Company Stock.

The Trust Company holds as collateral 25 shares of the Amusement Company stock, and 425 shares of the Elevator Company stock, but in as much as the proofs do not show that the intervenor has any superior rights or equities to these stocks, by 935 reason of its purchases at the foreclosure sales, the Master will not take the time of the Court in making a special report upon these stock items, as in his opinion, they come within the principle that they are not included in the after acquired property clause of the foreclosed mortgages.

XI.

As to Whether the Claim of the Southern to the Properties Pledged by the Belt is Barred by the Statute of Limitations and by Laches.

1. Statute of Limitations.—It is not disputed that all of the properties pledged to the Trust Company to secure the Belt indebtedness to it, were pledged on or prior to July 20, 1899, with the exception of the steel rails, and the open account of $133,000.00 held by the Belt Company against the Gulf Company, for switching charges, and both of which items were also pledged on February 1, 1900.

It is not controverted that the first assertion of a claim by the Southern Company to any of the pledged properties, was when it filed its original intervening petition in this cause, on February 27, 1905, which was more than five years after the pledge of each and all of the different items of the collateral securities.

Sections 4271 and 4273, Revised Statutes of Missouri, 1899, which have been expressly pleaded by the Trust Company in its answer in bar of the claims of the intervenor in respect to said collateral securities, are as follows:

"Sec. 4271. Period of limitation prescribed.—Civil actions, other than those for the recovery of real property, can only be commenced within the periods prescribed in the following sections, after the causes of action shall have accrued."

"SEC. 4273. Within five years * * * fourth, an action for taking, detaining or injuring any goods or chattels, including actions, for the recovery of specific personal property, or for any other injury to the person or rights of another, not arising on contract and not herein otherwise enumerated; fifth, an action for relief on the ground of fraud, the cause of action in such case to be deemed not to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party, at any time within ten years, of the facts constituting the fraud."

The foregoing statutes of limitations are controlling in this cause.

Miles v. Vivian, 79 Fed. 848-852.
Harpending v. Dutch Church, 16 Peters, 455.

936 The cause of action, if any, of the intervenor, is either (1) "for the recovery of specific personal property", or the taking or detaining thereof, or (2) for an "injury to the rights of another", and, in so far as such cause of action may be affected by said statutes, it is immaterial whether the action, attempted to be asserted by the intervenor, be regarded as the one or the other.

On the theory that the intervenor seeks relief for "injury to the rights" of the Southern Company, then the gist of its cause of action must be on account of the alleged breach by the Trust Company of its duty to the bondholders, caused by its receiving, while trustee in the Belt mortgage, the properties pledged as above stated.

On the assumption that the taking of such securities constituted a breach of duty on the part of the Trust Company, it was, as hereinafter stated, in the 13th subdivision of this report, the breach of an implied duty, rather than of an express duty, and hence is covered by said five year statute of limitations, and the principles, announced in Frismuth v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 95 Fed., 7, and 107 Fed. 169, would be entirely applicable to the facts of the case at bar.

It would also follow, in case the Trust Company was guilty of any such breach of duty in so receiving from the Belt Company the properties pledged, such breach of duty was an accomplished fact the very moment that each property was pledged, and it is not disputed that all the pledges of said properties were made more than five years before any claim was asserted by the Southern.

It is true that the Southern Company was not incorporated until March 19, 1900, and, as a corporate entity, could not have maintained an action before that date, but such fact does not materially affect the operation of the statute of limitations for the reason that as claimed by the Trust Company, all the rights acquired by the Southern in the premises were of a derivitave nature, that is, were derived from and acquired by the Southern Company as purchaser at the foreclosure sale; in other words, the Southern was subrogated to the same right and lien which had belonged to the bondholders, and not a new right, and hence, it is apparent, that if the statute of limitations has run against the bondholders, it has likewise run against the Southern Company, which had no superior right to the bondholders.

In this connection, it may be suggested that the Southern is chargeable with all the acts and omissions of the reorganiza-937 tion Committee, to which it succeeded, and it is not disputed that this Committee had, in December, 1899, acquired substantially all of the bonds of the Belt Company for reorganization purposes, and was from that date, and until March 19, 1900, when said bonds were turned over to the Southern Company, practically the sole bondholder of the Belt Company.

The claim of the intervenor as to the pledged properties is not covered by the provision in respect to "an action for relief on the ground of fraud", so as to permit an action to be brought at any time within ten years after the discovery of the facts, constituting the fraud, because, first, the gist of the action is the breach of duty on the part of the Trust Company in receiving the properties in pledge, and whether done fraudulently or otherwise, would be immaterial (Frismuth v. Trust Co., 107 Fed. 169); and, second, because there are no sufficient averments as to such fraud, and of what it consisted, nor is there a sufficient showing that any diligence was used to discover the alleged fraud at any earlier date, nor that any means were used by the Trust Company to prevent the discovery of such fraud.

Wood v. Carpenter, 101 U. S., 135;
Bank v. Carpenter, 101 U. S., 567;
Bent v. Priest, 86 Mo., 475.

The mere fact that the Trust Company was trustee in the Belt mortgage does not justify the intervenor in invoking the rule to the effect that the trustee cannot claim the benefit of the statute of limitations to shield himself from the consequences of his wrongful acts, for the reason that such rule only applies to cases of express trust, and not to cases where the breach, if any, has been of implied duties by the trustee.

Frismuth v. Trust Co., 107 Fed., 169;
Landis v. Saxton, 105 Mo., 486.

The effect of said statutes of limitations, as affecting the duties and liabilities of the Trust Company, as trustee, in the mortgages in controversy, is more fully considered in the 13th subdivision of this report on the Southern's intervention, and to which reference is here made.

For the foregoing reason, the Master is of the opinion that respondent's plea of the statute of limitations is well taken and should prevail, as against the claim of intervenor, in respect to the properties pledged as collateral securities for the Belt obligations to the Trust Company, except as next hereinafter stated.

938 The conclusions reached in this report by the Master, as to the application of the statute of limitations, and the principles of laches, to said pledged properties, are not, however, to be understood as, in any wise, affecting or changing any specific findings or conclusions by the Master, in respect to any superior rights or equities found by him to exist in favor of either the intervenor or respondent.

2. Laches.—The Trust Company contends that the Southern Company and the Belt bondholders have been guilty of such laches as to estop them from asserting title to the pledged properties, because of certain equitable considerations, which are opposed to the granting of the relief sought by the intervenor; in other words, it has been insisted that the intervenor's conduct has been such as to have induced the respondent to adopt a course of action, which it would not otherwise have done, and that it would be inequitable to now permit the intervenor to obtain an advantage thereby over the respondent.

The point is made that the reorganization Committee and its successor, the Southern Company, were in position prior to the foreclosure sale of the Belt railroad property, to have asserted the claim, now asserted by the intervenor, to the collateral securities in controversy, and that, in justice to the rights of the respondent, it should have been done, so that the latter could have pursued such other remedies, as were then open to it, in respect to the collection or protection of the Belt indebtedness owing to it.

The intervenor maintained silence as to its claims upon the pledged securities until many years after the appointment of the Belt receivers, and the sale of its properties by foreclosure proceedings, and, also, after it had received the active and influential cooperation of the Trust Company in putting through the reorganization plan, in its entirety, and, by so doing, the intervenor received all the advantages and benefits of its own conduct and silence in the premises, without giving the least intimation that it claimed any interest in the properties pledged for the large Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company.

Counsel for intervenor answer the foregoing suggestions by stating that, if the properties pledged were covered by the mortgage lien, the respondent had constructive notice thereof, and, was otherwise familiar with all the transactions of the Belt and allied companies. Through the efforts of the reorganization Committee, assisted by the Trust Company and others, sufficient Belt bonds and stocks had been deposited with the Committee in December 939 1899, to make the plan operative, and, in the following March the Southern Company was organized.

On April 2, 1900, the mortgage executed by the Southern Company shows that, in exchange for its own securities, it had become the owner, for reorganization purposes, of 897 Belt bonds, out of a total of 1000 bonds, and, also of 46322 shares of Belt capital stock, out of a total of 47500 of such shares (Rec. Vol. 57-35196), so that, for all practical purposes, the Southern was the owner of substantially all of the Belt bonds and stocks, and, through such ownership, had placed its agents and nominees in charge of the properties and books of the Belt Company, and, from which books and corporate records, it could easily and readily be ascertained that the properties in question had been pledged to the Trust Company.

On September 6, 1900, nearly six months after the incorporation of the Southern Company, the receivers were appointed for the Belt Company, at the instance of the Southern, and through the Provident Company, as trustee, which filed the foreclosure bill; the foreclosure decree being made on November 6, 1901, and the sale on December 31, 1901, to the Southern Company. During this period, no claim was asserted by the Southern Company, nor until February 27, 1905, when the intervening petition was filed in this cause.

In the meantime, all the properties of the Belt Company, which had pledged the securities in dispute to the respondent, had been foreclosed, or otherwise disposed of, long before the assertion of intervenor's claim, so that nothing was left, out of which the respondent could have possibly protected its Belt indebtedness, if it lost the collateral securities pledged therefor.

Under all the facts and circumstances, in respect to the dealings of the reorganization Committee and Southern Company, with the Trust Company, in regard to the reorganization scheme, and the various interests therein involved, it would seem that the laches of the intervenor has operated to the prejudice and injustice of the respondent, which, under different circumstances, might have taken steps to protect its interests, either before or at the time of the Belt foreclosure sale.

In this connection, it may be suggested that, by the 10th article of the Belt mortgage, the majority of the bondholders had the right to remove the trustee by writing, signed by them, and which they did in fact, by removing the Trust Company, as trustee, before the filing of the foreclosure bill; and, hence, the fact that the Trust 940 Company was a trustee in the Belt mortgage, was no hindrance to the assertion and prosecution of the intervenor's claim, in as much as the intervenor was really the sole bondholder, and could remove the trustee, if it so desired. It can hardly be contended that the Committee and the Southern were ignorant of the pledges of the disputed properties to the Trust Company, for the reason that, in the minutes of the Committee, on January 17, 1900, it appears that the Committee was negotiating with the Trust Company for the release by it of the Union Company stock held as collateral (Rec. Vol. 41-22208), and which negotiation was closed on June 6, 1900 (Vol. 41-22304).

In the opinion of the Master, however, the laches question is not especially important, as respecting the claim of the intervenor to the properties in controversy, if he is correct in the conclusions heretofore stated, to the effect, first, that said properties are not covered by the terms of the Belt mortgage, and, second, that, even if they were included therein, the claim of the intervenor therefor was barred by the statute of limitations of this State, when the intervening petition, containing such claim, was filed in this cause.

XII.

As to the Liability of the Southern Company for the Floating Debt of the Belt Company.

The Trust Company contends that, in carrying out the provisions of the reorganization plan, under which the Southern Company was organized, the latter became liable thereunder for the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company, and, for that reason, the Southern Company is not entitled to the possession of the properties pledged as collateral security until it pays the Trust Company the full amount of the indebtedness secured thereby.

The claim of the Trust Company, in respect to the Southern Company's liability for the general and unsecured indebtedness of the Belt Company is fully stated in paragraphs 15 to 20, both inclusive, of the Trust Company's answer to the intervening petition, and it is based substantially upon the following allegations:

(a) That, on or about June 14, 1899, William F. Harrity, B. M. Baker, August Heckscher, Edward Wagner, Samuel R. Shipley, Silas W. Pettit, and Winthrop Smith, calling themselves a Reorganization Committee, entered into an agreement for the reorganization of the Gulf, Belt, and Port Arthur Channel & Dock Companies, and their so-called subsidiary or auxiliary companies, including the Belt, Union, Consolidated and, Air Line Companies, and, also 941 formed and promulgated a plan or reorganization, dated November 7, 1899, by which they invited all the holders of the bonds and stocks of said companies to deposit the same with said Committee, which then proposed to organize a new corporation, to be known as the Southern Company, and which should acquire all the properties of the above named companies, and issue, in payment therefor, the bonds and stocks of the new corporation on the terms and in the manner provided in the reorganization plan.

(b) That, after the promulgation of the plan of November 7, 1899, the requisite number and amount of bonds and stocks were deposited with the Committee, which, on December 20, 1899, declared the plan operative, and thereafter caused the incorporation of the Southern Company to acquire the properties of the aforesaid companies pursuant to said plan, and, thereupon, practically all the stocks and bonds of the old companies, including the Belt, were exchanged for those of the new company, as set out in the reorganization plan, and, subsequently, the Southern Company caused the election of officers and directors of the Belt Company who managed and operated it "in the interests of, and as a component part of, the railroad system," of the Southern Company.

(c) That the organization of the Southern Company, the exchange of its stocks and bonds for the stocks and bonds of the Belt Company, and the other steps taken in pursuance of the said reorganization plan, effected a consolidation of the Southern Company and the Belt Company under the Statutes of the State of Missouri or a consolidation de facto, and that, by reason thereof, the Southern Company thereby became and is liable for all debts incurred by said Belt Company, including its debts to respondent Trust Company, and, further, that the Southern Company is estopped to deny such consolidation or to claim that the same was not legally complete.

(d) That the reorganization Committee, when working out the plan of reorganization, expressly represented to, and promised, the Trust Company that, in consideration of the debt due and owing from the Belt Company to the respondent, the Committee would provide for the payment of, or would pay, or cause to be paid, all the debts and obligations due to the respondent from all the corporations, including the Belt Company, proposed to be consolidated and included in said reorganization plan, and, also, that the new and reorganized company would pay such debts; that certain members
942 of said Committee, constituting a purchasing committee, purchased, at the Gulf foreclosure sale, all of the assets and properties of the Gulf Company, and, thereafter, assigned their bid therefor to the Southern Company, which entered into a contract with said Committee, wherein and whereby it assumed and agreed to complete and carry out all the obligations undertaken and assumed by said Committee, and, by reason of which, the Southern Company became and is liable to respondent for all the Belt obligations to it.

(e) That, at the time of the foreclosure and sale of the Belt Company's assets, the Southern Company, under the reorganization plan, became and was the owner and holder of nearly all of the Belt bonds and stocks, which enabled it to procure such foreclosure, and, as a result of the reorganization plan of exchange of stocks, the Belt stockholders became the owners of a large amount of Southern Company stock, which was then, and is now, of much greater market value than the total claims of the Trust Company against the Belt Company, and, hence, it is alleged by the respondent that said "scheme legally implied the payment by said Southern Company of all the claims of the respondent against the Belt Company."

(f) That, if by the reorganization scheme and exchange of securities, it was intended by said reorganization Committee and the Southern Company to deprive respondent of its right to collect its claim from the Belt Company, while valuable interests were being secured by the operation of the reorganization plan, to the Belt stockholders, then that the foreclosure of the Belt properties, under such circumstances, would be a fraudulent scheme and should be held void as to respondent, and the property thereby acquired by the Southern Company should be held subject, and be subjected, to the payment of the debts and claims of the respondent, "even if it should be held by the Court that a legal consolidation, or actual or de-facto consolidation, was not brought about as hereinabove alleged, whereby the Southern Company became legally obligated to pay the claims of this respondent against said Belt Company."

Analysis of the Reorganization Plan and Agreement.

1. The liability, if anything, of the Southern Company, for the floating debt of the Belt Company, is created by the reorganization plan and agreement, as shown in the record, and specific references are made herein to such parts thereof as are deemed material to the issues in this cause. The Trust Company was a large holder of the securities of the Gulf and Belt Companies, which were sur-943 rendered by it under said plan and agreement, and in lieu thereof, it received and retained certain securities of the Southern Company. (Rec. Vol. pp. 29973-29974).

It is claimed by the Southern Company that the Trust Company was a party to the reorganization plan and agreement, and received the benefits thereof, and agreed to become bound by its terms, and, hence, cannot now claim adversely to its provisions. The effect of this contention will be hereafter determined.

The reorganization Committee was composed of the said Harrity, Baker, Hecksher, Shipley, Pettit, Smith, Wagner, Sielcken and Max Pam and the Trust Company was designated by the Committee as one of the depositaries, named in the Modified Plan and Agreement for the reorganization of the Gulf Company, and its terminal companies. This plan is dated Philadelphia, November 7, 1899, and was addressed "to the holders of the bonds and stocks of the Gulf, Belt, Union, Consolidated, Air Line and Port Arthur Channel & Dock, Companies", (Rec. Vol. 13-6762 to 6776), and, the reorganization agreement between the Committee and the holders of the mortgage bonds, stocks, and evidences of indebtedness therein mentioned, who shall become parties to it, and therein called depositors, is dated June 14, 1899, (Vol. 13-6776); and it is specially recited in said plan that it shall form a part of the "agreement with the same force and effect" as though therein incorporated, and "the two are to be read together as forming parts of one and the same instrument."

It is contended by the Southern Company that said reorganization plan and agreement were both made solely for the benefit of the bondholders and stockholders of the companies involved therein, and not for the benefit of the other creditors of said companies.

After stating that the New York Committee had abandoned the plan theretofore formulated by it, and had approved and adopted the plan of the Philadelphia Committee, published on August 17, 1899, the last named Committee declared in said modified plan that it had formulated and adopted said plan as the basis of the reorganization of the railroad system composed of the Gulf and its associated companies, and that it "had for its ultimate purpose [and] unification of the main line and terminals into one ownership and under one management", and that such object was sought to be accomplished "by having the Gulf Company, when reorganized, acquire the capital stock of the other two companies, and, having thus acquired the control and possession, to thereafter adjust the bonded indebtedness standing against the properties of the Belt Com-944 pany and the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company, by retiring the present bonds and issuing in lieu thereof new 3½% bonds to be based upon and restricted to the net earnings of said prospective properties as they might appear on future operations."

The plan adopted for such a reorganization was drawn upon the following basis:

"The property of the existing Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company will be sold, and it is expected and intended that the same will be purchased by the Committee, and if so, a successor company will be organized, to which the same property will be conveyed, together with the stocks and bonds of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company deposited thereunder, and those of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its constituent companies deposited hereunder, if sufficient are so deposited to warrant the retention of that property by the new company, and said new company will issue in payment therefor the new securities hereinafter mentioned, and which new securities will be disposed of as hereinafter stated.

By this means, therefore, the following results will be attained:

(a) That the new company, which will own the main line and property of the present Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, will also own the bonds and capital stock of both the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, the bonds of its constituent companies, and the bonds and capital stock of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company, and thereby all three properties will be under one corporate ownership, management and control. Said bonds and stocks so purchased will be pledged under the new first mortgage to be created.

(b) The payment of the floating debt and the existing Car Trust obligations.

(c) Adequate provision for working capital for future requirements.

(d) The reduction of the fixed annual charges to less than the minimum earnings under probable conditions.

(e) Such control of the reorganized system, until the earnings of the property shall have placed it in a satisfactory financial position, as shall render additionally secure the new first mortgage.

(f) Or, in the event that either or both of the said terminal properties are not so acquired, then, (under arrangements already provided) the requisite terminal facilities at Kansas City and on the Gulf will be otherwise secured—in which event the amount of the new securities, to be issued, will, of course, be correspondingly reduced.

It is intended, as soon as practicable, that the new company acquire the properties of the terminal companies in fee, and bring them directly under the lien of the mortgage." (Rec. Vol. 13, pp. 6764-6765).

In the statement of "Conditions of Participation" in the benefits of the modified reorganization plan, there is a provision requiring the payment of $10 per share by each one of the depositing stockholders of the Gulf Company; and it is also provided therein "that all the stocks and bonds deposited under this plan are to remain in the hands of the Committee as existing obligations and securities of the respective companies issuing the same, to be hereafter disposed of in such manner as may be deemed expedient by said Committee for the reorganized or new company, or cancelled, if deemed proper by it." (Rec. Vol. 13-6767).

2. It is also stated that, as a consideration for the conveyance or delivery of the property and securities of the old companies to the reorganized or new company, it is contemplated that said reorganized or new company shall issue the following securities:

"First. First mortgage, 50 year, 3 per cent gold bonds, interest payable semi-annually, for $30,000,000.00.

These bonds to be secured by a first mortgage upon all property of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company and its branches, extensions, terminals, equipment and other property embraced in the reorganization as carried out, and also upon the stocks, bonds or other securities of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and its constituent companies, and of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company, of and to the extent acquired as mentioned. These bonds are to be appropriated approximately as follows:

To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage Bonds of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company at the rate of $750 of the new First Mortgage Bonds, for $1000 of the existing First Mortgage Bonds	$18,000,000.00
To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage 6 per cent — of the Kansas City Suburban Railroad Company at 133 per cent.	1,330,000.00
946 To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds of the Union Terminal Railroad Company at 100 per cent	2,000,000.00
To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds of the Consolidated Terminal Railroad Company at 100 per cent	750,000.00
To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds of the Kansas City & Independence Air Line Railroad Company at 100 per cent	300,000.00
To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage 5 per cent Bonds of Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company at 50 per cent	817,500.00
To be sold for the necessary cash requirements of the new company	3,000,000.00
To be reserved for the future requirements of the New Company	3,802,500.00
Total authorized issue	$30,000,000.00

Second. Preferred stock not to exceed $21,000,00, in shares of $100 each, entitled to non-cumulative dividends to the extent of but limited to 4 per cent per annum out of the surplus net earnings in each fiscal year, before any dividends for such year shall be paid on the common stock.

Stock trust certificates will be issued for said preferred stock and will be appropriated approximately as follows:

To provide for the conversion of the existing First Mortgage Bonds of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company at the rate of five shares (i. e., $500) of said preferred stock for $1,000 existing first mortgage bonds	$12,000,000.00
To those of the holders of the capital stock of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company who may pay the sum of $10.00 with each share deposited by them as condition for participation in the new company or to the syndicate who may pay the same	2,400,000.00
To provide for the conversion of the First Mortgage Bonds of the Kansas City Suburban Belt 947 Railroad Company and its constituent companies at the rate of two and one half shares (i. e., $250) of said preferred stock for each $1,000 of existing First Mortgage bonds, viz:
Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company	250,000.00
Consolidated Terminal Railroad Company	500,000.00
Consolidated Terminal Railroad Company	187,500.00
Kansas City & Independence Air Line Railroad Company	75,000.00
To provide for the acquisition of the capital stock of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company at the rate of one share of new preferred stock for each four shares of said Belt Company stock	1,187,500.00
To provide for the conversion of the First Mort- Bonds of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company at the rate of five shares (i. e., $500) of said preferred stock for each $1,000 existing First Mortgage Bonds	817,500.00
To be sold for the necessary cash requirements of the new company	3,000,000.00
Balance	582,500.00
Total authorized issue	$21,000,000.00

Third. Common stock to the amount of not exceeding $30,000,000, in shares of $100 each.

Stock trust certificates will be issued for said common stock and will be appropriated approximately as follows:

To those of the holders of the capital stock of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, who may pay the sum of $10.00 with each share deposited by them as a condition for the participation in the new company, or to the syndicate who may pay the same	$24,000,000.00

To provide for the acquisition of the capital stock of Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company at the rate of $75 (i. e., 75 per cent) for each share of stock of the Suburban Belt Railroad Company	3,562,500.00
948 To provide for the acquisition of the Bonds of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company at the rate of five shares (i. e., $500) of said common stock for each $1,000 of Existing First Mortgage Bonds	817,500.00
To provide for the acquisition of the capital stock of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company at the rate of 75 per cent (i. e., $75 per share) for each share of said stock	1,181,250.00
Balance	438,750.00
Total authorized issue	$30,000,000.00

3. The statement of the existing securities of the properties included in the reorganization, as appears in Rec. Vol. 13, pp. 6771 to 6772, is as follows:

"Bonds: Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company 5's issued	$23,000,000
Due on Lake Charles and other tracks	1,000,000
		$24,000,000
Kansas City Suburban 6's		1,000,000
Union Terminal 5's		2,000,000
Consolidated Terminal's 5's		750,000
Kansas City & Independence Air Line 5's		300,000
Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company 5's		1,635,000
		$29,685.000
Shares: Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad	23,000,000
Due for construction but not yet issued	1,000,000
		$24,000,000
Kansas City Suburban Belt Company		4,750,000
Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company		1,575,000
		$30,352,000

Under this plan the holders of the present securities of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad and the two Terminal Companies who shall deposit the same under the plan and reorganization agreement will receive as follows:

949 Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company:

For present bonds, in addition to the payment in cash of the defaulted coupon of April 1st, 1899.

In New First Mortgage 3 per cent Bonds (75 per cent)	750
In new preferred stock (50 per cent)	500
	$1,250

For present stock: One share of new common stock for each share of present stock to those who may deposit hereunder and pay the sum of $10.00 with each share so deposited, and for which payments shares of new preferred stock will also be issued at par.

Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company:

For present bonds.	In new First Mortgage 3 per cent bonds (133 per cent)	$1,330
	In new Preferred stock (25 per cent)	250
		$1,580

For present stock. One-quarter of a share of new preferred stock and three-quarters of a share of new common stock of the company as reorganized for each share of the present stock to those who may deposit hereunder.

Union Terminal Company:

For present bonds.	In New First Mortgage 3 per cent bonds (100) per cent)	$1,000
	In new preferred stock (25 per cent)	250
		$1,250

Consolidated Terminal Railroad Company:

For present bonds.	In new First Mortgage 3 per cent bonds (100 per cent)	$1,000
	In new preferred stock (25 per cent)	250
		$1,250

Kansas City & Independence Air Line Railroad Company:

950

For present bonds.	In new First Mortgage 3 per cent bonds (100 per cent)	$1,000
	In new Preferred Stock (25 per cent)	250
		$1,250

Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company:

For present bonds.	In new First Mortgage 3 per cent bonds (50 per cent)	500
	In new Preferred Stock (50 per cent)	500
	In new Common Stock (50 per cent)	500
		$1,500

For present stock. Three-quarters of one share of new common stock of the company as reorganized for each share of the present stock to those who may deposit hereunder."

From the last statement, it will be seen that, for each share of Belt stock deposited with the Committee, the depositor was entitled to receive one-fourth share of the new preferred stock and three-fourths of a share of the new common stock of the reorganized company. In brief, it appears that the Gulf bondholders were to get for their bonds seventy-five cents on the dollar in new bonds, and fifty cents in preferred stock; and that Belt bondholders were to get thirty-three cents premium in new bonds, and twenty-five cents in preferred stock.

4. From the foregoing specific appropriations of the stocks and bonds issued in exchange for, or conversion of, those of the old companies, it appears that bonds, of the par value of $3,000,000.00, and preferred stock, of the par value of $3,000,000.00 were set apart to be sold for the necessary cash requirements of the new company and, that bonds, of the par value of $3,802,500.00, were reserved for the future requirements of the new company; and, further, that there was a balance of unappropriated preferred stock of the par value of $582,500.00 and of $438,750.00, par value, of common stock.

The "future requirements of the company", for which bonds of the par value of $3,802,500.00 are reserved, included such extensions, betterments, and new equipments as might be required by the business of the company (Vol. 13-6774).

951 The proceeds of the securities to be devoted to the cash requirements of the company, together with payments of $10 per share by participating Gulf shareholders, are as follows:

By sale of $3,000,000 first mortgage 3 per cent bonds and $3,000,000 preferred stock	$3,500,000.00
From payments of $10 per share by participating stockholders or the syndicate	2,400,000.00
Total	$5,900,000.00

To be applied as follows:

For payment of car trusts and interests adjusted to date of payment, say	1,900,000.00
For payment of floating debts	475,000.00

For payment of receiver's certificates.....	800,000.00
For payment first mortgage coupons, due April 1, 1899,	575,000.00
Working capital and expenses of reorganization.....	2,150,000.00
Total	$5,900,000.00

(Rec. Vol. 13-6774).

The reorganization plan certainly then provided for the possible payment of floating debts to the extent of, at least, $475,000.00 and, out of the proceeds to be derived from the disposition of the securities of the Southern Company, and from the assessment on the Gulf participating stockholders. It is shown in the record that more than one million dollars was paid out on account of floating debts, the particulars of which are hereinafter stated.

The reorganization plan clearly shows that the new securities, to be issued by the new company, "will be disposed of as hereafter stated", and that "by this means, that is, such disposition of the new securities, the following results will be obtained" * * * that is, "the payment of the floating debt and the existing car trust obligations," thereby clearly meaning that, from the proceeds of the disposition of the new securities, the floating debt and existing car trust obligations were to be paid.

It is also provided in said plan, (Vol. 13-6773), that if the "holders of the bonds and stocks of the companies forming the Kansas City Belt Line system elect not to join in the proposed reorganization", then that "the new company will secure complete terminal facilities at Kansas City, under arrangements already perfected, reaching the same industries by railroad connections and 952 communications fully equal to those it now has by means of the said Belt Line."

5. Counsel for both intervenor and respondent have called attention to certain parts of the reorganization agreement of June 14, 1899, and which are herein copied as being somewhat explanatory of the powers, duties and objects of the reorganization Committee.

Among the reasons assigned in the June 14, 1899, agreement for the then proposed reorganization plan, are the following:

(a) That the properties of the Gulf, Belt and Port Arthur Channel & Dock, Companies, formed a through and continuous line of communication from Kansas City to the Gulf of Mexico;

(b) That the Gulf had gone into a receivership, and that the other two might likewise become involved, and

(c) That it was "necessary for the protection of the interest of the holders of the stocks and bonds" of said companies that they should be "by means of consolidation or stock control, or in some way, united and legally placed under the practical management, direction and control of one corporate organization, with, if possible, but one class of encumbrance secured upon the whole system, and one set of shareholders." (Vol. 13-6776).

To become parties to said contract, the bondholders and stockholders were required to transfer and deposit their bonds and stocks with the Committee, taking therefor certificates of deposit which could only be transferred subject to the contract. The depositors were also obligated to execute any of the papers necessary "in order to vest in them (the Committee) and to enable them to transfer the complete and absolute title to such stocks and bonds".

It is recited in the reorganization agreement that "the above and foregoing plan forms part of the annexed reorganization agreement with the same force and effect as though therein set forth at length and the two are to be read together as forming parts of one and the same instrument", and, in said agreement, it is further stated that the aforesaid plan and reorganization agreement "shall be read as parts of one and the same instrument, but no estimate, statement, explanation or suggestion contained in said plan or this agreement or in any circular issued by the Depositary or by the Committee is intended or is to be accepted as representation, warranty or condition under this agreement". (Rec. Vol. 13-6777).

The seventh paragraph of the agreement is as follows:

953 "The committee shall keep a record of its acts and proceedings. All notices of meetings of the committee shall be in writing, mailed or delivered to the post office address of each member of the committee as filed with the secretary thereof. Any member of the committee, by written appointment, may empower any other member of the committee to vote and act as his proxy with all the powers of the member making the appointment; and a majority of the members of the committee shall constitute a quorum; but no action shall be taken except with the consent of the majority of the whole committee, given in person or by proxy at a meeting, or in writing without a meeting, and such action of the majority shall constitute the action of the committee and shall have the same effect as if assented to by the whole committee. Any member of the committee may resign by giving notice in writing to the chairman or secretary thereof, and the committee may settle any account or transaction with such member and give a full release and discharge upon any such resignation, and any vacancy in the committee may be filed at any time by a designation in writing, signed by a majority of the remaining members, and the committee may in like manner add to its number of additional member or members."

The 12th paragraph of the June reorganization contract is as follows:

"The enumeration of specific powers hereby conferred shall not be construed to limit or to restrict general powers herein conferred or intended so to [bo]. It is hereby distinctly declared that it is intended to confer on the Committee, in respect to all securities deposited hereunder, and in all other respects, any and all powers which the Committee may deem necessary or expedient towards carrying out or promoting the purposes of said plan and this agreement, and the methods to be adopted for carrying out the reorganization consolidation or unification of the properties herein mentioned shall be entirely discretionary with the Committee.

Bonds and other obligations deposited under this agreement and said plan, and all securities purchased or otherwise acquired under this agreement, shall not be deemed satisfied, released or discharged by any delivery of new securities, but shall remain in full force and effect for all purposes * * *. No right is conferred, nor any trust, liability or obligation (except the agreements herein contained in favor of the holders of certificates of deposit hereunder), is created by this agreement or the plan, or is assumed here-954 under, or by or for any new company in favor of any bondholder or any other creditor or [or] any holder of any claims whatsoever against the said companies, nor in favor of any company now existing or to be formed hereafter (whether such claim be based on any bonds, coupon stocks, securities, lease, guaranty or otherwise) with respect to any security deposited under this agreement or any moneys paid to or received by the Committee or by the depositor hereunder, or with respect to any property acquired by purchase at any foreclosure sale, or with respect to any new certificates to be issued hereunder, or with respect to any other matter or thing". (Rec. Vol. 13-6786-6787).

In the 13th paragraph of said agreement is the following:

"Any obligation in the nature of floating debt or otherwise against any company or property embraced in said plan, either as proposed or carried out, or any securities held as collateral for any such obligation, may be acquired or extinguished or held by the Committee at such time, in such manner, and upon such terms as they may deem proper for the purposes of carrying out this agreement, and nothing in said plan and this agreement contained is intended to or shall constitute any liability or trust in favor or in respect of any such obliga- [to] acquired or extinguished or held by the Committee'. (Vol. 13-6787).

The reorganization agreement imposed a duty upon the Committee in the following terms:

"It shall be the special duty of said Committee, which they are hereby fully authorized and empowered to perform, to prepare and adopt a plan for the reorganization of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, and its property, and also, if necessary, for the reorganization of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company and their properties, and for the consolidation of said corporations, if such consolidation can be lawfully made and is found to be practicable, either with or without foreclosure of either or all of said properties, or by means of the acquisition of the stock or other securities, of either or all of said corporations, or in any other manner that may be deemed by said Committee to be most practicable and feasible; and said Committee are authorized to negotiate with bondholders, creditors and stockholders of said companies, or either or all of them, in devising and carrying out said plan, &c." (Vol. 13, p. 6779).

The contract of June 14, 1899, confers upon the Committee the powers possessed by stockholders and bondholders:

955 "The depositors hereby irrevocably request the Committee to endeavor to carry into practical operation any plan so adopted, and this agreement in its entirety, or in part, to such extent and in such manner as the Committee shall deem to be for the best interests of the depositors in the consolidation or acquisition and unification of the properties finally embraced in the readjustment * * * to purchase at any time, and at such prices as they shall deem proper, or to pay, compromise, or settle with the holders of coupon notes or other indebtedness, or car trusts or other obligations of any of the said companies * * * and to apply for that purpose any money received from the sale of stock or obligations of any new company to be formed * * * with plenary powers to enter into arrangements for decrees or for facilitating or hastening the course of litigation, or in any way to promote the consummation of said plan, and to do whatever in the judgment of the Committee may seem necessary to promote or procure the sale as an entirety, or the joint or separate sale, of any property or franchises herein concerned, wherever situated, * * * to adjourn any sale of any property or franchises * * * to bid, or refrain from bidding, at any sale * * * to hold any property or franchises purchased by them * * *. The Committee may procure the organization of one or more new companies, or that may adopt or use any existing or future companies, or they may cause to be made such consolidation, leases, sales, or other arrangements, conveyances or transfers of any properties or securities, acquired by them, and take such other proceedings as they may deem needful * * * for carrying out any or all the provisions thereof * * * and the Committee may vote upon all the stock of such new corporation for all purposes in their judgment necessary to carry out said plan, until the same shall be finally delivered to the depositors who shall be entitled to receive the same * * * the Committee may proceed under this plan * * * with or without foreclosure." (Vol. 13-6780-81).

As to the Liability of the Southern Company for Belt Debts upon a Theory of a Consolidation of the Two Companies.

The contention of the Trust Company, in the 17th paragraph of its answer to the intervening petition, is that the organization of the Southern Company, and the exchange of its stocks and bonds for those of the Belt Company, and the other steps taken, pursuant to the reorganization plan, effected a consolidation of the Southern and Belt Companies, under the Missouri Statute. The Southern Company, however, contends that the effect and operation of the reorganization plan and agreement did not, in any sense, create 956 either a statutory or an equitable consolidation of those two companies into the new one, and, hence, that there could be no statutory or other liability on the part of the Southern Company for the Belt debts.

In this connection, it is well to make a brief review of some of the underlying facts.

It is not controverted that the Gulf road defaulted in the payment of its interest April 1st, 1899, that receivers were then appointed, and that, thereupon, a decree of foreclosure and sale was rendered February 5, 1900, and the property sold at such foreclosure sale on March 19, 1900, to the Southern Company, which became the purchaser thereof, and took possession on April 1, 1900, and has been operating the property since that time. The Belt Railroad Company was placed in the hands of receivers September 6, 1900, in a suit instituted by the Provident Company, the trustee named in the first mortgage on the Belt property. A decree of foreclosure and sale was rendered on November 6, 1901, and the foreclosure sale had on December 31, 1901, the Southern Company becoming the purchaser thereof, and continuing to operate the property since that time. A Philadelphia Committee, on August 17, 1899, promulgated a plan, which, on November 7, 1899, was modified, and under which the stockholders and bondholders of the Gulf Company and its allied companies including the Belt, deposited their securities and in lieu thereof finally obtained new securities of the Southern Company. The Trust Company, being the owner of a large amount of these securities, including those of the Belt Company, deposited them with the reorganization Committee, and obtained in lieu thereof certain stocks and bonds of the Southern Company, which the Trust Company still retains. The Trust Company was also one of the depositaries in the modified plan or reorganization, and it is claimed by intervenor that it is abundantly shown by the testimony in the record, that the respondent actively co-operated in the reorganization of the Belt properties, and induced its correspondents to accept said plan and to exchange their securities for the Southern Company securities. The effect of the Trust Company's participation in the reorganization plan is hereinafter considered.

It is not controverted that the bondholders and stockholders of the Belt Company received the stocks and bonds of the Southern Company in the ratio provided by the reorganization plan, and that the Southern Company thereby became the owner in some capacity of practically all of the outstanding stocks and bonds issued by 957 the Belt Company, and the former bondholders and stockholders of the latter company became the owners by exchange of the stocks and bonds of the Southern Company.

Missouri Statutes Relating to Consolidation.

1. The sections of the Missouri statutes which bear upon this subject of railroad consolidations, are numbers 1059, 1060 and 1061, (R. S. No. 1899):

"Sec. 1059. Companies may consolidate, when. Any two or more railroad companies in this state, existing under either general or special laws, and owning railroads constructed wholly or in part, which, when completed and connected, will form in the whole or in the main one continuous line of railroad, are hereby authorized to consolidate in whole or in the main, and form one company owning and controlling such continuous lines of road, with all the powers rights, privileges and immunities and subject to all the obligations and liabilities to the state, or otherwise, which belonged to or rested upon either of the companies making such consolidation. In order to accomplish such consolidation, the companies interested may enter into contract fixing the terms and conditions thereof, which shall first be ratified and approved by a majority in interest of all the stock held in each company or road proposing to consolidate, at a meeting of stockholders regularly called for the purpose, or by the approval in writing, of the persons or parties holding and representing a majority of such stock. A certified copy of such articles of agreement, with the corporate name to be assumed by the new company, shall be filed with the secretary of state, when the consolidation shall be considered duly consummated, and a certified copy from the office of the secretary of state shall be deemed conclusive evidence thereof. The board of directors of the several companies may then proceed to carry out such contract according to its provisions, calling in the certificates of stock then outstanding in the several companies or roads, and issuing certificates of stock in the new consolidated company, under such corporate name as may have been adopted."

(Here follows a prohibition against consolidation by competitive roads, either in whole or in part, and declaring that any such consoldiation "shall be void," etc.)

"Before any railroad companies shall consolidate their roads, under the provisions of this article, they shall each file with the secretary of state a resolution accepting the provisions thereof, to be signed by their respective presidents and attested by their 958 respective secretaries, under the seal of their respective companies, which resolution shall have been passed by a majority vote of the stock of each, at a meeting of the stockholders to be called for the purpose of considering the same, sixty days' public notice of the time, place and purpose of such meeting having been given by advertisement in some newspaper printed in the county where the general offices of said company or companies of this state are situated."

This section contains a general authority for railroad companies to consolidate "in the whole or in the main" and casting a full liability upon the successor company in either case; it provides two general methods of consent in consolidation which "may" be adopted, viz: One under which the contract or terms of consolidation are fixed in the first instance by a majority vote of the stockholders of each company, and one needing only the approval in writing by such a majority; and a prohibition against consolidation of competitive roads (immaterial here).

Sec. 1060 provides (a) that any railroad company may "aid" a connecting line company by means of subscription to its capital stock "or otherwise"; (b) for extension of, intrastate railroads into adjoining states allowing the one company to "build, buy, sell, lease or consolidate" with any railroads in such adjoining state; (c) for "any railroad company" to "lease or purchase all or any part of a railroad, with all its privileges, rights, franchises, real estate and other property, the whole or a part of which is in this state", if the lines connect "within or without this state" etc., and (d) that any railroad corporation (of another state) may extend its road "into and through this state, and for such purposes be treated as a domestic corporation" etc.

Then follows a provision for assent by a majority vote of the stockholders to such aiding, purchasing, etc., or other "arrangements" "or until the holders of a majority of the stock of such company shall have assented thereto in writing, and a certificate thereof signed by the president and secretary of said company or companies, shall have been filed in the office of the secretary of state", etc.

Sec. 1061 provides that any Missouri railroad corporation "may acquire any line of railroad within or without this state which shall form a continuous line", etc., "and may acquire and may hold the obligations and stock of other companies owning or operating such lines of road," etc., Provided, that no such line of railroad shall be so purchased until "a majority vote of the stockholders of the companies shall have been taken in regular meeting", or until a 959 majority of the holders of the stock of such company shall have consented thereto, in writing, and a certificate thereof, signed by the president and secretary of said company or companies shall have been filed in the office of the secretary of state."

The Southern Company claims that it had the express statutory power, by Sec. 1061, R. S. Mo., 1899, to acquire and hold the stocks and bonds of the Belt Company, and that the exchange of stocks and bonds was in effect a purchase and sale (citing Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U. S., 244); and, further, that none of the steps, provided for in Sec. 1059, R. S. Mo., 1899, in relation to the consolidation of railroad companies were taken by the companies involved in this cause, nor does the record show that there was any intention to invoke the provisions of that section, or to form a statutory consolidation.

Counsel for the Southern Company insists that, in order to effect a statutory consolidation under Sec. 1059 R. S. Mo., 1899, it is necessary that,

"(a) The Companies interested shall enter into a contract fixing the terms and conditions of such consolidation.

(b) Such contract shall be ratified and approved by a majority in interest of all stock held by each company proposing to consolidate, either

(c) At a meeting of the stockholders regularly called for the purpose, or (d) By the approval in writing of the persons or parties holding and representing a majority of such stock.

(e) A certified copy of such articles of agreement with the corporate name to be assumed by the new company shall be filed with the secretary of state, when the consolidation shall be considered duly consummated, and a certified copy in the office of the secretary of state shall be deemed conclusive evidence thereof.

(f) The boards of directors of the several companies shall then proceed to carry out said contract according to its provisions, calling in the certificates of stock then outstanding in the several companies or roads, and (g) Issuing certificates of stock in the new consolidated company under such corporate name as may have been adopted.

(h) Before any railroad companies shall consolidate their roads under said statute, they shall each file with the secretary of 960 state a resolution accepting the provisions thereof to be signed by their respective presidents and attested by their respective secretaries under the seal of their respective companies, which resolution shall have been passed by a majority vote of the stock of each at a meeting of the stockholders to be called for the purpose of considering the same, sixty days' public notice of the time, place and purpose of such meeting having been given by advertisement in some newspaper printed in the county where the general office of said company or companies of this state are situated."

It is strongly contended by the intervenor that none of the foregoing requisite steps to bring about a consolidation were ever taken either by the Belt Company, or the Southern Company, and, further, that the record does not show, as required by the statute any contract between the companies contemplating the consolidation, nor any meeting of the stockholders to ratify any such contract, nor was there any approval in writing of such contract by parties holding and representing a majority of the stock, nor was there any certified copy of such contract, or articles of agreement, with the corporate name of the new company filed with the Secretary of State, nor, in fact, were any of the pre-requisites of a consolidation had or complied with by the companies interested. On the other hand the

2. Trust Company's Contentions, as presented by its learned counsel are, in substance and effect, that by reason of said reorganization plan and agreement, and the steps taken thereunder, there was, in fact, effected a consolidation between the Belt and Southern Companies, and that the reorganization Committee was authorized by said agreement to create a new corporation for the purpose of uniting the Gulf, Belt and Dock lines of road into one, as the interests of the bondholders and stockholders of said companies demanded it, that the new corporation was to be created whether the Belt properties were sold or not, under the mortgage covering them, the plan and agreement, however, expressly providing for such sale and the hastening of it, if the reorganization Committee deemed best; that these agreements contemplated that the old companies were to lose the actual control and management of their respective railroad lines, franchises and properties, which was done in carrying out the reorganization contract; and that, by obtaining the three lines of roads with their franchises the new company would have a connected and complete line from Kansas City to the Gulf; that the bondholders and stockholders of each company were to receive, and did receive,
961 bonds and stocks in the new company based upon the combined property of all the companies; and that, in order to determine how to issue the stocks and bonds of the new company to the stockholders and bondholders of the old companies, the equities of each of the corporations in its respective properties had to be estimated and the stock and bonds issued accordingly; that when the reorganization agreements were fully executed, in the respects above mentioned, the new company had everything and the old companies had nothing, except the right to exist as corporations; that, in substance and effect, everything was done and accomplished in the way of carrying out the details of the reorganization plan and looking to a union, merger and consolidation, of the interests of said companies, that could possibly have been done in the case of a purely statutory consolidation; that, in substance and effect, this was not a case where purchasers under a mortgage unite to incorporate, but it was essentially a combination of bondholders and stockholders for the purchase of consolidation, and that the foreclosure sales of the properties of the different corporations interested were merely incidents in the general plan.

The question is, then, broadly presented, whether, under said plan and agreement adopted by the Philadelphia Committee, there was such a consolidation in this cause as would make the Southern Company liable for the unsecured debts of the Belt Company.

The proposed plan, however, did not, specifically, require that the terminals at Port Arthur and Kansas City should be brought into the reorganization; on the contrary, they might or might not be included, as appears by the following language:

"(f) Or in the event that either or both of said terminal properties are not so acquired, then (under arrangements already provided) the requisite terminal facilities at Kansas City, and on the gulf, will be otherwise secured—in which event, the amount of the new securities to be is-ued will, of course, be correspondingly reduced."

It is manifestly the fair intendment of that provision that, if sufficient of the securities of the terminal properties should be deposited to "warrant the retention of that (those properties) by the new company", then the plan contemplated that the terminal properties, together with the Gulf properties, should be operated in the same interests, and thereby, in the language of the plan, "All three properties will be under one corporate ownership management and control".

It was recited that "it was intended as soon as possible, that 962 the new company acquire the properties of the terminal companies in fee and bring them directly under the lien of the mortgage". The intention of the plan, in a general way, was that the properties, belonging to the terminal companies, should be brought into the reorganization, provided the necessary securities of those companies were deposited with the reorganization Committee, but, nevertheless, it is also true that the new company was to be organized to own the Gulf properties, regardless of whether the terminal properties should then or thereafter be acquired.

Respondent's Authorities on Consolidation Proposition.

3. In support of its contention in respect to the alleged consolidation between the Belt and Southern Companies, the respondent relies, among others, upon the following cases:

In U. S. v. N. S. Co., 120 F. R., 725, it is said:

"It is the common experience of mankind that the actions of corporations are dictated and that their policy is controlled by those who own the majority of their stock. Indeed, one of the familiar methods in these days, and about the only method of obtaining control of a corporation, is to purchase the greater part of its stock."

In the cast at bar, the Belt Company was not a party to the reorganization agreement, though perhaps, ninety-nine per cent of the stockholders were depositors of their stock with the Committee.

Morawetz on Corporations, in Section 939 and 947, says:

A distinguishing feature of a consolidation is the union of the shareholders of the two companies, thereby forming one company."

"A railroad company formed by the consolidation of several companies, and invested by law with all their property, rights and franchises, is entitled to enjoy the franchises of each of the several companies upon the road originally belonging to it."

In the U. S. v. W. 193 U. S., 197, in which the stock of two competing lines was put into the hands of a corporation as a holding company by the stockholders, who took therefor stock in the new company, the court said (p. 326):

"Necessarily by this combination or arrangement the holding company in the fullest sense dominates the situation in the interest of those who were stockholders of the consolidated Companies.

* * * Necessarily also the constituent companies ceased,

963 under such a combination, to be in active competition for trade and commerce along their respective lines, and have become practically one powerful consolidated corporation by the name of a holding corporation, the principal if not the sole object for the formation of which was to carry out the purpose of the original combinations under which competition between the constituent companies would cease."

The Court speaks of it as a "scheme or device" (p. 327).

In McCracken v. Robinson, 57 R. F., 377, it is said:

The corporate organization was the machinery which they had brought into existence for carrying out the enterprise."

In Pingree v. M. C. R. R., 118 Mich., 337, the court says:

"The intention to consolidate may be an important consideration."

Then he quotes from an author who says:

"A clear intention to consolidate, together with the performance of acts reasonably appropriate to that end, must be shown in order to establish a consolidation," if the act is consistent with a different intent. In State to use, &c., v. B & L. R. Co., 77 Md., 492, the court says:

"The act of assembly enables two corporations to consolidate upon such terms as may be agreed upon. This agreement refers to the adjustment of the interests of the stockholders and the settlement of the terms on which they shall hold the stock in the new company, and to matters belonging to the organization of the new company and such like things."

Such agreements we have here elaborately drawn.

"Technically speaking, however, and for general purposes, it may be conceded that the consolidated company is a new corporation; but, touching the business of the old companies and the rights of their respective creditors, we think the consolidated company ought to be regarded as the continuation of the old companies under a new name, and that, to that extent, it ought not to be regarded as a new corporation." And a similar statement of the law is to be found in State ex rel. v. Garroutte, 67 Mo., 445, and in Section 956 of 2 Morawetz on Private Corporations." 173 Mo., 410.

The Supreme Court of Illinois (160 Ill., 382), says:

"When the rights and franchises and effects of two or more 964 corporations are, by legal authority and agreement of the parties, combined and united into one whole and committed to a single corporation, the stockholders of which are comprised of those (so far as they choose to become such) of the companies thus agreeing, this is in law and according to a common understanding, a consolidation of such companies, whether such single corporation, called the Consolidated Company, be a new one then created or one of the original companies continuing in existence, with only larger rights, capacity and property."

Again:

"The consolidation of the stock and property of several corporations, into one was not a sale; and it did not affect real estate any, but included franchises and personal property."

Wabash Ry. v. Ham., 114 U. S., 597.

Williamson v. N. J. S. R. R., 26 N. J. Eq., 398.

"It cannot be doubted that under this agreement it was contemplated that the consolidated companies should go out of existence and that their officers should resign their trusts in favor of the new company; that their boards of directors should be supplanted by another board; the names of whose members were contained in the agreement; that the stock of the constituent companies should be surrendered and new stock taken therefor, or in lieu of that, that the old stock should be recognized as the stock of the new company; that the road should be operated by men holding their commissions from the new company, and that the entire administration of the functions of the constituent companies should be surrendered to the new corporation. In short, nothing was left of the constituent companies but the memory of their existence—the mere shadow of a name. But the new company which took their place suddenly sprang into life with a new corps of officers and a full equipment for the successful operation of the road."

Yazoo, &c., Ry. v. Adams, 180 U. S., 18.

If there was a consolidation, liability by the consolidated company results necessarily.

"Now, where one corporation goes entirely out of existence by being annexed to, or merged in another corporation, if no arrangements are made respecting the property and liabilities of the corporation, that ceases to exist, the subsisting corporation will be entitled to all the property and answerable for all the liabilities."

Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo., 177.

965 "The natural idea of such a statute, I take it, is that the new corporation which springs from the two consolidating ones represents each one, as well in its duties or obligations assumed to others, as in its right to enforce the performance by others of their obligations. The idea of a transfer of properties and franchises involves as the correlative idea an assumption of those duties and obligations which were predicated upon possession and operation of such properties and franchises, and which gave strength and inducement to corporate promises."

Polhemus v. R. R., 123 N. Y., 508.
Matter of Brewing Co., 154 N. Y., 273.
—— ——, 160 Ill., 373.

In Morrison v. Am. S. Co., 79 Miss., 723, the court, after a review of the authorities, says:

"The foundation of the liability of a consolidated corporation may rest on a statute or on agreement either express or implied; if the statute does not provide that the new company shall assume the debts and liabilities of the constituent company, and there is no expressed agreement respecting the same, the debts of the original company follow as an incident of the new consolidation, and become, by implication, the obligation of the new corporation."

"The new corporation thus created was in reality the embodiment under another name, of the two formerly existing. They had been joined together in every faculty and function, and moulded with an indivisible unity with none of their rights impaired and none of their responsibilities abated. If this were not the result of the consolidation, very great inconvenience and injustice could arise. The act enables two corporations to consolidate upon such terms as may be agreed upon. This agreement refers to the adjustment of the interest of the stockholders and the settlement of the terms on which they shall hold the stock of the new company, and to matters belonging to the organization of the new corporation, and such like things. Whatever else it may be competent to determine by agreement, the combining companies could not, by any contract between themselves, conclude the rights of persons who have been injured. Their agreement to consolidate brings the new corporation into existence, and then its liabilities are determined by the just construction of the statute which authorizes the consolidation".

State to use, &c., v. B. & L. R. R. Co., 77 Md. (1893), 492.

"Since by authority of law and the act of the parties, the consolidated corporations are moulded into one, with none of 966 their rights impaired and none of their responsibilities lessened, there is no good reason why the same proceedings may not be had against the new corporation as might have been had against the old, to compel payment of liabilities. It avoids circuity of action. It allows the party unto whom the contract was made, and to whom the injury was done, to proceed directly against the corporation, which by virtue of the consolidation proceedings is made liable for it."

Langhorne v. R. R. Co., 91 Va., 375.

In the C. & S. F. & Co. v. Ashley, 43 N. E. 375, it is said:

"What was done must be considered in order to determine whether there was a consolidation or not. We must look to the results accomplished rather than to the means, steps or proceedings by which these results were reached." (Idem l. c. 375) and

"When the rights, franchises, and effects of two or more corporations are by legal authority and agreement of the parties combined and united into one whole and committed to one corporation the stockholders of which are composed of those (so far as they choose to become such) of the companies thus agreeing, this is in law and according to common understanding, a consolidation of such companies, whether such single corporation called the consolidated company, be a new one then created, or one of the original companies continued in existence with only larger rights, capacities and property. Meyer v. Johnson, 64 Ala., 656. This is true whether or not the old company have nominally continued in existence."

Berthold et al. v. Holladay-Klotz Land and Lumber Co., 91 Mo. App., 233.

In Wabash v. Ham., 114 U. S., 587. Mr. Justice Grey, rendering the opinion of the court, states the rule to be that the property of a corporation is a trust fund for the payment of its debts and all of its creditors are entitled to be paid before the shareholders get anything and where a new company was formed from the aggregation of four railroad companies, the creditors were given a preference over the stockholders in the new company to the extent of the assets coming into the hands of the new company from the old.

In Hawkins v. Central Ry. Co., 119 Ga., 159-163, decided in 1903, the court held that all rights of stockholders were inferior to those of creditors and that where shares had been issued to the stockholders of the old companies in exchange for shares in the companies consolidated, it would have been mere repudiation to preserve the 967 rights of the shareholders, by issuing such stock of the consolidated company in exchange for their holdings in the old, without protecting or providing for the rights of the creditors in the old company.

In Shadford v. Detroit Railroad, 130 Mich., 300; 89 N. W., 969 (1902), we have a case where two companies were consolidated on the basis that the stockholders in the old companies received shares of stock in the new company and the bondholders of the old companies received bonds of the new company and the new company took over the properties of the old. In that case it was contended that the creditors had no remedy except by suit in equity, to compel the stockholders to pay assessments to the full value of their stock or to reach the stocks and bonds which had been received by the stockholders of the old company, but the court said, p. 306:

"The law will not permit the creditors of two corporations to be deprived of the assets of such corporations in payment of their debts and turn them over to suits in equity against the stockholders when the union or consolidation with another corporation is effected without the passage of a dollar or other valuable consideration between the corporation themselves."

And again, on p. 307:

"It is also contended that the old company was insolvent and that therefore plaintiff was not prejudiced by the consolidation or transfer. The consolidated company cannot raise this question. The question is not whether either of the old companies were solvent or insolvent, or whether both were solvent or insolvent. By the consolidation the new company is burdened with the debts of the old and the sole question then is, Has the new company sufficient assets to pay its debts, which will include those of the old companies?

Citing Grenell v. Detroit Gas Co., 112 Mich., 70:

"It paid nothing to its vendor for this plant, but dealt with its stockholders, paying to them in its own capital stock the price of its purchase, thus in effect closing out the corporate business and dividing its assets amongst its stockholders. * * * A corporation cannot sell all of its property and take in payment stock in a new corporation under an arrangement that has the effect of distributing the assets of the vendor amongst its stockholders to the exclusion and prejudice of its creditors; and a company making such a purchase, in consideration of an issue of its own stock to such stockholders, takes the property subject to the rights of the creditors. Such an arrangement is a diversion of a trust fund."

968 In Central Trust Co. v. Cincinnati Trust Co., 58 Fed., 500 and in 138 Fed. Rep. 804, Judge Taft, on p. 805 says,

"The well understood purpose of every reorganization agreement of this kind when entered into by all the stockholders and all the bondholders, is to wipe out all the obligations and readjust the debts and interests between the creditors and the stockholders, the bondholders thereby agreeing in effect to look to the railroad alone for the payment and accept the new mortgage deed on that in lieu, i. e., in payment of the old;" and the surplus funds from the sale were paid to the creditors and not to the bondholders.

In Higgins v. California Asphalt Co., 81 Pac., 1070, the Supreme Court of California held that the debts of a corporation cannot be avoided by any scheme of a new corporation organized by the incorporators or shareholders of the old corporation. Citing Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis & N. Co., 13 Fed. Rep., 516, which case is cited in Carson v. Hofins by the Supreme Court of Washington 87 Pac., 631-633, to the effect that the assets of an insolvent corporation constituted a trust fund for the benefit of its creditors, and no subterfuge will be permitted to prevent the distribution of such funds amongst the creditors.

Respondent claims that one of the clearest constructions of the questions before the Master is had in Chicago & Santa Fe Railroad Co. v. Ashling, 160 Ill. 373; 43 N. E.; where the court held that a consolidation and not a mere purchase by one corporation of the property of another, was effected by a transfer of all the property, stock and franchises of the latter under an arrangement by which the stock of the former is issued to the stockholders of the latter in exchange for their stock. And the court there held that a corporation which is in effect consolidated with another is estopped to assert that the proceedings for consolidation were not in accordance with the terms of the suit in an action against it to recover the amount of judgment against the first corporation on the ground that there was a consolidation. The court said:

"It is true that what was done must be looked to in order to determine whether there was a consolidation or not, but we must look to the results accomplished rather than to the means, steps or procedure by which these results have been obtained. P. 381. There is no magic in words. Merely calling a transaction a purchase and sale will not prevent it from being a consolidation."

In Montgomery-Webb Co. v. Dienelt, 133 Pa. State 585, it was held that, where one corporation sells its property to another, 969 thereby forming a new corporation composed mostly of the same persons, the transfer is fraudulent and void as to creditors of the old corporation and persons, who hold stock in the new corporation solely in consideration of their claims as creditors of the old, are charged with notice of the fraud and are not innocent purchasers as against creditors of the old corporation, who did not assent to the change. And it was held that the latter might follow the specific property of the old corporation as in other cases of transfers fraudulent as to creditors, the court saying:

"This was a transfer of property by a debtor with the retention of an interest in himself within the settled rule of law that makes such transactions void as to creditors."

Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo., 176, has been cited as stating the proper rule of law, in Berry v. K. C. Railroad Co., 52 Kans., 759, Id. 774.

In State ex rel. v. Smith, 173 Mo., 398, it is held:

The new company is the heir to the obligations of the old and if the new refuse to carry out the obligations of the latter, the obligee can maintain an action against it for the resulting damages in its own name."

In Powell v. North Missouri Company, 42 Mo. 63, the action was to recover as secretary of one of several corporations, which had been consolidated into the defendant company. The syllabus stated concisely the decision of the court. (3) Although by the old common law the dissolution of a corporation extinguished its debts, yet courts of equity in such cases will consider the property and effects as a trust fund for the payment of creditors and for the shareholders, into whosoever hands they may come. (4) A corporation cannot give away the effects belonging to it to the prejudice of creditors. A court of equity will follow the trust into the hands of other than bona fide creditors and purchasers. The case of Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo., 176 (1875), is, perhaps, the leading case in the State of Missouri upon this subject. This was a suit where the plaintiff had been employed by the Board of Education to teach school in a certain district at a stipulated price and for a stipulated period. He began work and received a part of the stipulated salary, but before payment was completed, the district was disorganized and its territorial limits merged into the City of Springfield. The petition set up that the city received the moneys coming to the old district and had exclusive care and control of all school property and that it succeeded to all the rights of the old district, and prayed judg-970 ment for the money due from the old district. On demurrer, it was held that the city of Springfield was liable for this debt, the court saying by Wagner, Judge:

"Where one corporation goes entirely out of existence by being annexed to or merged into another corporation, if no arrangements are made respecting the property and liabilities of the corporation that ceased to exist, the subsisting corporation will be entitled to all the property and be answerable for all the liabilities. * * * Its property passed into the hands of the defendant and when the benefits were taken the burdens were assumed."

In Hughes v. School District, 72 Mo., 643 (1880), Chief Justice Sherwood cites with approval the language of Judge Wagner; and in Evans v. Exchange Bank, 79 Mo., 182, the question coming again before the Supreme Court in 1883, was decided as before. The petition in this last case alleged a deposit by the plaintiff in a certain bank; that said bank went into liquidation; that thereafter the defendant bank was organized as a banking corporation and came into possession of and received for plaintiff's use as the successor of the first bank, the money so deposited. The court held that the petition stated a cause of action against the defendant. In the opinion, Judge Henry said:

"If, as alleged, defendant is the successor of the City National Bank, and the funds and property of the latter passed ino the hands of the former, its liability, to depositors of money in the latter bank has been expressly held in Hopper v. Moore, 42 Ia., 563. * * * Any other doctrine, it seems to us, would be monstrous. As well contend that because one has changed his name by legislative enactment, he thereby avoids all obligations incurred in his former name. * * * To prevent an escape from its liabilities by such contrivances would not be very creditable to the law."

In Kinion v. Kansas City Ry. Co., 39 M. A., 382, the Court held:

"Technically speaking, however, and for general purposes, it may be conceded that the consolidated company is a new corporation but, touching the business of the old companies, and the rights of their respective creditors, we think the consolidated company ought to be regarded as the continuation of the old companies under a new name, and that, to that extent, it ought not to be regarded as a new corporation. Mr. Morawetz, in his treatise on the law of corporations in discussing this question said: 'In considering the rights of the creditors of the original companies, the consolidated company 971 may be regarded as a continuation of each of these companies with a change of its name and constitution, and of the amount of its capital stock." 2 Morawetz on Private Corporations, Sec. 956."

In Berthold v. Land Co., 91 M. A., 233, Judge Goode said:

"It is a settled rule of equity jurisprudence that where one corporation is consolidated with another, or merged in another, which takes its property, such new corporation is bound to discharge the liabilities of the old one." (Citing Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo., 176; Hughes vs. School District, 72 Mo. 643; Evans vs. Exchange Bank, 79 Mo., 182). "The new company took those assets cum onere—impressed with a lien in favor of the creditors of the old; for they were acquired by a transaction outside the ordinary course of business."

The court further held to the same effect in Kearns v. Illinois Southern Ry. Co., 114 Mo. App., l. c., 167; Manny v. National Surety Co., 103 Mo. App., l. c., 721.

In Missouri Land Co. v. Reinhard, 114 Mo., 218 (1892), it was held that the capital stock and other property of a corporation are in equity as between creditors and stockholders, deemed to be a trust fund for the payments of its debts and where such property has been divided amongst the stockholders leaving debts unpaid, the stockholders are bound to refund; but the court says that the creditor of the corporation may enforce his claim against another corporation purchasing the property of the debtor, pending suit in the absence of actual fraud in the sale, holding that the remedy against either the stockholders or the new corporation is by bill in equity (which is in the form in which relief is sought in the pending case).

In State ex rel. v. Smith, 173 Mo., 398 (1902), and in Springfield v. Hobart, 98 Mo., 227, it was held that the relator in becoming surety for the obligation of one company to another, was bound to a consolidated company when that other company and a third corporation were consolidated into a new corporation. In rendering the decision, Burgess, Judge, cited- Kinion v. Railroad, 39 Mo. App., 382, used the language:

"Literally speaking, it is a new corporation, but substantially it is but a continuation of the old companies under a new name."

In I Thompson on Corporations, Sec. 565, it is stated to be the general rule that the new company succeeds to the rights, duties obligations and liabilities of the constituent companies, whether arising ex contracto or ex dilecto; and it has been held 972 further that the new company is the heir to the obligations of the old and that if the former refuse to carry out the obligations of the latter, obligee can maintain an action against it for the resulting damages.

And in the case of Hageman v. Southern Electric Co., 202 Mo., 249:

"In the Wabash case, the Supreme Court of the United States said: 'It was contended that the property of the Toledo and Wabash Railway Company was a trust fund for all its creditors, and that upon the consolidation the Toledo, Wabash and Western Railway Company took the property of the Toledo and Wabash Railway Company charged with the payment of all its debts. The property of a corporation is doubtless a trust fund for the payment of its debts in the sense that when the corporation is lawfully dissolved and all its business wound up, or when it is insolvent, all its creditors are entitled in equity to have their debts paid out of the corporate property before any distribution thereof among the stockholders. It is also true, in the case of a corporation, as in that of a natural person, that any conveyance of property to the debtor, without authority of law, and in fraud of existing creditors, is void as against them.'

(Railroad v. Ham, 114 U. S., l. c., 594). To the same effect are the following cases: Milling Co. v. Commission Co., 128 Mo., 491-495; Atlas National Bank v. Moran Packing Co., 138 Mo., 59; Calihan v. Powers, 133 Mo., 481-498; Schufeldt v. Smith, 131 Mo., l. c., 286; Meyer v. Folding Chair Co., 130 Mo., 195."

Status of Belt Company Before and After Foreclosure Sale.

4. It is not disputed that the Belt Company continued to be operated by its own officers and employees until September 6, 1900, when its properties were, by order of the United States Court at Kansas City, put in possession of Knott and Swinney, receivers, who continued their operations until the foreclosure sale and delivery of possession to the Southern Company in January, 1902. Knott subsequently resigning and Swinney continuing as receiver; and that, on April 27, 1903, said United States Circuit Court, in the Belt foreclosure suit, rendered a deficiency judgment for $242,854.40 against the Belt Company, and ordered execution thereon (Rec. Vol. —, p. —).

In the present suit, brought by the Cambria Company, September 6, 1900, the Belt Company, and the Trust Company, were made parties defendant, and, there was filed a stipulation signed by 973 the Trust Company and its receiver, providing for the filing of the ancillary bill in this case, and also providing that the Belt Company should be a party to the ancillary bill, so that the Trust Company might have any amount found due to it upon the accounting included in a judgment against the Belt Company. That stipulation, omitting the names of the parties, is as follows:

"It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between Stuart R. Knott and Edward F. Swinney, receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, complainants in the cross bill in the above entitled cause, and the defendants the Guardian Trust Company and Francis M. Black, its receiver, Second Street Improvement Company and Cambria Steel Company, as follows:

First. That the said complainants shall withdraw or dismiss their cross bill heretofore filed herein and shall file an amended cross bill, in the nature of an ancillary bill in this cause making the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company a co-plaintiff with them in said amended ancillary cross bill, and also making the Cambria Steel Company, the complainant in the original bill herein, a defendant in said amended ancillary crossbill, and that said amended ancillary crossbill shall be filed on or before the 15th day of November, 1901, and that the defendants, the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver, and the Second Street Improvement Company and the Cambria Steel Company, shall have leave to plead or answer to said amended ancillary cross bill, on or before the first Monday in December, 1901.

Second. That the accounting between the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and its receivers, and the Guardian Trust Company, and its receiver, sought by said amended ancillary cross bill, shall be expedited by all of the parties hereto, and whatever balance, if any, that may be found due to the said Guardian Trust Company or its receiver from the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company or its receivers shall be entered up in this cause as a judgment in favor of the said Trust Company and its receiver and against the Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers, without the necessity of presenting any claim therefor by way of cross bill, or other affirmative pleading; and whatever balance, if any, that may be found due to the said Suburban Belt Railroad Company, or its receivers, from said Guardian Trust Company, or its receivers, shall be entered up in this cause as a judgment in favor of the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers and against the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver.

974 Dated this — day of November, 1901."

Counsel for the Southern Company are insistent that a statutory consolidation of two companies must inevitably result in the extinction, as legal entities of the constituent companies, and the creation, ipso facto, of a new company, and, hence, that in view of the facts stated in regard to the continued existence of the Belt Company, it has not been extinguished in the sense that it would have been, had there been a statutory consolidation between it and another company into a new corporation.

Intervenor's Authorities on Consolidation Proposition.

5. The leading authorities cited by counsel for intervenor, against the alleged consolidation of the Belt and Southern Companies, are the following:

In construing the Missouri statutes, providing for the consolidation of corporations, Judge Pollock, in Jones v. Electric Co., 135 Fed., 153, says:

"It is fundamental law that the right to exercise such a vital power of a corporation as contemplates the turning over of all its corporate property, including its right to be a corporation and to hold and use its corporate powers, franchises and privileges, and which results, wherein employed, in the extinguishment of its corporative life, must be found in some positive plenary legislative grant either in the articles of association of the corporations consolidating or in the general law of the land. Such power cannot be implied. Nugent v. The Supervisors, 19 Wall., 241; Pearce v. Madison, etc., R. R. Co., 21 How., 441; Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall., 25. It is also firmly settled by authority, if ample statutory power is found wanting authorizing either of the constitutent companies to consolidate with each other, the entire consolidation is unauthorized and void. St. Louis Railroad v. Terre Haute Railroad, 145 U. S., 393; Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S., 677."

In Pullman Company v. Missouri Pacific, 115 U. S., 587, the court says (page 595):

"This (consolidation under the Missouri statute) clearly contemplates the actual dissolution of the old corporations and the creation of a new one to take their place."

The Supreme Court of Missouri, in the case of State ex rel. v.

Lesueur, 145 Mo., 322, 328, in speaking of the consolidation of railroads under the Missouri statute, says:

"We are of the opinion that the consolidation, when completed in the manner provided, does create a new corporation, 975 just as effectually as any other mode allowed by our laws. The new corporation owns all the property, whereas the old companies only owned each its part. * * * By the consolidation the old companies are dissolved, and a new corporation formed."

The court there held that, upon the consolidation, the new company thus formed was required, by virtue of Section 21 of Article X of the Constitution, to pay into the State treasury the fees provided for upon the organization of corporations.

In Railroad Company v. Missouri, 152 U. S., 301, the court, in speaking of the Missouri statute, said:

"Looking at the act in question in this case, we find that by Section 1, any Missouri railroad company, whose track should connect with the road of an adjoining state, was authorized to make and enter into an agreement with such connecting company for the consolidation of the stock of the respective companies whose tracks should be so connected, making one company of the two, whose stock should be so consolidated upon such terms, conditions and stipulations as might be mutually agreed between them; that by Section 2 'such consolidation shall not be made unless the terms and provisions thereof shall be approved by a majority of the stock, or the holders of a majority of the capital stock in each of said companies whose stock shall be consolidated'; that by Section 3 the board of directors were authorized to adopt by resolution a new corporate name for the consolidated company, and call in the certificates of stock then outstanding in each company, and exchange them for stock in the new company; and, providing that a copy of the consolidation agreement and the name adopted for the new company 'shall be filed with the secretary of state, and shall be conclusive evidence of such consolidation, and of the corporate name of the consolidated company.' It is difficult to see how the legislature could provide more clearly for the extinguishment of the prior companies and the formation of a new one than by providing that the two companies shall become one, that new certificates of stock shall be issued in exchange for the stock of the constituent companies, and that the consolidation agreement shall be recorded with the secretary of state as the charter of the new company. In our opinion, this was the effect of the act in question."

In Adams v. Railroad Company, 24 So., 211, it is said:

"It is in the interest of clearness of definition that consolidation should be limited to signify such union of two or more corporations as necessarily results in the creation of a third new corpora- 976 tion, and, as we understand the decision, this is what is known as the American doctrine, and the better view."

In Vicksburg Telephone Co., v. Telephone Co., 30 So., 725, the court says (728):

"There seems to be a great confusion as to the differences between consolidation and merger and sale. Rightly understood, there never can be a consolidation of corporations except where all the constituent companies cease to exist as separate corporations, and a new corporation, to-wit: the consolidated corporation, comes into being. A merger, rightly understood, is not the equivalent of consolidation at all, but exists where one of the constituent companies remains in being, absorbing or merging in itself all the other constituent companies."

In Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co., 150 Fed., 775, it is held:

"There is a distinct difference between a consolidation and a merger of two railroad companies. In a consolidation, both go out of existence as separate corporations, and a new corporation is created, which takes their place and property; while in case of a merger one loses its identity by absorption in the other, which remains in existence, and succeeds to its property, and issues its own stock to the stockholders of the merged company."

In this connection it may be stated that it has been persistently suggested by counsel for the intervenor, that if a statutory consolidation was effected of the Southern and Belt Companies, it would, under the authorities quoted, result in those two companies going out of existence, and the formation of a new corporation, which, of course, cannot be true, as the Southern Company is existent and operating its railroad system, and, the respondent is now here suing it and the Belt Companies, and seeking to obtain a judgment against one or both of them, which is at variance with their corporate nonexistence. In fairness, however, to the Trust Company, it should be stated that the real basis of its charge that there was a consolidation, arises not only from the ownership by the Southern of the stocks and bonds of the Belt, but, also, by reason of the reorganization proceedings, which resulted in the acquisition of all the Belt properties under circumstances, which, it is alleged, constituted a consolidation.

Intervenor's Ownership of Belt Stock.

6. The mere ownership by the Southern of stock in the Belt Company would not be sufficient to justify the conclusion that 977 there was either a partial or full statutory consolidation, merger or other union of corporate interests between the two companies. It is a well known fact that many railroad systems are interested, in greater or less degree, in the stocks and bonds of subsidiary companies. As one of the results of the modified plan of reorganization, the reorganization Committee became the holder, and afterwards the Southern Company became the owner of, nearly all of the stocks and bonds of the Belt Company, which was expressly authorized and permitted by said Section 1061 (R. S. Mo. 1899).

In Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Missouri Pacific Railway Co., 115 U. S., 587, it appears that the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company acquired and owned the capital stock of the St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern, and the question arose as to whether the Missouri Pacific road controlled the Iron Mountain by ownership, lease or otherwise, and the Missouri statute concerning consolidation of corporations was drawn in question. The court held that both companies, notwithstanding such stock ownership, continued to be separate, independent companies, and that the obligations of one company were not enforcible against the other.

In Peterson v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad Company, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep., 515, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in April, 1907, it appears that the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway Company owned a controlling interest in the stock in the Chicago, Rock Island & Gulf Railroad Company, a corporation of the State of Texas. Service of summons was had upon an agent of the latter in an action against the former upon the theory that there was an identity of interest, or an agency, sufficient to warrant the proceedings. The court held that the attempted service was not sufficient to give jurisdiction, saying:

"This record discloses that the officers and agents of the Gulf Company controlled its management. The fact that the Pacific Company owns the controlling amount of stock of the Gulf Company and has thus the power to change the management does not give it present control of the corporate property and business. * * * The conduct and control of the business in Texas was intrusted to the Gulf Company. As the largest stockholder the Pacific Company had an interest in that business, but a separate corporation had been legally created in Texas, with authority to make contracts and control its own affairs and carry on its own business. This separate corporation had its own officers, a large amount of its own property, was responsible for its contracts and to persons with whom it dealt."

978 In Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Co. v. Cochran, 43 Kan., 225, it appeared that the company owned the capital stock of the Southern Kansas Railway Company. An action was brought against the Santa Fe to recover for personal injuries occasioned by the employees of the Southern Kansas. It was held that the fact that the Santa Fe owned the capital stock of the Southern Kansas did not render it liable in the action, the court holding where the rights and powers of a railroad in relation to a connecting road are those of a stockholder merely, the former, as such stockholder, is not liable for the negligence of the latter.

To the same effect see:

Commonwealth v. Bridge Co., 64 Atl., 909, 911.
Ulmer v. Lime Rock Railroad Co., 57 Atl., 1001, 1006.
Exchange Bank v. Construction Co., 25 S. E., 326.
Jessup v. Illinois Central, 36 Fed., 735, 741."

It would seem, then, that the Southern Company had the lawful right to own and hold the stocks and bonds of the Belt Company and that such ownership of itself did not have the effect of constituting a consolidation of the two companies, as both corporations continued to exist, and each controlling its own property, through its own officers, until September 6, 1900, when the receivers were appointed for the Belt Company, and which receivers continued to operate the property until January 1, 1902, at which time the Southern Company, as the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, received the commissioner's deed and entered into possession of the property and has continued its operation.

The distinction between a statutory consolidation, and the acquisition by one company of the securities of another company, as provided in said Sections 1059 and 1061 (R. S. Mo. 1899), is clearly stated in Burge v. Ry. Co., 100 M. A., 464, in which the court say:

"There are two methods recognized by the statutes of Missouri, by which railroad corporations may become associated or merged. By Section 1059 of the Revised Statutes of 1899, provision is made for the amalgamation of two or more railroad companies in this state, and the formation of one company. Section 1061 contemplates the manner adopted by defendant in this case, and expressly legalizes the extension of the line of any railroad company organized under the laws of this state, by acquiring by purchase any line of railroad within or without this state, and the acquisition and ownership of the assets and property of the company so bought. Under the section of consolidation (1059) the absorbing corporation succeeds to all the powers, rights and property of the consolidated companies and becomes subject to all their obligations and liabilities. Under the section making valid the purchase by one railroad company of the line and property of another railroad company, no responsibility is imposed on the purchasing company for the obligations of its vendor. It is manifest that no statutory liability resulted from the mere purchase by defendant, and in the absence of averment and proof that it acquired and succeeded to the line and property of the selling company otherwise than as a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration, the transaction in no wise differs in legal effect from the purchase of any other property, realty or personalty and no duty is developed by law upon defendant to respond to the liabilities, whether in tort or in contract, of the selling corporation. A mere purchase in good faith for value, imposes no such obligations. Howell v. North Mo. R. R. Co., 42 Mo., 63; Hoard v. C. O. R. R., 123 U. S., 222; Fogg v. Blair, 133 U. S., 534."

979

In the Burge case, the court construes said section 1059 as providing for the amalgamation of two or more railroad companies in this state, and the formation of one company. The statutory corporate formalities, requisite to effect such purposes, are plainly stated, and, are such as to really appeal to one's intelligent judgment as being reasonably necessary to protect and safeguard both the corporate and individual interests involved in the consolidation of corporations, desiring to unite into one corporation. In the case at bar, the proofs in the record do not show the necessary corporate action, or in fact, any action whatever, on the part of the Belt Company, providing for the terms and conditions of a consolidation with the Southern Company, or any other company; in fact, there was no corporate action whatever as to the alleged consolidation. In as much as there was no contract between the two companies, it necessarily follows that there could not be any approval or ratification of it by a majority in interest of the shareholders, either at a stockholders' meeting, called for that purpose, or by the approval in writing of such contract by a majority of the stock interested.

It is not pretended that the Belt Company, as a corporation, was a party to the reorganization plan and agreement, but simply that its stockholders became depositors thereunder. In other words, there was no regular corporate proceedings, as provided by the statute, but merely the individual stockholders' action, and, through which latter, it is claimed by the respondent, there was a substantial compliance with the Missouri Statute.

980 After a careful examination of all the authorities, cited by counsel, the Master is not convinced that there has been a statutory consolidation, as charged in respondent's answer to the intervening petition.

If he is right in such conclusion, then how can there be a de jure consolidation in this case, which could only arise from a compliance with the Missouri Statute? If merely a de facto consolidation, or some kind of amalgamation of interests has been effected between the Belt and Southern Companies, then other questions, affecting the Trust Company's connection with the reorganization plan and agreement, may be determinative of respondent's claim against the intervenor for the Belt indebtedness; and these questions are hereinafter considered.

There can be no doubt as to the soundness of the proposition that, where the assets of a company have been, by voluntary corporate action, removed beyond the reach of its creditors, the latter can, by bill in equity, follow such assets and subject them to the payment of their debt, as stated in Berthold v. Lumber Co., 91 M. A., 238, as follows:

"It is a settled rule of equity jurisprudence that where one corporation is consolidated with another, or merged in another, which takes its property, such new corporation is bound to discharge the liabilities of the old one."

The principle invoked by respondent is unquestionably applicable to all cases in which the assets of a corporation are by it voluntarily turned over to another company in disregard of the rights of the former's creditors, but, even in such cases, the liability of the company taking such assets would only extend to the value thereof in excess of any contract liens thereon.

In other words, there would not be created a general liability but simply a limited liability to the extent of the fair value of the assets, improperly or wrongly diverted from the payment of the claims of the creditors.

Effect of Foreclosure Sale and Intervenors' Purchase of Belt Properties.

7. If there was no strictly statutory consolidation in this case then the next question for consideration is whether a consolidation was effected by reason of the foreclosure of the Belt mortgage, the sale thereunder, and the purchase by the intervenor of the Belt properties.

It is not disputed that the respondent Trust Company was a party to the foreclosure proceedings, and that the decree of fore-981 closure was and is in full force and effect and is conclusive as against the respondent in respect to the existence of the mortgage, the indebtedness secured thereby, and its non-payment. No issue has been made by the pleadings or otherwise as to the regularity or validity of the foreclosure sale, at which the intervenors acquired the mortgaged properties and assets of the Belt and allied companies, forming the Belt system. In the legal enforcement of the mortgage lien, securing the bondholders, the properties of these companies, respectively, were subjected to the payment of their bonded indebtedness, were sold at public vendue to the highest bidder, and the purchase price was paid therefor, as provided in and by the foreclosure decree made in this court, and, thereupon, the title to said properties was conveyed to the purchasers at such foreclosure sales. The proceeds of the sales were, as required by the decrees, paid into court and there constituted a trust fund, in lieu of the properties sold, and subject to distribution by the court, pursuant to the mortgage liens.

If the Southern Company had acquired the Belt's properties outside of a foreclosure, and without giving sufficient consideration therefor, then equity would follow such properties into the intervenor's possession, and, to the extent of their value, as above stated, it would apply the same to the satisfaction of the Belt indebtedness; but that condition of things is not involved in this case.

As to the effect of foreclosure proceedings on the Belt roads, the following cases are in line, and, especially, the Wisconsin case, which is exhaustive in respect to many of the questions raised by the respondent, and, for that reason, it is copied more extensively than would otherwise have been done.

In Hoard v. Chesapeake & Ohio R. Co., 123 U. S., 222, it is held: "A railway company organized to receive, hold and operate a railroad sold under foreclosure of a mortgage, in the absence of a statute or contract, is not obliged to pay the debts and perform the obligations of the corporation whose property the purchasers buy."

The Supreme Court of this state in Dickey v. Railway Co., 122 Mo., 223, followed the ruling in the Hoard case, where there was a deed of conveyance by one railroad company to another, without the intervention of foreclosure proceedings.

In Holton v. Railroad Co., 25 Mo. App., 322, cited with approval in the Dickey case, supra, it appears that Holton conveyed to the Mississippi Valley & Western Railway Company, a right of way over his land for the consideration of $100.00 in money, and 982 the company's agreement to furnish him an annual pass during his natural life over its railway. Three years later, the property and franchises of the railway company were sold under foreclosure to one Stone, who thereafter sold the railroad property and franchises to the St. Louis, Keokuk & Northwestern Railway Company, whose agents in recognition of plaintiff's claim, issued to him an annual pass until the first of January, 1885, when they declined to issue it to him any further. He then brought suit against the last named company for damages for failure to comply with his contract with the Mississippi Valley & Western Railway Company, and, it was held that he could not recover; that the defendant, by purchasing the railway property from Stone, who had purchased it at the foreclosure sale, did not become liable to pay any of the debts of the Mississippi Valley & Western Railway Company, unless it agreed to pay them, and no such agreement had been alleged or shown.

In National Foundry Works v. Oconto Water Co., 105 Wis., 48, the language of the court, beginning at page 53, is as follows:

"Appellant's counsel mainly rely on the proposition that where one corporation goes out of existence by being annexed to or merged in another, no arrangements being made respecting the payment of the liabilities of the former, the latter will be entitled to all the property and answerable for all the liabilities. That is familiar. No need exists to go outside this state for authority to support it. Knight v. Ashland, 61 Wis., 233. In that case, speaking of the devolution of liability of a town that had passed out of existence, upon an existing town to which the territory of the former had been attached, it was said that the authorities are that the simple vacation of a town by legislative enactment, and the attachment of its territory to another town without any direction as to the payment of the liabilities of the former, renders the latter liable for such liabilities. Other cases are to the same effect. Schriber v. Langlade, 66 Wis., 616; Butternut v. O'Malley, 50 Wis., 333; Pennison v. C. M. & St. P. R. R. Co., 93 Wis., 344. However, the applicability of that principle to the facts of this case is not perceived. The Oconto Water Company did not go out of existence either by being annexed to or merged in another corporation. True, it went out of business, and for all the purposes of its organization was destroyed by the enforcement of the Andrews & Whitcomb mortgages, but not by any contract with the defendant corporation, or any arrangement with it or any person or party with whom or to which it was a party, by which the mere destruction of the corporation was of any benefit to such person or party, or by which such person or party 983 obtained any property or right not paid for at its full value by a cancellation of the mortgage indebtedness which antedated the lien of the plaintiff so far as relates to the owners of the mortgages or the persons claiming under them. There was no merger of corporate interests, or attachment of the rights of one to those of another; but one was, to all intents and purposes, destroyed as an artificial body, and another corporation, new and distinct from the old one, was created, with such powers as it was the bona fide purchaser of, under proceedings adverse to the old corporation, and which it had the right to exercise by force of the statu-e. A moment's consideration of the reason of the rule invoked by plaintiff will show that it has no room to operate here. It is a rule of equity and to prevent fraud; so, where all the property of one corporation is transferred to another without other consideration than that growing out of or incidental to the consolidation, the presumption arises either that it was the intention of the parties that the successor corporation would assume the payment of the debts that were equitably a claim upon the property succeeded to, or that the transaction was a fraud on creditors and voidable as to them. The idea is that a successor corporation receives benefits from such a succession equitably applicable to the payment of the debts of the former proprietor and, therefore, to the extent of such benefits, is liable for such debts. From that, a contract liability is implied, which the successor corporation cannot be heard to deny, otherwise it would be allowed to defend on the ground of such wrong-doing as, of itself, would avoid the transaction altogether as to creditors, on the ground of fraud. As said in Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S., 514, 'The corporate property passes into the hands of its successor, and where the benefits are taken the liabilities are assumed, the rule being that the successor who takes the benefits must take the same cum onore, and it cannot deny that it is liable for the attendant burdens.' Here, if the Andrews & Whitcomb mortgages were valid liens upon the water works property paramount to plaintiff's claim, so that by the enforcement of the mortgages, the purchaser at the foreclosure sale only obtained the benefit of the mortgage security, they became possessed of no benefit that they did not fully pay for, or anything that was equitable applicable to the payment of plaintiff's claim. The essential or prior equity of plaintiff in the property, which is an absolute essential to the liability of the new owner of such property for the debts of its predecessor, does not exist, so the principle invoked does not apply.

The learned counsel for appellant, overlooking, as it seems, the reason of the rule which makes a successor corporation liable 984 for the debts of its predecessor, seek to apply it as broadly as the literal sense of the language of the proposition of law will permit, that is, to take in every case of a corporation that succeeds to the property of another, regardless of whether it thereby takes anything of value to which creditors have a legal or equitable right, or whether the succession is by contract and voluntary or adverse and involuntary as to the old proprietor. * * * The Court held that such proposition was directly contrary to the whole purpose of the statute; that the legislative intent was to give full effect to the mortgage as security, while the construction contended for would destroy the security; that the proceedings under such a law are adverse to the old corporate organization, which, of itself, distinguishes them from those that render a successor corporation liable for the debts of its predecessor; and that there is no good reason why the two situations should ever be confounded. That was affirmed in Smith V. C. & N. W. R. Co., 18 Wis., 17. In that case there was the additional element that the mortgage sale was for the benefit of the stockholders and creditors under an agreement that there should be a reorganized corporation in which the stockholders and creditors of the old company might participate. Yet the court held that the sale cut off all the rights of the old company and its creditors; that the reorganized company was a new and entirely independent organization against which the creditors of the old company had no claim whatever except such as they obtained by the agreement entitling them to become stockholders in such company * * * If the learned circuit judge interpreted the statute correctly, we cannot see why the defendant corporation is not liable for the debts of the old company, if it is indebted. If its liability goes to that extent, the act would be inoperative and useless in most cases; for no purchasers of the assets of an insolvent corporation would take the risk of organizing under the act when to do so would make them liable for the debts of the old corporation. We think the purpose of the act was to secure to purchasers at judicial sales the right to use and enjoy the franchises which had been conveyed to them in form under a judgment or decree. To the same effect are Wright v. M. & St. P. R. Co., 25 Wis. 46; Gilman v. S. & F. du L. R. Co., 37 Wis., 317; Pennison v. C. M. & St. P. R. R. Co., 93 Wis., 344; Menasha v. M. & N. R. Co., 52 Wis., 414; Memphis W. Co., v. Magnes & Co., 83 Tenn., 37; Hoard v. C. & O. Ry., 123 U. S., 222; Chesapeake & O. R. Co., v. Miller, 114 U. S., 176; Cook v. D., G. H. & M. R. Co., 43 Mich., 349; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Shirley, 54 Tex., 125; Thornton v. Wabash R. Co., 81 N. Y., 462; Glenn v. Statler, 42 Iowa, 107.

985 The foregoing is but a small part of the numerous cases in the books on the question under consideration. They show how frequently the principle, which protects the right of creditors to be paid out of corporate property against schemes worked out by contract or by legislative enactment to merge one corporation or all the property of one corporation in another has been confounded with the circumstances of a corporation by adverse proceedings to enforce a mortgage upon corporate property, becoming legitimately possessed of it by a sale, cutting off the rights of creditors having a junior or no lien on said property. In the former case the new possessor of the property takes what the creditors have a right to resort to for the satisfaction of their claims; in the latter such possessor takes only that for which full value was parted with to the old company at the time the mortgage was placed on the property, or thereafter, pursuant to its terms. In the former circumstances the proceedings are all voluntary; in the latter, involuntary and adverse. The defendant became the bona fide owner for full value, of the property of the Oconto Water Company, and all the franchises possessed by it for the profitable use and enjoyment of such property. The purchasers at the foreclosure sale took title to the property with the incidental right conferred by Sec. 1788, Stats. 1898, to form a new corporation to take the same by assignment and possess the rights of the old organization. When the mortgages were given, Sec. 1788, Stats. 1898, became a part of them and a very material element in the value of the security. The right guaranteed by such section was as much a part of the mortgage security as the tangible property described. The theory of the appellant is that the statute, clothing a corporation, circumstanced as the defendant is, with the right to exercise the powers, privileges and franchises possessed by the old corporation, which it shall have acquired bona fide, by mortgage sale, or by assignment based on a title acquired through such sale, instead of adding to the value of a corporate mortgage covering all the property of the corporation, tangible and intangible, impairs it and may destroy it, because a new corporation cannot be organized with the benefits of the statute without incurring the penalty of being liable for all unsecured indebtedness of the old corporation, whether before the foreclosure sale the owner of the mortgage indebtedness had a first lien on the property or not. In other words, that the statute not only operates to prevent the general creditors from being cut off by the foreclosure proceedings, but transposes the parties so as to give the general creditors a claim on the property paramount to the mortgage. The statute will not admit of a construction leading to such an absurd result even if the question were an open one, and it is not, as we have seen. The manifest purpose of it, as indicated, is to add to the value of a corporate mortgage of the kind under consideration. That is too plain to admit of serious controversy. Candor compels us to say that we do not think that the contrary theory merits the consideration we have given to it, since its fallacy is so glaringly apparent and has so often been exposed in this and other courts."

986

Counsel for the Trust Company rely upon the case of Chicago Ry. Co., v. Ashling, 43 N. E., 373, in which it appears that the St. Louis Company conveyed all its physical property and franchises to the Santa Fe Company without consideration, and without making any provision whatever for the payment of its debts. Mary L. Ashling recovered a judgment against the St. Louis Company for the negligent killing of her husband, and in the suit against the Santa Fe Company it was held that the conveyance to it amounted to a consolidation under the Illinois statute, which, however, does not provide for a statutory consolidation, or state the method or manner in which consolidations are to be affected. The Santa Fe Company did not, as in the case at bar, acquire the St. Louis Company's properties at a foreclosure sale thereof, and pay the purchase price into court for the benefit of those entitled to it, nor as the result of a bona fide sale to it, in which the consideration passed to the St. Louis company, and stood in lieu of its property, and so became subject to the claim of creditors. Hence, it would seem that the Ashling case is distinguishable from this case, and could hardly be considered as an authority applicable to the construction of the Missouri consolidation statute, respecting the creation of a new company.

The Master has endeavored to make a critical examination of all the authorities submitted by counsel on the consolidation issue, distinguishing, as best he could, the conclusions of the court in each case by reference to the particular points involved therein, so as to reach a proper conclusion as to the legal significance of the specific transaction entered into by the Southern and Belt Companies, pursuant to the reorganization plan and agreement, and, including the foreclosure sales of the properties, comprising the Belt system. In his opinion, there was no consolidation effected by what was done by the corporations involved, but that the transaction, when considered in its entirety, was in fact a reorganization scheme, intended to bring about a certain union or combination of properties, by which combination additional strength would be given them as a whole, as they were all dependent upon each other for the present as well as future railroad advantages and benefits; but such 987 combination or union of these properties was to be consummated only after their purchase at the foreclosure sales under the mortgage liens thereon, thereby intending to first acquire the titles, pursuant to the contract liens on the properties, and then utilize the properties so purchased by uniting and combining them in one corporation, which would be able to realize better results from the joint operation of the roads concerned than had been done in their separate operations. It will be readily conceded that, under the facts shown in evidence, in respect to the capitalization and bonded and other indebtedness of the different railroads, involved in the reorganization scheme, in connection with their earning capacities and expenses of operation, it was a wise policy that dictated the organization of one great corporation to manage the whole, and the only question in dispute at this time is as to the effect of such reorganization arrangement upon the rights of the Trust Company as a creditor of the Belt Company.

The equitable rule, to which respondent's counsel refer, aims at the prevention of fraud, and is applicable wherever corporate property is transferred to another corporation "without any other consideration than that growing out of, or incidental to, the consolidation" in which event the legal presumption arises, either that the successor corporation assumes the payment of the debts that should have been paid out of or from the property so transferred, or that the transaction was fraudulent and should be avoided as to creditors. The successor corporation, having received actual substantial benefits belonging to the company, transferring its property, and equitably applicable to the payment of its debts, should, to the extent of such benefits, be liable for such debts, but this principle cannot be invoked where the transfer is involuntary and for sufficient consideration, for in such case the creditors have no legal or equitable right to be protected in the absence of such fraud, actual or constructive, as should impeach the transaction in the interest of bona fide creditors.

The following authorities from the U. S. Circuit Court support these general propositions:

In Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Louisville Ry. Co., 103 Fed. 110, Circuit Judge Woods delivering the opinion, the syllabus is,

"A plan of reorganization made by railroad bondholders for the purpose of purchasing the property at foreclosure sale, and by which stockholders in the old company are permitted to convert their stock into stock of the new company on the payment of a stipulated difference, is not for that reason fraudulent and void as to general creditors of the old company, where it does not appear that 988 any of the stockholders, as such, were parties to the plan, that it caused or in any way affected the foreclosure proceedings, or deprived the general creditors of any rights so that whatever rights, if any, are secured to the stockholders are at the expense of the bondholders and not the unsecured creditors."

In this case, it appears that a receiver was appointed for the purpose of preserving the unity of the railroad property involved. Subsequently, default was made in the payment of interest on the company's bonds, but "before the filing of bills for foreclosure, a committee of bondholders was appointed, who devised a scheme of reorganization, in pursuance of which they made a contract with a syndicate, which included some of the officers of the company by which such syndicate agreed to purchase for cash certain bonds and stocks of the new company, and to deliver certain of such stock to stockholders of the old company, who should elect to exchange their stock therefor, and to pay a stipulated sum per share in cash. The plan was carried into execution, and the bondholders' committee purchased the property at the sale under foreclosure decree for a sum much less than the mortgage indebtedness thereon. The company was unquestionably insolvent and it was not shown that such arrangement in any way affected the foreclosure proceedings; nor did it appear that stock in the new company received by the stockholders in the old was of any greater value than the cash payment required to be made by them therefor. Held that such arrangement did not constitute a fraud upon the unsecured creditors of the old company, nor operate to their injury, so as to entitle them to place the property again in the hands of a receiver, to be operated for their benefit until their claims were discharged."

In this case, Judge Woods cites with approval the statement of Judge Jenkins in Paton v. R. R. Co., (C. C.) 85 Fed., 838, as follows:

"The question is presented whether any plan of reorganization can be sustained, which does not comprehend the protection of the rights of general creditors of the corporation, or in other words, whether bondholders have the right to agree with stockholders upon terms, which may be agreed upon to give the latter an interest in the new corporation, without including creditors in such plan of reorganization or at least tendering them the chance of joining therein. I fail to see any just reason why, in the absence of fraud or oppression, such arrangements should not be upheld in a court of equity. It was competent for these bondholders to exclude stockholders from any agreement. It was also competent for 989 them to exclude creditors. The bondholders, under different mortgages could agree among themselves, without reference to creditors or stockholders; and in case of agreement with stockholders, unless the scheme is clearly one to secure to the stockholders that which should justly go to the creditors—unless it can be said that it was a scheme to defraud creditors—I perceive no reason which should justify denunciation of the plan. To the contrary, such plans or reorganization have met with general approval, because they tend to avoid sacrifice and loss and are beneficial to the public. Robinson v. Railroad Co. (C. C.) 28 Fed., 340; McIntosh v. R. R. Co., (C. C.), 34 Fed., 582; Central Trust Co. of N. Y. v. U. S. Rolling Stock Co., (C. C.) 56 Fed., 5, 7; Penn Transp. Co.'s Appeal, 101 Pa. St. 576."

In Armour v. Bennets' Sons (C. C.), 123 Fed., 56, Circuit Judge

Severens delivered the opinion, and it was held that a new corporation, regularly organized by the officers and stockholders of one existing for the purpose of acquiring its property and assets and which did acquire the same by purchase at judicial sales, cannot be treated as a continuance of the old corporation, and liable at law for its debts, whatever may be its liability in equity to creditors of the old corporation, in respect to the property, if fraud is shown in the transfer.

The Court said:

"They (meaning the stockholders) cannot gain profits from the assets of the corporation, to the detriment of the lawful rights of creditors any more than any other person can. To be sure the relation of the stockholders, and especially of the directors, to the subject matter, may afford reason for close scrutiny of such transactions; but in the end the question is one of fair dealings in the exercise of a legal right (1 Morawetz on Corp. par. 811). All this is inconsistent with the idea that a new corporation, organized with the intention of acquiring for it the assets of an existing one, must, upon acquiring them, be regarded as the old corporation in a new dress and so liable for the old debts."

The Southern was, and is, in all essentials, a new corporation, (and not the continuation of the old Belt Company), organized, primarily, to acquire, hold and operate the Gulf road, with the necessary terminals at Kansas City and the Gulf of Mexico, and, contemplating the ultimate ownership of the Belt system at Kansas City, if the same could be acquired in the manner provided in the reorganization plan; and it was understood that all these roads had to be bought by the reorganization Committee, at the 990 various foreclosure sales thereof, which were made subject to the proper orders of court providing therefor.

There was, then, no merger of corporate interests by corporate action, between the Belt and Southern Companies. There were no transfers of the properties of the Belt system by the corporations owning them, otherwise than through the foreclosure sales, regularly and legally made, and the considerations paid for such properties were large and sufficient; being approximately the full amount of the bonded indebtedness upon each railroad foreclosed; and, in this connection, it may be properly suggested that there has been produced in this cause, considerable testimony, tending to show that all the roads, forming the Belt system, were extravagantly built and were bonded largely in excess of their actual cost, though such fact, even if proven, does not determine their value at the time of the several foreclosure sales, but could only be considered along with all the other proofs, if any, as to the real actual values of the foreclosed properties, at the times they were sold.

Summarizing the proofs, as the Master finds them to be, he has reached the following conclusions, in respect to the effect of the foreclosure sales of the properties comprising the Belt system, and now owned by the Southern Company:

1. The foreclosure sales were legally made, and the Trust Company, though a party to the foreclosure proceedings, has not at any time objected to the regularity thereof, or the sufficiency of the amounts received for the properties sold.

2. In the record there is no direct testimony by either party showing the actual, fair, reasonable value of said properties at the time of, or prior to, the foreclosure of the mortgage liens thereon.

3. The union, or combination, of all the roads of the Belt system and Gulf road into the Southern Company, pursuant to the reorganization scheme, created and gave to the reorganized system a much larger value than was the aggregate value of all said roads as separate institutions, managed as they were prior to the date they were sold to the reorganization Committee; and, further, that, by reason of the additional value given to said properties as parts of the reorganized railroad system, the Southern Company was enabled to issue its thirty million dollars of bonds, twenty-one million of preferred stock, and thirty million of common stock, the whole aggregating eighty-one million, par value, and approximately, more than four times the amount paid by the Committee for said properties at the foreclosure sales thereof.

991 4. There is no sufficient proof, in the record, showing what was the market or other value of the stocks and bonds of the Southern Company, which were given to the stockholders of the Belt Company, though such values, if shown, would be no fair criterion on which to base the actual value of the Belt property, turned over to the Southern Company, in the manner hereinabove stated.

5. If respondent's contention is correct to the effect that there was a consolidation, de facto, by which the intervenor became liable for the Belt indebtedness, still there is no proof in the record to show that the Belt properties, sold under the mortgage foreclosures, were worth anything in excess of what they brought at the sale; and in the absence of such proofs, the Master finds that the amounts, for which they were, respectively, sold, was and is their fair, market value at that time.

6. There is no evidence in the record showing actual frauds either at or in the inception of the reorganization scheme, or in any proceeding thereunder; including the foreclosures of the mortgage liens on the properties sold and the conveyance to the Southern Company.

7. That, for their mutual protection and self interest, the bondholders interested in all the railroad companies involved, had the right to combine together for the purpose of acquiring all the properties thereof, and then uniting them in one system, and without consulting either the stockholders or creditors of the constituent companies owning such railroads; and, furthermore, that it was competent for the bondholders, in furtherance of their own business interests, to use the stocks and bonds of the new company as they saw fit, provided, that it is not shown that in so doing, it was part of their scheme to give something of value to the stockholders that should have gone to the creditors.

8. It is not shown in the record that the reorganization scheme in any way deprived the unsecured creditors of any rights they would otherwise have had in case such scheme had never been consummated. There is no pretense that the Trust Company was prevented from bidding on, or buying, said properties, because of any secret understandings, nor is there any satisfactory proof in the record to the effect that the conduct of the Trust Company, in respect to said foreclosure sales, was in any wise changed or altered on account of the reorganization plan and agreement.

992 As to Reorganization Plan and Agreement Expressly Providing for the Payment of the Floating Debt of the Constituent Companies.

8.—It is claimed by the Trust Company that it appears from the reorganization plan and agreement that the floating debts of the constituent companies were to be paid, whether more or less than $475,000.00, the amount named therein, which was simply in the nature of an estimation. The intervenor contends that no such liability was intended to be, or was in fact, created by the reorganization plan. The relations of the parties interested will be helpful in determining the meaning of that part of the agreement. The reorganization Committee was merely an agency constituted by such bondholders and stockholders of the Gulf Company and its allied companies, as saw fit to act in concert under the proposed reorganization plan and agreement, which were expressed to be for the benefit of the participating bondholders and stockholders. General or unsecured creditors of those companies were not parties thereto, the manifest purpose and object being to protect the interests of the stockholders and bondholders of those companies, which had become insolvent, and which then or shortly afterwards would have to be administered by the court. It became necessary for them to devise some plan for the disposition of the properties belonging to those companies, which would preserve them for the benefit of stockholders and bondholders, which could only be done through concerted action on the part of the security holders, and hence, the modified Philadelphia Plan of November 7, 1899, was adopted for that purpose.

As heretofore stated, the reorganization agreement gave the Committee plenary power to alter or modify the terms as might seem necessary or desirable, the intention being to include the Belt terminals, as heretofore stated, if sufficient of its securities were deposited with the Committee, otherwise, arrangements for other terminals at Kansas City were to be made. The provision in the plan, as to using $475,000.00 for paying floating debts of the constituent companies, was, perhaps, more in the nature of a detail in the general plan, so as to advise the depositing security holders of the probable disposition of the moneys, to be realized from the securities to be issued by the new company, as there is nothing in the plan, or in the agreement, indicating the amount of the floating debts to be paid, or their nature, and certainly nothing as to the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company. The provision in the plan relating to certain securities, aggregating $3,000,000, and reserved in 993 the treasury for future requirements, might properly be considered as another such detail in the plan.

It is urged by counsel for the Southern Company, that, in as much as the reorganization plan and agreement were for the benefit solely of the security holders of the properties involved, it necessarily follows that the Trust Company can claim no privity of contract, nor can it maintain an action upon it or claim any right or benefit from it.

In St. Louis v. Contracting Co., 101 S. W., 6, the Supreme Court of Missouri held:

"There is a broad distinction between the principle involved where a contract is entered into between two parties for their own use and benefit, and where they made a similar contract for the benefit of a third party. A breach of the first would create no cause of action in favor of a third party, even though he was thereby deprived of large benefits which would have flown to him had the contract been performed; while in the latter case the breach would create a cause of action in his favor, even though the benefits he would have received from its performance might have been insignificant as compared to those he was deprived of by the breach of the former * * *. From what has thus been stated it can be seen that the character and value of the benefits and their loss or reception have no weight whatever in determining the question as to whether or not the contract was made for the benefit of third parties, who in this case are the property owners * * *. All of the well-considered cases start out by the assertion of the broad proposition that the contract must be made for the benefit of the third parties, as its object, and they must be the parties intended to be benefited thereby."

The Court continues:

"So it seems clear to us that whatever benefits that may accrue to the property owners as a result of street improvements is purely an incident to the improvement, and not an object intentionally sought to be obtained by the contract which was made for the improvements. Third persons who are only collaterally and incidentally benefited by the terms of a contract have no cause of action for its breach."

"The courts are not uniform in their opinions as to the principle upon which this class of actions are maintained. Many of them base their opinion upon the ground that the obligee in the contract owed the third party some debt or duty, either legal or equitable, and that by accepting the contract the law creates a privity of 994 consideration between them upon which he could maintain a cause of action for its breach. Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y., 280. But in applying that principle to this case, we are confronted with the proposition that the city owned no duty to the property owners to increase the value of their property, but were merely creating a fund, or providing a means, out of which the contemplated improvements could be paid. To this proposition the respondent might reply that while that may be true, yet the law required the city to let the contract at the lowest price obtainable, and that the property owners had the right to avail themselves of that price. In answer to that contention it may be said that, in all the cases where third parties have been permitted to recover upon a contract entered into for their benefit, said third parties had either adopted the contract or complied with the provisions thereof relating to them, or that the debt or duty which was owing to the third party had passed or vested in the obligee of the contract before the suit was instituted."

Neither the bondholders, stockholders, nor the reorganization Committee, owed any legal or equitable duty to the Trust Company, unless such duty can be implied in some way from the reorganization plan and agreement. The Trust Company as a creditor was not intended to be, and was not in fact, a party to the reorganization agreements, though it received benefits therefrom in the exchange of its old securities for the new ones of the Southern Company; nor does the evidence in the record show that it ever changed or altered its position in any way on account of said floating debt provision.

In Howsman v. Water Co., 119 Mo., 304, a contract had been entered into between the town of Trenton and the Water Company, by which the Water Company agreed with the town to furnish, at all times an adequate supply of water for fire and other purposes for public and private use, and further agreed and "should said Water Company, from lack of water supply, or other cause, except providential or unavoidable accident, fail to furnish a reasonable or adequate supply of water to extinguish any fire, then it shall be liable for all damages occasioned by such fire or neglect."

The plaintiff's dwelling being destroyed by fire, he sued the Water Company, for a breach of its obligation above quoted. The court held that there could be no recovery by the reason that the contract was not name for the benefit of the plaintiff as its object; and the fact that he was indirectly or incidentally benefited by it did not give him the right to sue upon it. The opinion has citation of many authorities. Similar cases are 995 Metropolitan Trust Co. v. Topeka Water Co., 132 Fed., 702.

Allen Mfg. Co. v. Shreveport Water Works Co., 37 So., 980.

In Sayward v. Dexter, 72 Fed., 758, the court applies the same rule, saying:

"But it is not every contract for the benefit of a third person that is enforceable by the beneficiary. It must appear that the contract was made and was intended for his benefit. The fact that he is incidentally named in the contract or that the contract, if carried out according to its terms, would inure to his benefit, is not sufficient to entitle him to demand its fulfillment. It must appear to have been the intention of the parties to secure to him personally the benefit of its provisions."

In American Bank v. Railroad Company, 75 Fed., 130, the syllabus is as follows:

"An agreement made by one person with another to pay a debt due by the latter to a third person is not the subject of suit by such third person, when there was no intention to benefit him, and nothing of value came under the contract within the control of the promisor, which, in equity, belonged to such third person, or is subject to a lien in his favor."

The Court said:

"The explicit language of the complaint makes it clear that the promise of the defendant was to pay an existing debt, and it was made for the benefit of the Chicago & Northern Pacific Railroad Company; and no facts are alleged from which an inference may be drawn that the parties to the contract were actuated by a desire to benefit the plaintiff, nor that the scope of their intentions included any provisions for rights or interests other than their own; and, there is no pretense that under the contract anything of value or assets have come to the promisor's hands, or under its control, which, in equity, belongs to plaintiff, or is subject to any lien existing in favor of the plaintiff. The case, therefore, comes fully and fairly within the rule of the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of National Bank v. Grand Lodge, 98 U. S., 123. The rule and the authority of the case cited have received express recognition in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, in the case of Savward v. Dexter, 72 Fed., 765."

In Freemen v. Pennsylvania Co., 173, Pa. St., 274, it is held:

"The holder of coupons representing interest upon railroad bonds had no right of action on an agreement by the lessee of 996 the railroad to apply the net earnings to the payment of the interest coupons, and to buy up the coupons if the net earnings should not be sufficient to pay them; such holder of coupons being a stranger to the contract and the consideration."

In McIlvaine v. Big Stony Lumber Company, 54 S. E., 473, it is held:

"Code 1904, Section 2660, authorizes the assignee of a bond or a chose in action to sue in his own name and to maintain any action which the original obligee party or contracting party might have brought. Held, that such action did not authorize an original creditor to sue at law on covenants of third persons to assume and pay the debt where there was no consideration passing from such creditors to such covenanters, and there was no privity between them."

The Court said:

"The test, therefore, in such a case, seems to be whether or not the promise or covenant sued on was made for the sole benefit of the plaintiff."

In Armour Company v. Construction Co., 78 Pac., 1106, it is held:

"One who furnishes provisions to a contractor doing work for a railroad cannot recover from one who gave a bond to the railroad to pay persons supplying provisions to the contractor, there being no privity."

One of the leading cases on this question is Second National Bank v. Grand Lodge, 8 U. S. 9, 123, which was an action by the bank against the Grand Lodge of Missouri to compel the payment of certain coupons formerly attached to bonds issued by the Masonic Hall Association, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Missouri, in relation to which bonds the Grand Lodge had adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, that this Grand Lodge assume the payment of Two-Hundred Thousand Dollars bonds issued by the Masonic Hall Association provided that stock is issued to the Grand Lodge by said Association to the amount of said assumption of payment by this Grand Lodge as the said bonds are paid."

The Court held that the bank, as the holder of the bonds, was not in such privity with the contract as to warrant a suit upon it, saying:

"It was a contract made for the benefit of the Association and of the Grand Lodge—made that the latter might acquire the ownership of stock of the former, and that the former might 997 obtain a relief from its liabilities. The holders of the bonds were not parties to it and there was no privity between them and the lodge. They may have had an indirect interest in the performance of the undertakings of the parties, as they should have in any agreement by which the lodge should undertake to lend money to the association or contract to buy its stock to enable it to pay its debts; but that is a very different thing from the privity necessary to enable them to enforce the contract by suits in their own names. We do not propose to enter at large upon a consideration of the inquiry how far the privity of contract between a plaintiff and defendant is necessary to the maintenance of an action of assumpsit. The subject has been much debated and the decisions are not all reconcilable. No doubt the general rule is that such a privity must exist. But there are confessedly many exceptions to it. One of them, and by far the most frequent one, is the case where, under a contract between two persons, assets have come into the promisor's hands or under his control which in equity belong to a third person. In such a case it is [held] that a third person may sue in his own name. But then the suit is founded rather on the implied undertaking the law raises from the possession of the assets than on the express promise. Another exception is where the plaintiff is the beneficiary solely interested in the promise as to where one person contracts with another to pay money or deliver some valuable thing to a third. But where a debt already exists from one person to another, a promise by a third person to pay such debt being primarily for the benefit of the original debtor, and to relieve him from liability to pay it (there being no novation), he has a right of action against the promisor for his own indemnity; and if the original creditor can also sue, the promisor would be liable to two separate actions, and, therefore, the rule is that the original creditor cannot sue. His case is not an exception from the general rule that privity of contract is required. There are some other exceptions recognized, but they are unimportant now. The plaintiff's case is within none of them. Nor is he sole beneficiary of the contract between the association and the grand lodge. The contract was made, as we have said, for the benefit of the association, and if enforceable at all is enforceable by it. That the several bondholders of the association are not in a situation to sue upon it is apparent on its face."

The Trust Company is not within any of the enumerated exceptions, nor can it be claimed that assets came into the hands of the reorganization Committee or under its control, which in equity 968 belonged to the Trust Company, as the sole beneficiary interested in the provisions contained in the plan and agreement for the payment of the floating debt.

Another strong case in point is that of Meyer v. Ft. Wayne R. R. Co., 132 Indiana, 88, in which the plaintiff agreed to build a station for two companies, which he did, but was not paid by one of them, the road of which was afterwards sold under foreclosure and bought in by the bondholders, who organized a new corporation to own and run it. The new corporation used the station and plaintiff sued it for the amount which the former owners of the road agreed to pay him. It appeared that there was an agreement between the bondholders of the original company that a certain sum should be retained for the payment of small claims as required. The court held that plaintiff could not recover and that the agreement created no obligation in favor of the plaintiff, saying:

"The provision in the contract between the bondholders, which we have quoted, does not bind the appellee to pay the appellant any sum whatever. It simply authorizes the directors to use that sum as they may deem necessary in the payment of claims. But, if it were conceded that the provision does create an obligation in favor of the appellant, still there is no right to recover upon it, because it does not appear that the sum was not properly used to pay the claim specified, or other claims having rightful precedence of the appellant's claim."

From the undisputed facts in the record, it can hardly be claimed that the Trust Company, or any other unsecured creditor of the Belt Company, had a direct interest in the floating debt reservation provision of the reorganization plan, for the carrying out of such provision was clearly within the discretionary powers of the reorganization Committee in every way whatever. The Committee was fully authorized to do as they thought best in respect to paying off such indebtedness as, in their judgment, was necessary or expedient, in furtherance of the purposes of the reorganization plan and agreement; and, hence it appears, in Ingel's testimony (Rec. Vol. 56, pp. 34354 to 34380) and particularly in his exhibit 192, in Vol. 56, pages 34357 to 34368, that the Committee and the Southern Company together paid out in connection with the obligation of $5,900,000.00 set out in the modified plan or reorganiation, the following amounts:

Car Trust Certificates.

Amount called for under the plan... $1,900,000.00

999

Amount actually paid out by Committee and Southern Company.....		$2,192,580.40
First mortgage coupons and ad interim interest; amount called for in the plan.....	575,000.00
Amount actually paid out by Committee		891,913.41
Receivers certificates; amount called for under the plan.....	800,000.00
Amount actually paid out by Committee and Southern Company.....		821,543.74
Appropriate to floating belt; amount called for in modified plan.....	475,000.00
Amount actually paid out by Committee and Southern Company.....		1,164,172.56

This statement shows that, as to each item, the amount paid out largely exceeded the original estimate, and, that the joint payments of the Committee and Southern Company, on account of the floating debt appropriation, exceeded the estimate to the extent of $689,172.56. This fact, certainly shows the exercise of the widest discretionary power as to shaping up the details of the reorganization scheme for the benefit of the new security holders, and, one of the largest of which is the Trust Company, as it received bonds and stock of the Southern Company in exchange for, approximately, $850,000.00, par value, of the securities of the old companies. (Rec. Vol. 49, pp. 29972 to 29974.)

In other words, the Trust Company, presumably, received its proportionate benefit from this large expenditure in payment of what are called the floating debts, but which in reality consists of all kinds of items, which the Committee deemed necessary to take care of, so as to secure absolutely the first mortgage lien on the properties transferred to the Southern Company.

By reference to the 13th paragraph of the "agreement," hereinbefore copied it will be observed that the Committee was authorized to acquire, extinguish or hold any obligation in the nature of floating debt, or otherwise, against the company or property embraced in said plan, either as proposed or carried out, or any securities held as collateral for any such obligations, etc.

The testimony of Shipley, Smith, Petitt, Pam, Harrity, Sielcken and Hecksher, members of the reorganization Committee, 1000 and found in Vol. 57 of the Record, is to the effect that the $475,000.00 appropriated, as above stated, for the payment of floating debts, was a lump sum set aside by the Committee to make provision for the payment and discharge of such obligations as the Committee might find necessary to discharge in order to relieve the properties, to be included in the Southern mortgage, from any liens claimed thereon or from any interference as a matter of business policy, and that said $475,000.00 was simply an estimate or reservation to cover such charges, and further, that at no time did the Committee, in making such estimate, contemplate or include therein the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company; but the contracting parties to the reorganization plan and agreement, made an express provision, intending to exclude, and excluding, the Trust Company or any other creditor of the constituent companies from enforcing against the new company to be formed, any right of action which such creditors might have had against the old companies.

The third section of the 12th paragraph of the reorganization agreement, hereinafter copied, provided that no right is conferred, nor any trust, liability or obligation, is created by or for a new company in favor of any claim whatever, against the companies involved, as to any matter or thing. The Trust Company executed said agreement as one of the depositaries thereunder, and also accepted the benefits of its provisions when it exchanged the old securities it held against the constituent companies for the new securities of the Southern Company, and by so doing, it has accepted and agreed to said provisions, and cannot now repudiate them, after receiving and enjoying the benefits thereof. In other words, the Trust Company might have refused to accept the benefits of the reorganization scheme and taken its chances on the outside, but it did not do so. It has, in effect, agreed that it would not assert its creditors' claim either against the Committee or the Southern Company, for if it did so, it would thereby be asserting a claim which would be adverse to the reorganiation plan and agreement, under which it had elected to take the benefits accruing to it as a depositor of its securities thereunder. It would seem, then, that under the circumstances above stated, the Trust Company cannot now maintain an action against the Southern Company to enforce a right or trust in contravention of the terms of said agreement.

It is claimed, however, by counsel for the Trust Company, that it is not attempting to obtain any right inconsistent with the provisions of said agreement, but that, by the terms thereof, it is entitled to be paid by the Southern Company, as the purchaser of the 1001 Belt properties, under the reorganization scheme.

For the reasons above stated, the Master is of the opinion that the Trust Company, in its capacity as creditor, is not directly interested in the floating debt provision of the reorganization plan, but, that any right, which it may have therein is collateral and incidental to the main purpose and object of such plan, and, that the respondent had no such legal or equitable right as entitled it to avail itself of said floating debt provision.

As to any Agreement on the Part of the Reorganization Committee, or the Southern Company, to Pay the Belt Indebtedness to the Trust Company.

9. The alleged liability of the Southern Company arising on account of any promise or agreement by either the Committee or the Southern Company, to pay the Belt debt to the Trust Company, it not satisfactorily supported by the proofs in the record.

(1). The evidence relied upon by the Trust Company, to maintain its contention that the Southern Company agreed to pay such indebtedness, is founded principally upon the testimony of Thomas L. Chadbourne. Chadbourne became a general counsel for the Trust Company in October, 1899, and in December, 1899, or January, 1900, he was made the acting president of the Executive Committee of the Trust Company (Rec. 57, pp. 34688 to 34721).

He stated, in substance, that he appeared before the reorganization Committee, on behalf of the Trust Company, and that the Committee promised to pay the Belt indebtedness at that time claimed to be due to the Trust Company; that some time in December, 1899, and before the organization of the Southern Company, he was present at the office of John W. Gates in Chicago, and there were also present Gates, Pam and others, and at which time the assets of the Trust Company were being examined, and when the Belt indebtedness was reached, Gates marked it down as "good" at Pam's suggestion, because it would be taken care of in the reorganization of the road; that he had other interviews with Pam, in which the latter agreed, on behalf of the reorganization Committee, or the Southern Company, to pay the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company. Chadbourne further stated that later on, Pam, on behalf of the reorganization Committee, or the Southern Company, modified his agreement to the extent that he wished to have an audit made of the books of the Trust Company, and, he stated that, after this audit was 1002 made, he, Pam, in behalf of the reorganization Committee, or the Southern Company, would agree to pay whatever was found to be due the Trust Company from the Belt Company, and, that thereafter, one Hills, acting for the reorganization Committee, and R. J. McCarty, who was to make an examination for the Southern Company, made an examination and audit of the books, and that Hills stated that he had found the amounts all correct. On cross-examination, Chadbourne stated that he did not know what books of the Trust Company McCarty examined, nor did he know anything about the examination; that Pam finally agreed, on behalf of the Southern Company, to pay the debt of the Belt Company, as evidenced by its notes of June 16, 1900, and, further, that at a meeting of the Guardian Trust Company, in the fall of 1900, when Stilwell was trying to get back into the Trust Company, Pam again said he would pay, or cause to be paid, the claims of the Trust Company against the Belt (Rec. Vol. 57-34688 to 34721).

R. J. McCarty stated (Rec. Vol. 56-34267) that, at no time prior to 1905, did he ever make an examination of the books of the Trust Company at Chicago, or elsewhere, and that no one connected with the Southern Company, or the Belt Company, or its receivers, in so far as he knew, ever made an examination of the books of the Trust Company (Rec. Vol. 56-34267); that Pam never requested him to make any audit of the Trust Company's account, but that he received from Willey (Auditor of the Trust Company), in July, 1900, a detailed statement of the amount the Trust Company claimed against the Belt Company, which Pam requested him to check against the records of the Belt Company for the purpose of seeing how it corresponded as a matter of book-keeping, and that his only object in checking it was to discover what the balances were, and that he did not go into the merits or demerits of the items; that Hills was here in May, 1900, for about ten days, having come to investigate the Belt books, but he never heard of his investigating the Trust Company books (Rec. Vol. 56-34318 to 34323). All of which tends to show that Chadbourne was likely mistaken in his statement as to any promise being made by Pam to pay the Trust Company's claim against the Belt on June 16, 1900.

Max Pam stated that, on behalf of the reorganization Committee, he never promised to pay the obligations of the Belt to the Trust Company, nor were any claims therefor ever presented to the Committee; that on one occasion he was called into a meeting of the Executive Committee or Board of Directors of the Trust Com-1003 pany, then being held in Chicago, at which were present directors Lambert, Gates and himself, and in answer to a question asked him as to what he knew about the claims of the Trust Company against the Belt, and as to the Trust Company collecting them, he stated that, as a matter of law and fact, the Belt Company did not owe the Trust Company anything, and that, if an accounting was had, it would appear that the Trust Company was indebted to the Belt; that an examination of the Belt books was being made by McCarty, and, also of the Trust Company books, and that, when done, he would take up the question of whether anything could be done towards an equitable adjustment of the claim, and that, as the gentlemen present indicated a desire to litigate the matter instead of waiting until the examination was completed, he then stated that the Belt Company would insist upon its legal defense, and that thereupon he withdrew from the meeting, (Rec. Vol. 57-34947 to 34970). Pem further stated that at that time, he made no promise or statement in behalf of the reorganization Committee (Rec. Vol. 57-34956-34960), nor did he make a promise, on June 16, 1900, to settle the Belt indebtedness, nor was the question reached of making payment of the Trust Company's claims. (Rec. Vol. 57-34961-62 and 34974-75).

He further stated that in answer to a question by Chadbourne as to when he could take up the matter of the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company, he told Chadbourne that he would do so as soon as McCarty made the investigation, and had time to go over the accounts form the beginning. Pam denied the statements made by Chadbourne and Waterall, to the effect that, in the fall of 1900, at the Baltimore Hotel in Kansas City, he promised to pay the Belt indebtedness, or that the reorganization Committee had agreed to pay it, or that he had stated that the claim had been approved by the reorganization Committee. (Rec. Vol. 57-34978-'79).

He further stated that, in Washington, D. C., Waterall asked him about the Trust Company recovering against the Belt, and he stated that in his judgment there was very little prospect of its doing so, because, upon a full investigation of the account, it would be found that the Trust Company was obligated to the Belt. That no statement could have been made to Waterall to the effect that the claim had been approved by the reorganization Committee, because it had never been presented to the Committee, and hence the Committee had never been asked to act upon it, nor had it ever acted upon it.

The testimony of J. McD. Trimble (Rec. Vol. 56-34400 to 34402), and of H. H. Harris (Vol. 57-34404 to 34411) as to conversations with Max Pam, substantiate the latter's statements 1004 in the main, to the effect that there would be a fair adjustment with the Trust Company after the proper expert examinations were made of the books of account, to see whether the claim of the Trust Company was a just one.

John W. Gates denied the statement made by Stilwell that he was told by Gates and Lambert that, when the Committee met, there was no doubt that they would pay the Belt debt to the Trust Company, but on the contrary, Gates stated that he never agreed or consented to pay that debt, nor did he know of any promise on the part of the Committee, or any member of it, to pay the Belt floating debts, or any debts against the Belt held by the Trust Company, nor did he ever hear of any claim or agreement to that effect until the commencement of this litigation. (Rec. Vol. 57-35051-35053).

John V. Loughney, secretary of the reorganization Committee, stated that he kept its minutes in writing, and that these minutes show all persons appearing before the Committee, all the claims considered and allowed, and agreements made, and that, by reference to the minutes of the Committee, appearing in Vol. 41-22048-22412, it will be seen that at no time did the Committee, either directly or indirectly, ever agree to pay, in part or in whole, any of the indebtedness of the Belt to the Trust Company. (Rec. Vol. 57-35042-35046).

It is not deemed necessary to refer more at length to the testimony produced on the question of the alleged agreement of the Committee to pay this Belt indebtedness, for the reason that, even if Max Pam did make statements, which led Chadbourne and others to believe that the Committee, in the exercise of the plenary discretion possessed by it, would pay such indebtedness, still his promise did not bind the Committee, unless specially authorized by it to make an agreement on its behalf.

The record in this case nowhere discloses that Pam was authorized by the Committee, or the Southern Company, to agree to pay the Belt indebtedness, or any part of it, to the Trust Company, as fully appears from the testimony of Shipley and others, members of the reorganization Committee, every one of whom states, that at no time did the Committee as a whole, or they, individually, ever agree to pay said Belt debt to the Trust Company. (Rec. Vol. 57-34857 to 34994.

(2.) There is nothing in the agreement between the reorganization Committee and the Southern Company, by which the latter agreed, or obligated itself to become liable to pay the Belt 1005 indebtedness to the Trust Company. By reference to said agreement, bearing date of October 19th, 1900, and appearing in Rec. Vol. 57, pp. 35091 to 35100, the following provisions will be found:

"And whereas, all the moneys and securities paid into or deposited with said Committee were received by it in trust for the purpose of the reorganization mentioned in the aforesaid agreement of June 14th, 1899, and the plan or reorganization of November 7th, 1899, that is to say, in trust for the parties paying or depositing the same and for the company as reorganized, to-wit: The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and for the making payment and discharge of the obligations lawfully made or incurred by said Committee in the exercise of the power and discretion conferred upon it, and said reorganization has been so nearly accomplished that the final completion of the same may now properly be by the Committee turned over and assumed by the said The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and which said Company has already agreed, as part of the consideration for the conveyance to it of the property purchased by said Committee at foreclosure sale as aforesaid, to assume and discharge all the obligations of the said Committee incurred as aforesaid; a list whereof, so far as known, is hereto attached marked "Exhibit A" as a part of this contract."

"6. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company hereby agrees that it will assume and pay all obligations lawfully incurred by said Committee in the purchase of the property of the said Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, under the decree of the Court under which said sale was made and confirmed, or in pursuance and execution of the powers upon its conferred, or otherwise howsoever as such reorganization Committee, and will forever indemnify and save harmless the said William F. Harrity, A. Heckscher, Herman Sielcken, William Edenborn, Max Pam, Samuel R. Shipley, Silas W. Pettit and Winthrop Smith, and each of them, his and their heirs, executors, and administrators, of and from all suits, claims and demands whatsoever arising by reason of anything done or suffered to be done by him, them, or either of them, in or about his and their execution of the duty, power and authority in them vested as such Committee as aforesaid by the agreement of reorganization of June 14th, 1899, and the plan or reorganization of November 7th, 1899, hereinabove mentioned, except only for his or their individual malfeasance or neglect."

In "Exhibit A", which is at p. 35098 of Vol. 57 of the record the only claim of the Trust Company, considered as an obliga-1006 tion in that connection, is one for $8847.72, being for compensation claimed by the Trust Company as a depositary, in the reorganization plan, and which claim was then disputed by the Committee.

In respect to the Southern Company's paying any of the obligations of the Committee, it will be observed that, in said paragraph 6, the Southern Company only agrees to assume and pay all obligations lawfully incurred by the Committee.

It is evident that this contract of October 19, 1900, cannot be construed to apply to the Belt indebtedness in controversy in this cause, and, that none of the claims of the Trust Company in its answer to the intervening petition, wherein it attempts to fasten upon the Southern Company a liability for said Belt indebtedness are well founded in fact or law, under the terms of the contract

The Master is convinced that the contention of the Trust Company, in this respect, is without merit, for the following reasons:

(a) There is no sufficient evidence in the record of the making of any legal agreement, or even of an attempt to do so, by the reorganiation Committee, or by any person authorized to represent them, or by the Southern Company, by which the Belt indebtedness to them, or by the Southern Company, by which the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company would be discharged, either by the Committee, or the Southern Company.

(b) The 7th paragraph of the reorganization agreement provides, as hereinbefore stated, that the Committee shall keep a record of its acts and proceedings, that a majority of its members shall constitute a quorum, and that no action shall be taken except with the consent of a majority of the whole Committee, either at a meeting thereof, or in writing without a meeting. There is no proof nor is it claimed, that the Committee as a whole, ever agreed to pay any part of the Belt debt to the Trust Company. There is no proof in the records of the Committee, or elsewhere in the record in this cause, of any authority having been given by the Committee to Max Pam, or to any other person, by which he, or such person, would be warranted in making a promise or representation, which would be binding on the Committee, even if any such promise or representation had been attempted to be made, and for a sufficient consideration.

(c) The testimony of each and all the members of the reorganization Committee in the record is explicit, to the effect that 1007 none of them, at any time, ever promised or agreed to pay the claim of the Trust Company in controversy.

(d) There is nothing in the agreement between the reorganization Committee and the Southern Company which binds the latter to pay the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company.

The position of the Trust Company in its Contention that the Reorganization Plan and Agreement Were Fraudulent as Against it; Also as to Laches.

10. It has been strongly insisted by counsel for the intervenor that, in as much as the Trust Company executed the reorganization plan and agreement as a party thereto, and exchanged its old securities for the new securities of the Southern Comapny, which it accepted and held, regardless of this litigation, the Trust Company is equitably estopped to now claim that the reorganization scheme was fraudulent as to creditors; and in support of such contention, the following authorities are cited:

Crawshay v. Soutter, 6 Wall., 739.
Matthews v. Murchison, 15 Fed., 691.
Symmes v. Union Trust Co., 60 Fed., 830.
First National Bank v. Radford Trust Co., 80 Fed., 569.
Farmers Loan etc. Co. v. Central etc. Co., 120 Fed., 1006.
Vose v. Cowdry, 49 N. Y., 336.
Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Whar., 410.
State ex rel. Pope v. Germania Bank, 90 Minn., 150.
In re Peaslee's Will, 25 N. Y. Supp., 940.

On the other hand, counsel for the Trust Comapny with equal insistence, say that its right to hold the Southern Company liable, either at law or in equity, has been specially preserved in and by a certain stipulation, filed November 6, 1901, in the consolidated Belt foreclosure suit, the last paragraph of which is as follows:

"This decree is entered on the express condition, to which the complainant has assented, that it shall be without prejudice to and shall not bar the right of the Guardian Trust Company, or its receiver, to plead and insist in any litigation now pending or hereafter brought, that the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, by virtue of the manner in which it was organized or for any other reason, is legally or equitably liable for and bound to pay the unsecured debts of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railway Company, either in full or to pay them to the extent of the value of any property heretofore acquired by it from the Kansas City Subur-1008 urban Belt Railroad Company, or that thereafter may be acquired by it from said company by virtue of these foreclosure proceedings; and without prejudice to the right of said Guardian Trust Company or its receiver, to plead and insist, in any pending litigation or litigation hereafter brought, that the members of the reorganization Committee of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company assumed to pay and are liable to pay the unsecured debts of the Kansas City Suburban Railroad Company existing at the time the alleged reorganization was undertaken."

It appears by Ingel's exhibit No. 133 (Rec. Vol. 49-29972 to 29974), that the resultant new Southern securities were received by the Trust Company, on July 26, 1900, in lieu of the old securities owned by it and deposited under the reorganization plan; that the new securities consisted of 614-981.50/1000 Southern bonds, 2951-96.70/100 Southern preferred shares, and 5707-31/100 Southern common shares; and that the old securities exchanged were 410 Union Company bonds, 42 Air Line bonds, 325 Port Arthur Channel or Dock Company bonds, fractional 642/1000 Gulf Company bonds, 13-27/100 Gulf Company shares, 739-72/100 Belt Company shares, and 4389 Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company shares.

This stipulation was entered of record on November 6, 1901, which was after the exchange of securities, which had theretofore taken place on July 26, 1900; and, the effect of the making of such stipulation, with the assent of the complainant, upon the rights of both the Southern and Trust Companies, is naturally presented for consideration, that is, (a) whether the Southern has thereby waived or lost its right to contend that the Trust Company was then, and is now, estopped to claim that it (the Southern) was liable for the Belt indebtedness, and, (b) whether the Trust Company has, by reason of the stipulation, acquired any new right, or simply retained its status, whatever it was, in respect to its relations with the Southern.

The history of the stipulation and the circumstances of its making are important for the purpose of showing what was intended to be done. It is not disputed that, just prior to or at the time that the Belt foreclosure decree in the consolidated cause was entered up, the Trust Company asked leave in this court, to file an amended and supplemental answer, stating in effect that the reorganization plan had been promulgated in the interest of creditors of the Belt Company, as well as bondholders and stockholders, and that it had been intended to pay the Trust Company's debt, the reorganization Committee having often promised to pay it until about the time 1009 of the institution of the foreclosure suits, and, that the purpose of such suits was to vest in the Southern Company title to all the Belt property, free from the payment of that Company's floating debt, which was a fraudulent purpose. It was asked that the Southern Company be made a party to the cause, etc. In the Court's order, denying the leave to file such answer, it was provided, however, as a condition of the denial, that the complaint should, within five days thereafter, file in the consolidated cause, the stipulation hereinabove mentioned, which was accordingly done.

It was clearly the object of the stipulation to safe-guard and preserve whatever rights the Trust Company then had "to plead and insist in any litigation" then pending or thereafter to brought, that the Southern Company had, by reason of the manner of its organization, or for any reason, become or was legally or equitably liable to pay the unsecured debts of the belt Company, either in full or to the extent of the value of any property theretofore acquired by the Southern from the Belt Company, or that might thereafter be acquired by reason of the foreclosure proceedings; and, it was also provided that the Trust Company's rights as against the reorganization Committee, should not be prejudiced in any wise, by reason of the foreclosure decree, then about to be entered up in the consolidated cause. It can hardly be reasonably claimed by the respondent that the effect of the stipulation was to create in it a new right, or to enlarge or revive an old one for its benefit, for there is nothing in the stipulation, or the circumstances of its making, to justify any such conclusion, but, on the contrary, the evident purpose was simply to preserve any rights, then possessed by the Trust Company, in respect to the matters mentioned in the stipulation, so that they could thereafter be enforced, regardless of anything appearing in the foreclosure decree; in other words, that the Trust Company would not, on account of such decree, be considered as having waived any of its rights, whatever they were, as against the Southern Company, for the payment of the Belt indebtedness. The right to bring and prosecute an action to establish a claim, without prejudice on account of another proceedings (the effect of which might be prejudical to such right), is one thing, and the right to recover on the merits of such action is an entirely different thing. The Trust Company's right to sue was preserved by the stipulation, in so far as such right would otherwise have been effected by foreclosure decree, but, the right to recover on the merits, in any suit which might be brought, was necessarily left an open question. If the Trust Company, before the exe-1010 cutionof the stipulation, had done anything which had already destroyed anl legal or equitable right of recovery, which it might otherwise have had against the Southern Company or the Committee, it will not be seriously contended that the purpose of the stipulation was to cut off the intervenor's right to set up such fact in bar of the prosecution of any suit, which might be brought by the Trust Company, affecting the matter so in controversy.

This Court was not called upon to do so, and did not, in fact, pass upon any of the questions of fact or law involved in this floating debt proposition, and in any way affecting the rights of the intervenor or respondent in their relations to or with each other; on the contrary, while respondent's right to sue was preserved to it, regardless of the Belt decree, there was no other restriction placed upon either intervenor or respondent.

If right in the foregoing conclusions, then it follows that the question raised by intervenor as to the respondent being estopped, by its conduct in the premises, to now assert and claim that the reorganization plan and scheme were fraudulent as to Belt creditors, is wholly unaffected by said stipulation, and can be considered the same as if it had never been made. In this connection, it may properly be again suggested that respondent insists that it is not attacking the foreclosure decree and the sale thereunder, but it is bound by it; and further, that its claim in this cause is not against the property sold under the decree, nor any funds arising therefrom, but, such claim is founded upon the assumption by the intervenor of the Belt debts, by force of the consolidation statute, or other agreements shown in evidence. On that theory, counsel for respondent contend that the doctrine of laches is not involved, for the reason that the issue is merely as to the assumption by the new Company of the debt of the old Company, which is a legal liability, and uncontrolled by any equitable considerations; and further, that the new company, under such circumstances, could hardly be heard to complain because it was not sued sooner (the statute of limitations not having run).

It is not controverted that the Trust Company, a depositary in the reorganization plan, co-operated with the Committee, and used its influence, by correspondence and otherwise, to induce other bondholders and stockholders to deposit their securities with the Committee, as will more fully appear by reference to letters, passing between it and the Committee, during the reorganization period, and found in Vol. 55, pp. 34488 to 34564 of the Record. The respondent was well acquainted with the purposes of the reorganization scheme, and with such knowledge, entered into the same, depositing its own securities and exchanging them for the 1011 new Southern securities, and advising others to make like exchanges. If so, then how can it now be heard to complain that the scheme was fraudulent as to Belt creditors, notwithstanding respondent's own active and beneficial participation therein.

It has received substantial benefits therefrom, by way of compensation for its services and in the exchange of securities, all of which it has retained, and, by reason of which, it is not in position, after many years of seeming acquiescence in the consummation and carrying out of the reorganization plan, to contend that such plan was fraudulent as to respondent as a Belt creditor. It cannot, under the circumstances shown in evidence, enjoy the benefits of the very scheme it seeks to attack, either directly or indirectly. This principle is well stated in Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Central R. Co. of Ga. 120 Fed 1006, in which the intervenor therein recovered judgment against a company, which became involved and was reorganized under a new charter. He thereupon deposited his stock under the reorganization plan and received preference bonds of the new company, and was held that he was bound by his action in entering into the reorganization, and could not assert his judgment, which was obtained against the old company, against the assets of the new company, to the prejudice of the other creditors.

The Court said:

"He therefore became a party to the reorganization, by means of which his equity against the assets of the old company became merged into the assets of the new company. The intervenor cannot be permitted to 'blow hot and cold', and, having entered into the reorganization he must be held to be bound by its action."

In Matthews v. Murchison, 15 Fed., 691, it was held, in substance, that a bondholder of a former organization has no standing in chancery to dissolve the new organization of a railroad company, for which his agent had voted his bonds, though in excess of authority, &c., in as much as he had accepted his share of the new bonds; and, also, that such conduct ratified the act, and "inducing others to believe hs had acquiesced in the reorganization, worked an estoppel."

In Symmes v. Union Trust Co. of N. Y., 60 Fed., 830, it is stated in the syllabus that

"Stockholders who have had full knowledge of a plan or reorganization, and have given it their approval, and subscribed to its provisions in respect of part of the stock owned by them, are estopped, after the reorganization is complete, to main-1012 tain a suit, as owners of the stock on which they did not subscribe, to overthrow the same on the ground of fraud and conspiracy."

Laches of Respondent Trust Company.

In respect to the contention of intervenor that the respondent is barred by laches from asserting its Belt indebtedness claim against intervenor, it is well to reiterate that the reorganization agreement was promulgated November 7th, 1899, that the Southern Company took possession of January 1, 1902, of the properties formerly belonging to the Belt system, and, also, that the Trust Company failed to assert its claim against the Southern until it was done in this cause in 1905. The Southern securities, which were issued and exchanged for those of the Belt, were promptly listed on the New York Stock Exchange, as well as elsewhere, and, since then, have been sold and resold in this country and Europe, during the period, intervening between the incorporation of the Southern in 1900, and the assertion, in 1905, of respondent's claim against it, as the respondent well knew. In the meantime, the Southern Company was engaged in working out the details of the reorganization plan, and developing its combined railway system, thereby appreciating the value of the very Southern bonds and stocks acquired by the Trust Company under said plan. It is evident that, if the intervenor should have been held liable for all the unsecured indebtedness of the constituent companies of the old Belt system, including the large amount claimed by respondent, the effect of such liability would necessarily have been to depreciate the value of all the Southern securities, and, to that extent, operate to the injury of the security holders.

In view of the intimate connection and knowledge of respondent, as heretofore shown, with the practical working out of the reorganization scheme, and the large financial interests it had in the successful carrying out thereof, it is manifest that its conduct in the premises should not be of such nature as to be prejudicial to the rights of others interested in the Southern, and its securities, that is, should not be such as to influence or cause them to do things, which they would not otherwise have done, provided the Trust Company, at the outset, had promptly asserted the claim in controversy, before the position of others interested had been materially influenced and changed by its conduct in the premises.

In reaching this conclusion, the Master is not unmindful of the controversy between the Trust Company and certain members of the reorganization Committee, in respect to the latter paying, or causing to be paid, the Belt debt to the respondent, all of which preceded the Belt foreclosure. In his judgment, the fact of 1013 such controversy accentuated the importance of active measures by the Trust Company against the Southern, and affords no reason whatever for the respondent's long delay in asserting its claim in this cause. In support of intervenor's contention, the following authorities have been cited, and, in the main, they are influential in that direction:

New York, etc., Co. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 97 Fed., 226;
Harriman v. Northern Securities Co., 197 U. S., 244;

Carey v. Houston, etc., Ry. Co., 52 Fed., 671;
Wenger et al. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 105 Fed., 796;
Anthony v. Campbell, 112 Fed., 212;
Cutter v. Iowa Water Co., 128 Fed., 505;
Spencer v. Seaboard Air Line, 137 N. C., 107.

In Wenger v. Chicago & E. R. Co., 105 Fed., 796, it was stated, in effect, that the holder of an unliquidated claim for damages against a railroad company was held barred, by laches, from the right to charge a liability upon a reorganized company, succeeding to the property on the ground that it had issued the stocks and bonds to the stockholders of the old company, and the transaction had been completed, before the claim holder asserted his claim against the new company, though he had ample opportunity to do so.

In Anthony v. Campbell, 112 Fed., 212, Judge Thayer, delivering the opinion, said:

"A man cannot remain silent for three or four years, knowing that one corporation, of which he is a creditor, has wrongfully transferred its property to another, and that third parties are dealing with the new corporation, and trusting it on the supposition that the transfer was lawful, and then be heard to assert in a court of equity that because of the alleged unlawful transaction he has an equitable lien on all the corporate assets, which is superior to other creditors. Such conduct evinces an intention or a desire to profit by the mistakes of innocent third parties and ought not to be encouraged. * * * In the present instance the testimony shows that the intervenor took no action until nearly four years after he was advised of the transaction—a period of silence and inactivity, which must be deemed more than sufficient to bar his right to equitable relief on the ground that he has a general lien."

In the opinion of the Master, the surroundings, conduct, and laches, of the Trust Company in this matter, have been such as to preclude it, (a) from claiming that the reorganization scheme 1014 was fraudulent as against it, and, also, (b) from asserting its claim in controversy against the Southern Company.

XIII.

As to the Claim of the Intervenor for $773,246.00 for Damages to the Bondholders Arising from Misconduct of the Trust Company as Co-Trustee of the Union Company Mortgage.

In paragraph 13 of the intervening petition, the intervenor, in substance states that the Union Company duly executed its mortgage, or deed of trust, dated February 1, 1893, to the Trust Company, and to the Provident Company of Philadelphia as trustees, to secure its bonds for Two Million Dollars ($2,000,000.00), and that at that time the Union Company had not constructed its railroad but was only the owner of a franchise for the construction and operation of a railroad along the left bank of the Kaw River from a point at or near Argentine, Kansas, to a point in Kansas City on the State Line between the states of Kansas and Missouri, the purpose of the bond issue being, as expressed in the mortgage, to provide funds with which to construct said railroad, and which was well known to the Trust Company; that said bonds, in the sum of Two Million Dollars, were duly issued and placed in the custody of the Trust Company and that "it then became the duty of the Trust Company under the express terms of said mortgage, as well as by law, to see that, as the bonds of the Union Company were sold, the proceeds thereof, were used in the construction, completion and equipment of the railroad of the Union Company," so that, as the bonds were sold, the proceeds thereof should be added to the Union Company's property, the intention being that the value of the property mortgaged as security for said bonds should increase, approximately, to the full extent of the bonds' proceeds invested in such property, thereby amply securing such bonded indebtedness, from time to time, as the bonds were issued; but, it is alleged, that the Trust Company was unmindful of its duties, and, from time to time, sold said bonds to innocent purchasers for value, and improperly diverted their proceeds from the purposes intended, as above stated, and unlawfully used the same to diminish the alleged Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company, thereby, in no wise, increasing or augmenting the value of the Union property covered by said mortgage; that the Trust Company thus diverted thirteen hundred and fifty of said Union bonds, of the par value of One Million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and of the actual value of One Million two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars, from the purposes for which they were issued, as the Trust Company well knew, 1015 and wrongfully neglected or refused to use the bond proceeds in adding to the value of the Union Company's physical property; and, further, that, in breach of its duty as trustee, the Trust Company, from time to time, sold Union bonds after the completion and equipment of the Union railroad, and when there was no necessity for then selling or disposing thereof for the construction, completion and equipment of said railroad; and that by reason thereof, the conduct of the Trust Company, in that respect, constituted a breach of trust, and was fraudulent against the Union bondholders.

Intervenor further stated that it is the owner of all the outstanding Union bonds by purchase from bona fide holders, that the properties and franchises of the Union Company were sold at a foreclosure sale for $1,500,000.00, which was in excess of their full value, and that, after crediting such proceeds upon said bonds, held by intervenor, there remained and still remain due to intervenor the sum of $773,246.00, and interest thereon from January 2, 1902, at five per cent per annum; that if the Trust Company had not wrongfully diverted said bond proceeds from the uses and purposes intended for their application, as set forth in the Union mortgage, then the mortgaged property would have sold for an amount sufficient to have paid said bonds in full, that intervenor was not advised of the acts of the Trust Company in diverting the bond proceeds, until the facts relating thereto were developed in taking of testimony in this cause. Intervenor asked judgment against the Trust Company for the amount of said deficiency and interest thereon.

Afterwards, on May 20, 1905, the Trust Company filed its answer to the intervening petition, and, in paragraph 13 of such answer, it admits the execution of the Union Company mortgage, that it was one of the trustees therein, and that the purpose of the bond issue was to provide funds to construct its railroad, but otherwise denies all the averments of the intervening petition. It further alleges that the amount of the Union Company bonds delivered to it, and the prices, at which they were so delivered, are fully set forth in its answer to the amended supplemental and ancillary bill, and, that said bonds were in the main acquired by the Belt Company, which had guaranteed the payment of the principal and interest thereof, and was the owner of all the capital stock of the Union Company and operated its line, and, that afterwards, the Belt Company, in the usual course of business, sold said bonds for full value to the Trust Company, and to others, and the Trust Company states that such bonds, as were bought by it from either the Belt Company, 1016 or the Union Company, were bought for full value and in most cases for more than their full value.

Further answering, the Trust Company states "that most of the transactions, in respect to said Union bonds, were done more than ten years prior to the filing of the first intervening petition in this cause, and that all of said transactions occurred more than five years prior to the filing of the original bill herein, and, also, more than five years prior to the filing of said intervening petition, and that, if any rights, equities or causes of action accrued to the intervenor, by reason of such transactions, or any of them, the same accrued to it more than five years before the institution of this suit, and, hence, the respondent pleads, to each and all of said transactions, all the statutes of limitations of the State of Missouri, and particularly Sections 4271, 4272 and 4273, (Rev. Stat. 1899), which sections are now and were, at all times herein mentioned, in full force and effect; that, since the organization of intervenor, it has possessed full knowledge of all the facts and circumstances in respect to the handling and sale of Union bonds by respondent, but, notwithstanding such knowledge, the intervenor has made no protest nor taken any steps to enforce any rights, which it had in and to said bonds or the proceeds thereof, and, by reason of which, the intervenor has been guilty of laches and should not now be permitted to come into a court of equity and assert any claims against respondent on account of said transactions; that the intervenor acquired whatever Union bonds it may hold, through the reorganization Committee and in consummation of the reorganization plan and agreement, pursuant to which the intervenor was caused to be incorporated by the Committee for the purpose, among other things, of issuing its stocks and bonds in exchange for those of the Union Company and other companies, as in said plan and agreement is set forth, and, that the intervenor is the successor company which was proposed to be organized by said plan, and further, that the owners and holders of Union bonds, from which the Committee acquired the same, were at all times, familiar with all the facts and circumstances surrounding their issuance and of respondent's transactions in reference thereto, and that the Committee, after it acquired said Union bonds and up to the time they were delivered to the intervenor, was at all times familiar with all the facts and circumstances surrounding the same, and, that no steps were ever taken by either the bondholders or the Committee to enforce any rights, which are now claimed in respect to said union bonds or in respect to respondent's transactions in regard thereto.

1017 Nature of Intervenor's Claim.

1. Briefly stated, the cause of action is one at law, sounding in tort and praying for a money judgment against the Trust Company as a co-trustee, for alleged breach by it of the alleged duty, created under the terms of the mortgage as well as by law, to see that the Union Company used the proceeds of the bonds issued, in the construction and equipment of its railroad.

The Trust Company, in substance, sets up the following defenses:

(a) Denials in substance of all the allegations of the petition;

(b) A plea of the ten year statute of limitations;

(c) A plea of the five year statute of limitations;

(d) A plea of laches;

(e) A denial is made that, either by law or the express terms of the mortgage, there was any duty imposed upon the Trust Company to supervise the use or disposition by the Union Company of the proceeds of its bonds;

(f) That the Union Company, in furtherance of its own purposes, sold its bonds mainly to the Belt Company, which, as the owner of all the capital stock of the Union Company, had guaranteed its bonds, principal and interest, and had constructed valuable extensions and improvements, and operated its road; and that, thereafter, in the usual course of business, the Belt Company sold said bonds for their full value to the Trust Company and others;

(g) It is further denied that the intervenor is entitled to assert any rights as the bona fide holder of said Union bonds for the reason, so it is charged, that it came into the possession of such bonds solely as the result of an exchange thereof for those of the Southern Company, and pursuant to the reorganization scheme hereinbefore referred to, and, further, that the reorganization Committee, before acquiring the Union bonds, examined the property and accounts of the Union Company, and was fully advised in respect to the facts surrounding their issuance and the consideration therefor.

The mortgage executed by the Union Company will be found in Vol. 21, p. 11022, and Article X thereof provides that, "neither of said trustees shall be answerable for any act, omission or default, to which it does not expressly assent, of its co-trustee, or of any agent or attorney selected with reasonable care."

1018 Article XII thereof is as follows:

"Upon the execution and recording of these presents, all the bonds secured hereby shall be executed by the company and delivered to the trustees, and the trustees shall thereupon certify and return to the company, of the said bonds, those numbered 1 to 1850, both inclusive, aggregating the principle sum of One Million Eight Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, without any formality, record, requisition, proof or requirement, and the receipt therefor of the treasurer of the company shall be full acquittance and authority to the trustees for such certification and delivery. And One Hundred and Fifty of said bonds, numbered from 1851 to 2000, both inclusive, aggregating the principal sum of One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars, shall be issued, certified, and held in trust by the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Trust Company, one of said trustees, and the same shall not be negotiated and sold on or before February 1st, 1898, except for the purpose of procuring funds for the payment of any interest coupon or any interest that may before said date become due and delinquent on such of said 2000 bonds as may then be outstanding." (Vol. 21-11025).

The plain provisions of the mortgage would seem to be explicit in relieving the trustees from the duty of inquiring into the use the railroad company intended to make of the bonds.

It became and was obligatory upon the trustees to certify and return to the mortgagor the bonds "without any formality, record requisition, proof or requirement," and it would seem to necessarily follow that the Union Company, so far as the trustees were concerned had the right to do with its bonds as it saw fit, and of which fact every bondholder was advised as he is presumed to have notice of the provisions inserted in the mortgage.

The express terms of the mortgage did not, then, place upon the Trust Company the duties, alleged by the intervenor in paragraph 13, and if any such existed, they must have arisen from implied covenants, and not express ones, on the part of the Trust Company as a co-trustee; in other words, that these alleged duties, (if any), will have to be implied from the relation of the parties, but, in as much as the provisions of the mortgage are explicit as to the requirements made of the trustees, it would seem to be clear that there can be no implied duties, which are inconsistent with the express covenants.

1019 It is contended by the Trust Company that covenants are not to be inferred in a contract under seal, unless it clearly appears therein that the party, against whom the implication is sought to be made, plainly intended to do the act, in respect to which the covenant is sought to be implied.

Frismuth v. Farmers L. & T. Co., 107 Fed., 169;

Fleisher v. Farmers Loan & Trust Company, 58 App., Div. (N. Y.) 473, 619; same case 172 N. Y., 519.

National Water Works Company v. K. C., 78 Fed., l. c., 1., 433, per Brewer J.

In the case last cited Judge Brewer said:

"There are in existence certain trust companies who are engaged in the business of acting as trustees in mortgages, especially railroad mortgages. They are often trustees in successive mortgages from the same grantor, or from different corporations, having a common interest and control. Any question as to the extent of the notice which these trustees take of the transactions of their mortgagors, and the effect of such notice upon parties purchasing bonds from them, is of vast importance. I am unable to concur in the view of the master. I do not think the duty of this trustee was a continuing duty to the extent that it took notice of whatever its mortgagor did with the moneys which it received upon the sale of the bonds, or of the property which it purchased. If there were such continuing duty, then included in it was the obligation to see that the mortgagor expended the moneys which it received in accordance with the expressed purpose of the mortgage, and to take legal measures to compel execution thereof, a failure to do which would make itself responsible to the parties purchasing bonds for all losses occasioned thereby. There is in the mortgage no clause expressly casting such a duty upon the trustee. It contains some 13 articles providing for certifying the bonds in the first instance, the keeping of a registry for the entry of transfers, and for action in case of a default in the payment of either principal or interest. The only other article is the one containing the covenant for further assurance, heretofore quoted. Unless from it a duty of continuing supervision can be implied, the mortgage casts no such duty, although, as indicated, it specially provides for what the trustee shall do, and when it shall act. Now, I think I am warranted in saying that a mere covenant for further assurance, such as is here found, has not been generally understood as casting a special duty upon the trustee or supervising the action of the mortgagor. It must be borne in mind that the trustee was selected and the terms of the trust prescribed by the mortgagor alone, and that, until after the bonds were negotiated, it was acting only as the latter's agent."

1020 The intervenor cited and relied upon Frismuth v. Farmer's L. & T. Co., 95 Fed., 9, affirmed in 107 Fed., 169. The facts in that case were, however, very different from those in the case at bar. The cause of action stated therein was not so much on account of any covenant, express or implied, as it was for neglect of duty imposed by law, and arising from the peculiar terms of the mortgage, then before the court; and it was held that the six years statute of limitations of New York, covering questions sounding in tort, and not the twenty years statute as to questions of sealed instruments applied, and that therefore the cause of action, if any, in that case, was barred.

In the Frismuth case, the mortgage provided that the trustee should certify the bonds, and retain the proceeds thereof, which were to be paid out only on written orders of the railroad company, stating for what purpose such proceeds were to be used, and that the bonds should be delivered to the company only on like orders. The trustee, however, went ahead and issued and delivered the bonds to the company without requiring it to furnish the written statement or orders required by the mortgage, specifying the purposes for which the bonds were to be used, and the decision is based on that fact, as will more fully appear from the following extract from Judge Wallace's opinion (95 Fed., l. c., 9):

"The only possible object of the provision, restricting the trustee from delivering the bonds or their proceeds to the Oregon Company except on orders declaring the purposes, for which they were to be used, was to satisfy investors that the trustee was to supervise the operations of the Oregon Company in respect to the purposes to which it intended to make application of the proceeds, and thus effectuate the promises of that company. The several provisions imply the power and the duty of the trustee to refuse to issue bonds except when supplied with evidence that the avails are to be used conformably with the promises of the Oregon Company. The defendant cannot escape responsibility to those who have brought the bonds upon the theory that the mortgage does not contain any covenants by the trustee prescribing its conduct, except in the event of a default in payment. They are entitled to hold the defendant to the performance of the duties which, from the import of the provisions, that — had a right to suppose the trustee would perform. While its terms exonerate the trustee for a misapplication after it has delivered the bonds or proceeds to the Oregon Company, upon orders of the requisite character, they do not absolve it further. They certainly do not protect the trustee in delivering bonds or proceeds which it knows, or has reason to believe, are not to be 1021 applied properly. The instrument is not to be construed as authorizing the trustee to deliver the bonds or their proceeds upon orders containing such vague and indefinite declarations as were inserted in those given by the Oregon Company. Upon such a construction the provision conferring authority would afford no security for the bondholders, and they would be a mere sham. It was intended to restrict the trustee from delivering bonds or proceeds without information of the specific uses to which, from time to time, they were being applied, in order to enable the trustee to ascertain whether they were being expended comfortably to the promises of the Oregon Company."

By reference to the Union Company mortgage, it will be seen that no such provision is inserted therein, and no such duty is devolved upon the trustee. On the contrary, the Trust Company is required to certify and return the bonds to the railroad company without any formality, record, requisition, proof or requirement, and the Trust Company was neither given the right, nor did it otherwise have the right to supervise the action of the Union Company with respect to its use of the bonds. Until there was a default, the trustee had no other duty except simply to certify and return the bonds to the mortgagor.

In a similar suit brought by other bondholders, and involving the same mortgage, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, disagreed with the conclusions of both Judge Wallace (97 Fed., 7) and the United States Circuit Court of Appeals (107 Fed. 139) as to their having been any neglect on the part of the trustee, the court saying:

"Our attention has been called to an opinion of the learned Judge of the Circuit Court of the United States (Frismuth v. Farmer's Loan and Trust Company, (95 Fed. Rep., pp. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9) giving a general construction to the very mortgage now before us. We agree in the main with the view taken of the duties of the trustee, as stated by that learned Judge, but we do not construe particular provisions of the mortgage as he does. According to the condition of the mortgage under which these bonds were issued, there was no duty of supervision of the trustee such as would require it to see to the appropriation of the money realized by their sale. To import such an obligation, is to contradict the provisions of the mortgage. Nor do we [thing] that the statements delivered by the Oregon Pacific Railroad Company, and upon which the bonds were issued, are so vague and indefinite in their declarations as to have required the trustee to refuse to deliver the bonds upon them."

1022 As to the Intervenor's Claim Being Barred by Statute of Limitations.

2. The claim of the intervenor that the Trust Company was guilty of misconduct as co-trustee, even if supported by the proofs in the record, would be barred by the statute of limitations in this state. Both the five and ten year statutes are pleaded. Sections 4271, 4272, 4273, R. S. Mo., 1899, are as follows:

"SEC. 4271. Period of limitation prescribed.—Civil actions other than those for the recovery of real property, can only be commenced within the periods prescribed in the following sections, after the causes of action shall have accrued.

SEC. 4272. What actions shall be commenced within ten years.—Within ten years: First, an action upon any writing, whether sealed or unsealed, for the payment of money or property; second, actions brought on any covenant of warranty contained in any deed of conveyance of land shall be brought within ten years next after there shall have been a final decision against the title of the covenanter in such deed, and actions on any covenant of seizin contained in any such deed shall be brought within ten years after the cause of such action shall accrue; third, actions for relief, not herein otherwise provided for.

SEC. 4273. What within five years.—Within five years: First, all actions upon contracts, obligations or liabilities express or implied, except those mention in Section 4272, and except upon judgment or decrees of a court of record, and except where a different time is hrein limited; second, and action upon a liability created by a statute other than a penalty or forfeiture; third, an action for trespass upon real estate; fourth, an action for taking, detaining or injuring any goods or chattels, including actions for the recovery of specific personal property, or for any other injury to the person or rights of another, not arising on contract and not herein otherwise enumerated; fifth, an action for relief on the ground of fraud, the cause of action in such case to be deemed not to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party, at any time within ten years, of the facts constituting the fraud."

If any cause of action at all is stated by the intervenor, it is for an injury to the rights of another not arising on contract which is included in the five year statute. (Sec. 4273 R. S. Mo. 1899).

Frismuth v. Trust Co., 95 Fed., 5, affirmed in 107 Fed., 169.

1023 Under the authorities it would seem to be clear that it is not an action on a covenant, express or implied.

In Frismuth v. Trust Co., 107 Fed., 169, it is held:

"Where a railroad mortgage contained no covenant on the part of the trustee, one cannot be implied unless clearly growing out of the language or the obvious intent of the parties; and a suit by the bondholders secured, against the trustee, for its failure to properly protect their interests, is one for a breach of duty implied by law, and not for a breach of covenant for the purpose of determining the statute of limitations applicable to such suit."

In the case at bar the gravaman of the intervening petition is a breach of trust on the part of the trustee, and counsel for respondent properly contend that the real nature of the charge cannot readily be changed by simply adding to or making use of the words "fraudulent", "Wrongfully", and "unlawfully" for the purpose of coverting the petition into a bill for fraud, and as to which the statutory limitation would not begin to run until the discovery of the fraud by the party complaining thereof. In courts, both of law and equity, it is well settled that the facts from which legal inferences are to be drawn, must be stated and mere conclusions not based upon a sufficient showing of facts must be disregarded. This principle is supported by the following cases:

Frismuth v. Trust Co., 107 Fed., 169.
Fogg v. Blair, 139 U. S., 118, 127.
Ambler v. Choteau, 107 U. S., 586, 591.
Kent v. Canal Co., 144 U. S., 75, 91.
Van Weel v. Winston, 115 U. S., 228.

Hence, it follows that averments of the petition to the effect that the Trust Company "did unlawfully and improperly divert the proceeds of said sales" and "did unlawfully use the said proceeds" and "did unlawfully, in breach of its duty as trustee, from time to time, sell and put afloat the said bonds", cannot be regarded as determinative of the question that the intervening petition is, in fact, a bill for fraud and not an action at law for a mere breach of trust on the part of the trustees.

To be more explicit, this is not an action for relief on the ground of fraud so as to bring the action within the ten year limitation after the discovery of the facts constituting the fraud, for the reason, first, that the averments as to the alleged fraud are not sufficiently pleaded to constitute the action a bill for fraud, 1024 and, second, that the real gist of the intervenor's action is simply a breach of duty, on the part of the Trust Company as trustee, in delivering the bonds of the mortgagor, and the fraud, if any, would be wholly immaterial, for if the duty existed, and the respondent failed to discharge such duty, the liability would be created, regardless of whether the responded acted fraudulently or otherwise.

Frismuth v. Trust Co., 107 Fed., 169.

The statute, permitting an action to be brought within ten years after the discovery of the facts, constituting the fraud, is aimed especially against concealed or undiscovered fraud, for if the fraud was open or of such nature that it must necessarily be discovered, by reason of the relation of the parties, then the doctrine of laches could be invoked. The fraud must be such a material element in the cause of action that, if the allegations of fraud were stricken out, the right of action itself would no longer exist.

The following cases will bear out these conclusions:

Michoud v. Girod, 4 How., 503.
Veazie v. Williams, 8 How., 134.
Rosenthal v. Walker, 111 U. S., 185.
Meader v. Morton, 11 Wall., 442.
McIntyre v. Pryor, 33 Fed., 632.

In the case at bar, the right of action to which the intervenor claims it succeeded, and which it now asserts accrued when the respondent, as trustee, delivered the bonds to the mortgagor, for if, as such trustee, it committed a breach of duty in so delivering the bonds to the mortgagor, then the right of action was complete at that time and the statute began to run.

Frismuth v. Trust Co., 95 Fed., 5; 107 Fed., 169.
Mills v. Vivian, 79 Fed., 848.

It is true that in the intervening petition, the statement occurs that "your intervenor was not advised of the foregoing acts of the Trust Company in diverting the proceeds of said bonds until the facts in relation thereto were developed recently in the taking of testimony in support of the ancillary bill in this case;" but it is contended by respondent's counsel that such statement is insufficient, because it does not disclose that any efforts were made to discover the alleged fraud at an earlier day, nor that any means were used by the Trust Company to prevent such discovery.

Woods v. Carpenter, 101 U. S., 135.
Bank v. Carpenter, 101 U. S., 567.
1025 Badger v. Badger, 2 Wall., 87, 95.
Brown v. Buena Vista County, 95 U. S., 157.
Bent v. Priest, 86 Mo., 475.

The chancery courts of the United States recognize the statutes of limitations of the State, in which the court is sitting and adopt them.

Miles v. Vivian, 79 Fed., 848, 852.
Harpending v. Dutch Church, 16 Pet., 455.

This action, being for breach of an implied trust, the doctrine as to the limitation statutes not applying to express trusts, has no bearing upon the claim of the intervenor.

Frismuth v. Trust Co., 95 Fed., 5.
Miles v. Vivian, 79 Fed., 848, 852.

Now, as to the disclosures by the proofs in this cause, it is not controverted that the Union Company was incoporated on December 29, 1891, (Vol. 15-7867), and on February 1, 1893, executed its mortgage to the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Trust Company, changed to Guardian Trust Company, and the Provident Company, as trustee, to secure bonds in the sum of two million dollars, nor that the Belt Company constructed and equipped the Union Railroad, built extensions established valuable connections, and guaranteed the Union Company's bonds, negotiating them through sales to the Trust Company and others from time to time, nor that the only and real consideration to the Belt Company for such services was the issuance to it by the Union Company, of all its bonds except, perhaps, one hundred and fifty of them, which were sold by the respondent, in order to pay interest on outstanding bonds. The contracts, under which the Belt Company acquired these bonds, are set out in Vol. 14, p. 7308, Vol. 15, p. 7874-7890 et seq. It is charged by the intervenor that the arrangement by which the Belt Company received the Union bonds, in consideration of having guaranteed them, and of having built and equipped the Union Company's road was of a fraudulent character. A very similar claim was made by the complainant in the case of Teller v. Tonopah & Goldfield R. R., 155 Fed., 482, where an arrangement very much like the one in controversy was sustained, and held to be beneficial to all concerned, and an attempt to set aside the transactions was said by the Court to be a "little better than an attempted financial holdup."

From the testimony of Mr. Johnson, one of the principal witnesses for the intervenor, it appears that the Belt books show that the Belt Company received the bonds of the Union Company at the 1026 times, for the considerations, and in amounts as follows:

Date and consideration.	Bonds, par val.	Vol. P. of Rec.
Sept. 1892, to Jan. 1893 under construction contract of Aug. 24 1892	$690,000.00	(15–7937)
Jan. 1893, issued to Trust Co. for services	60,000.00	(15–7939)
April, 1893, under contract of April 1893, for extending road to Turner, Kansas	250,000.00	(15–7938)
Nov. 1893, issued to Belt Co., and deposited with Trust Co., to pay interest on Union bonds as per mortgage	150,000.00	(15–7939–40)
May, 1894, issued to Belt Co to cover cost of building extension to stock yards	150,000.00	(15–7940)

Aug. 1895, securing valuable connections and locating industries, etc.	250,000.00	(15–7938)
July, 1898, under contract of July 26, 1898	100,000.00	(15–7939)
Nov. 1898, issued to Belt Co. for purposes of clearing up floating indebtedness of Northern	350,000.00	(15–7940)
Total	$2,000,000.00

In compliance with said Article XII of the mortgage, providing that immediately upon its recording, the trustee shall certify the bonds and return them to the company, the proof shows that the mortgage was recorded in February, 1893, and the bonds delivered shortly thereafter, all of which was more than twelve years before the intervening petition was filed. If it should be held that the cause of action arose when the Union Company negotiated its bonds, then it appears from the above table that the Union Company had issued to the Belt Company the last of the Union bonds prior to November, 1898, whereas, the amended intervening petition in this cause, charging breach of duty, was not filed until more than seven years thereafter.

It also appears from witness Willey's exhibit of the Trust Company's transactions in Union securities (Vol. 1-188) that the last purchase of Union bonds made by the Trust Company was 100 bonds at 95 cts. on February 15, 1899, which was more than six years prior to the filing of the intervening petition; hence, if the action of the Trust Company, in buying Union bonds from the Belt, constituted a breach of duty, on its part as trustee, it would follow that such breach was barred by the five year statutory limitation.

As to Intervenor's Claim Being Barred by Laches.

1027 It is a well known principle of equity jurisprudence that, independently of any statute of limitations, courts of equity have a right to, and do, apply the law of laches, according to the peculiar conditions and surroundings of each individual case, and, that their uniform practice is to decline to assist any person who has slept upon his rights unreasonably long, unless a sufficiently good excuse is shown for the delay.

Miles v. Vivian, 79 Fed., 848-853.

It is shown by the proofs in the record (Vol. 15-7887-88), that the Belt Company kept in its own books a full account of all monies expended by it in the construction and equipment of the Union Terminal railroad, in extending its lines, etc., and showing in detail what the Union Company received for its bonds, and such other facts in connection with the various bond transactions between the Belt and Union companies, as would reasonably explain all such transactions.

It also appears from the record that, pursuant to the modified reorganization plan of November, 1899, promulgated by the Philadelphia Committee, sufficient bonds had been deposited with the Committee before the end of December, 1899, and, thereupon, the plan was declared operative. (Vol. 41-22200.)

The Gulf road was sold at foreclosure sale and purchased by the Committee, on March 19, 1900, and its bid was duly assigned to the Southern, which was incorporated on the same day, (Vol. 41-22224 et seq.,); and, on April 1, 1900, there followed, at the request of the Committee, resignations of the directors under the Stilwell management, the acceptance thereof, and the election of new directors for the Southern Company, all of whom were nominees of that Company and selected by Stuart R. Knott, holding proxies for substantially all the stock of the Belt Company, and the new directors at once took possession of all the books, papers, and property of the Belt and its constituent companies, including the Union Company, (Vol. 52-31433 et seq.). One of these new directors was the witness Johnson, then an auditor of the Southern, and he and witness McCarty, also an auditor of the Southern, have had possession of the Belt and Union Company books since April 1, 1900, (Rec. p. 7115). Both Johnson and McCarty state, however, that, prior to the year 1905, they did not know, nor had they heard, that the Union bonds, or their proceeds, had been misapplied or used contrary to the purposes set forth in the mortgage, (Rec. Vol. 49, p. 30243 and 30198 to 30201).

1028 In the spring of 1900, one Hill, audited the Belt books for the reorganization Committee (Rec. p. 6686).

The general mortgage of the Southern, dated April 2, 1900, recites that it then held and owned 1933 out of a total of 2000 bonds of the Union Company, all of which it had received from the reorganization Committee, (Rec. Vol. 53-35197).

The bill of the Provident Company, for the foreclosure of the Union Company mortgage, was filed on September 6, 1900, and, on December 31, 1900, the sale was made under the decree of foreclosure, and the Southern became the purchaser. It appears from the record that Johnson and McCarty, auditors of the Southern, had access to the Union and Belt books and records from April 1, 1900, and until the amended intervening petition was filed on May 1, 1905, and afterwards. It would seem, then, that, in view of the careful efforts of the reorganization Committee to ascertain the value of the railroads involved, as shown by their proceedings in the record, it is unreasonable to suppose that they were ignorant of the value of the Union Terminal railroad when they acquired the Union bonds; and, being the owner of large amount of Union bonds, deposited with the Committee, actively participated in promoting the reorganization plan, and was one of the depositaries under that plan; in other words, the Trust Company co-operated with the Committee in promoting and bringing about the [consumption] of the reorganization scheme, and, under such circumstances, it would be inequitable to permit the Southern Company, as the successor of the Committee, to assert and maintain in a court of equity the claim of the intervenor in paragraph 13 of its petition.

There can be no question as to the Southern Company, being chargeable with all the knowledge possessed by the reorganization Committee, which promoted it and caused its incorporation.

The Master is of the opinion that, under the proofs in this cause, the Southern Company should have asserted its alleged claim against the Trust Company long before it did in its amended intervening petition; and, further that, in justice to the Trust Company, the intervenor should have asserted such claim before the railroad of the Union Company was foreclosed, so that the Trust Company could have protected itself by purchasing the road at the foreclosure sale, if it so elected, for, otherwise, the Southern Company could wait to know the result of a sale of the mortgaged property, as it did do, in fact, before calling upon the Trust Company, as trustee, to take up its Union bonds, or make good any deficiency in the pay-1029 ment thereof. It is evident that such a course put the trustee in such position as to make it powerless to protect itself, if it had desired to do so.

As to the Southern Being a Bona Fide Holder of the Union Bonds.

4. As a part of the reorganization plan, the Southern Company, through the exchange of its own bonds, for those of the Union Company, acquired the Union bonds; and, for that reason, the Trust Company claims that the Southern does not stand in the attitude of an innocent purchaser of the Union bonds, and, further, that they have been paid and extinguished by the consummation of the reorganization plan, and, hence, that the Southern Company cannot assert any rights to such bonds as the holder thereof.

Central Trust Co. v. R. R., 58 Fed., 500.
Branch v. Jessup 106 U. S., 476, 484.
Vilas v. Page, 106 N. Y., 439.
The Key City, 14 Wallace, 673.

In Central Trust Co. v. R. R., 58 Fed. 500, Judge Taft said that when a reorganization agreement, to which all the bondholders and stockholders of the mortgagor company are parties, provides for an exchange of new securities, to be issued after the purchase of the road at judicial sale, for existing securities, the consummation of the plan operates as a payment of the old bonds, which are extinguished and no rights can be asserted by the holders thereof under them.

In the case at bar, it was provided in and by the reorganization plan, that the capital stock and bonds of the constituent companies, comprising the Belt system, should be purchased by the Southern Company and pledged under its new first mortgage, to be placed upon all its properties, as hereinbefore stated; but said plan also contained a provision to the effect that, after acquiring said stocks and bonds, in furtherance of the unification of the main line (Gulf) and its associated terminal companies (the Belt and Dock systems), and, in that way, getting the control and possession of said companies, it was proposed to "thereafter adjust the bonded indebtedness, standing against the properties of the Belt and Dock companies, by retiring the present bonds and issuing, in lieu thereof, new 3½ per cent bonds to be based upon and restricted to the net earnings of said prospective properties, as they might appear on future operations."

The Southern Company was the owner, on December 31, 1901, of 1995 of the 2000 Union Terminal bonds, the same having 1030 been obtained in exchange for securities of the Southern Company. (Ingel's exhibit 6, Rec. 48-28820).

As shown by the foreclosure order and decree of the Union Terminal property, on November 6, 1901, there was then due, in principal and interest, the total sum of $2,273,246.43 (Rec. 48-28775 to 28810), and, for which the Union railroad property was sold by the Commissioner, on December 31, 1901, to the Kansas City Southern Railway Company for $1,500,000.00, thus leaving a deficiency of $773,246.43, being the amount due as of date November 6, 1901 (Rec. 57-34839 to 34847); but the additional interest, up to December 31, 1901 would swell the deficiency on that date to $790,528.13. (See Ingel's exhibit 6, Rec. 48-28820 to 28822.)

It is not disputed that the new bonds were issued pursuant to the terms of the reorganization scheme. The foreclosure sale of the Union railroad had, however, already been made, and the amount of said deficiency in the payment of the bonded indebtedness had been fixed thereby before the Union railroad property became legally subject to the lien of the new Southern mortgage.

In so far as concerned the mortgage lien securing the bonds it was extinguished by the foreclosure sale, regardless of said deficiency, and the holder of the unpaid bonds had the right to enforce the payment of the balance due thereon by all proper legal measures, unless the enforcement of such right was abridged or controlled in some way, by the reorganization plan.

The evident intention of said plan was to harmonize, unify and centralize all the interests involved in the Gulf and allied terminal companies, into one great corporation, the combined properties of which should be encumbered with the general mortgage securing the new 3½ per cent Southern bonds; and there is nothing in the reorganization scheme, which tends to show any intention to acquire or obtain any advantages from the ownership of the bonds of the constituent companies, other than required for the consummation and carrying out of the modified reorganization plan. Certain it is, that the Trust Company, when depositing its own Union bonds with the Committee, and otherwise co-operating with it in bringing about the reorganization, had no intimation that the Union bonds were to be used for the purpose of establishing a large liability against the respondent, as now attempted by intervenor, to the extent of said bond deficiency of $790,528.13, on December 31, 1901.

The Master is of the opinion that, under the facts and circumstances, shown in the record, and hereinbefore set forth, in 1031 respect to the reorganization scheme and the connection of the respondent therewith, the acquisition of the Union bonds

by the Committee did not carry with it the legal or equitable right to require the respondent to make good said bond reficiency, even though, under the circumstances, the respondent might be held liable therefor to other parties.

If, however, the findings of — Master, against the validity of the alleged claim on its merits, are correct, then it is immaterial whether or not the ownership of the Union bonds by the Committee and the intervenor imparted the right of action claimed by the intervenor herein.

General Findings and Recommendations of the Master Upon the Whole Cause.

First. It is the opinion of the Master, and he so recommends, that each and all of the paragraphs of the second ancillary bill, respecting the different items of complaints or charges therein contained, should be dismissed, as being without equity, excepting the following:

(a) Paragraph 13, in respect to the West Kansas City Land Company transaction, and as to which the complainants are entitled to a credit on the Trust Company's account with the Belt Company of $5,600.00, with six per cent interest thereon, from and after November 28th, 1892;

(b) The Zumwalt transaction, in paragraph 14, wherein $5,000.00 was deposited with the defendant Trust Company, to cover its liability as surety on an appeal bond, and for which, with six per cent interest from and after May 19, 1903, the complainants are entitled to have a credit on the Trust Company's statement of account with the Belt Company;

(c) Also as to the item of $11,250.00, mentioned in paragraph 21, being the amount received by Mark Hubbert, treasurer of the defendant Trust Company, from the reorganization Committee, in payment of 450 additional coupons (being other coupons than the 1,527 also mentioned in said paragraph, these 450 coupons belonging at that time to the Trust Company), and by reason of which payment to the Trust Company, the complainants are entitled to be credited on the Trust Company's account with the Belt Company, for said sum of $11,250.00, with six per cent interest thereon from and after July 14, 1900.

Second. That each and all of the paragraphs of the intervening petition should be dismissed, as being without either law or equity to maintain them, excepting paragraph 6, in respect to the Cen-1032 tral Improvement Company lands; and that the Trust Company is entitled to hold, and subject to the payment of its indebtedness against the Belt Company, all the securities held in pledge by it, described in the intervening petition.

Third. That the Southern Company is not liable in any way for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company.

Fourth. That there is no equity in the Cambria bill as against the Guardian Trust Company, and that the allegations in said bill, in respect to the domination and control by the Trust Company over the Belt, and also over the so-called allied or subsidiary companies, all fail, for the reasons hereinbefore stated in respect to the issues upon the second ancillary bill; and hence, the injunction heretofore issued in this cause restraining the Trust Company from disposing of the stocks, bonds, accounts, and other properties held by it as collateral, should be dissolved, and the moneys on deposit in the National Bank of Commerce, or the securities which stand in place thereof, should be returned to the Trust Company, together with any interest or profits that may have accrued thereon; and the bill of complaint of the Cambria Company should be dismissed as to the Guardian Trust Company for want of equity.

Fifth. That the Guardian Trust Company now owns and holds the promissory notes described in paragraph 123 of its answer to the amended and supplemental ancillary bill of Knott and Swinney, receivers of the Belt Company, and it also holds an account against the Belt Company, being Exhibit "A", attached to its said answer, and on which the balance due the Trust Company is $31,809.49; and for the payment of the aggregate amount of said notes and balance of account, with interest thereon, less the amounts hereinbefore stated as being due to the Belt Company from the Trust Company, the Trust Company is entitled to subject all the collaterals pledged to it by the Belt Company as security for said indebtedness, and being the same collateral securities mentioned and described in paragraph 125 of defendant's said answer to the amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint.

Sixth. That the Trust Company is entitled to a judgment against the complainants for the sum of $34,061.46, paid by the Trust Company to the First National Bank of Kansas City, Missouri, on March 27, 1905, in satisfaction of a certain judgment rendered by the Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri, in cause No. 1604, entitled The First National Bank of Kansas City v. The Guardian Trust Company, and affirmed by the Supreme Court of Missouri on March 16, 1905, which said judgment was entered against 1033 the defendant on a certain promissory note made by the Belt Company on March 26, 1900, in favor of said bank for $25,000.00, due sixty days after date, with interest after maturity at seven per cent per annum until paid, which said note was indorsed by the defendant Trust Company solely for the accommodation of the Belt Company, and the full proceeds of said note having been paid by said bank to the Belt Company, which derived the sole benefit thereof; and hence, the defendant Trust Company is entitled to be reimbursed by the Belt Company and its receiver for said sum of $34,061.46, with seven per cent interest thereon from and after March 27, 1907.

Seventh. During the argument before the Master in this cause, it was stated by counsel for complainants that a dismissal would be entered as to the Second Street Improvement Company, but, as this has not been done, the master recommends that this action, in all its parts, be dismissed as to said company.

Respectfully submitted,

SHANNON C. DOUGLASS,
Special Master.

Afterwards, to-wit, on the 22nd day of June, 1910, the Supplemental Report of Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, was filed. Said Supplemental Report is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY

v.

KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY et al.

E. F. SWINNEY, Receiver,

v.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

Ancillary Bill.

Additional Report of Special Master.

Now comes Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, and in addition to the report heretofor filed, further reports:

On November 20, 1901, a stipulation was filed herein, a copy of which is hereto attached as Exhibit 1. All costs incurred by the Cambria Steel Company prior to that date have been paid excepting the Master's compensation. From that date the accounting and taking of the testimony has been as between parties other than the Cambria Steel Company, and pursuant to such stipulation. Coun-1034 sel for the Cambria Steel Company contends that no costs after that date should be taxed to that company.

June 21, 1901.

SHANNON C. DOUGLASS,
Special Master.

EXHIBIT 1.

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

STUART R. KNOTT and EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY and FRANCIS M. BLACK, Its Receiver; Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company and Wash Adams, Its Receiver; Central Improvement Company and Wash Adams, Its Receiver; Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Cross Bill.

Stipulation.

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between Stuart R. Knott and Edward F. Swinney, Receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, complainants in the cross bill in the above entitled cause, and the defendants the Guardian Trust Company and Francis M. Black, Its Receiver, Second Street Improvement Company and Cambria Steel Company, as follows:

First. That the said complainants shall withdraw or dismiss their cross bill heretofore filed herein and shall file an amended cross-bill, in the nature of an ancillary bill in this cause, making the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company a co-plaintiff with them in said amended ancillary cross bill, and that said amended ancillary cross bill shall be filed on or before the 15th day of November, 1901, 1035 and that the defendants the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver, and the Second Street Improvement Company and the Cambria Steel Company, shall have leave to plead or answer to said amended ancillary cross bill on or before the first Monday in December, 1901.

Second. That the accounting between the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers, and the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver, sought by the said amended ancillary cross bill, shall be expedited by all of the parties hereto, and whatever balance, if any, that may be found due to the said Guardian Trust Company or its receiver, from the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company or its receivers shall be entered up in this cause as a judgment in favor of the said Trust Company and its receiver and against the Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers, without the necessity of presenting any claim therefor by way of cross bill; or other affirmative pleading; and whatever balance, if any, that may be found due to the said Suburban Belt Railroad Company or its receivers, from said Guardian Trust Company, or its receivers shall be entered up in this cause as a judgment in favor of the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers and against the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver.

Dated this 12th day of November, 1901.

STUART R. KNOTT AND
EDWARD F. SWINNEY,
Receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Co.,

By THOMAS R. MORROW,
S. W. MOORE, Their Solicitors.
GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY AND
FRANCIS M. BLACK, Its Receiver.
F. M. BLACK AND
TRIMBLE & BRALEY, Its Solicitors.
SECOND STREET IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By TRIMBLE & BRALEY, Its Solicitors.

The Cambria Steel Company consents and agrees to the foregoing stipulation with the understanding that it shall in no way prejudice the right, if any, which the Cambria Steel Company has, to subject any debt found to be due from the Guardian Trust Company or to subject any property or collateral or the proceeds thereof, heretofore or now in the hands of the Guardian Trust Company or its receiver, or his or its assigns, towards the satisfaction of the Cambria 1036 Steel Company's judgment against the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and that all testimony introduced by any party herein shall be with the understanding that the Cambria Steel Company or any party to the original cause can, if it or they so desire, use the same upon the final hearing of the issues joined in the original cause, and that the issues joined in the original cause and also the issues to be joined on the said ancillary cross bill referred to in the foregoing stipulation shall be heard together and tried and determined at the same time.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY,
By FRANK HAGERMAN,
Its Solicitor.

I make no objection to the foregoing.

WASH ADAMS, Deft.,
Receiver Mo. Elevator & Term. Co. &
The Central Improvement Co.

Afterwards, to-wit, on the 17th day of June, 1910, the Exceptions of Guardian Trust Company to the Report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master was filed. Said Exceptions are in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Raliroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

No. 2468.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver, Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants.

Ancillary Bill.
Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

1037 Exceptions of Guardian Trust Company to the Report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master.

And now comes Guardian Trust Company, defendant, and excepts to the report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed in this cause on the 21st day of May, 1910, and for cause for exception shows:

First. That the Master has in said report (pages 341 to 346), stated and certified that he finds that "the titles to the following tracts of land should be vested by decree in the Belt Company, to-wit: Real Estate Purchases No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, No. 6, No. 9, No. 10, the unsold part of No. 11, Nos. 12 and 13, No. 20, an undivided half of No. 21, Nos. 22 and 23, No. 24, No. 27, No. 29, and real estate purchases "A" and "B", and also that the "Intervenor (meaning thereby the Kansas City Southern Belt Railroad Company) is entitled to the judgment, order and decree of this Court requiring the Central Company and its receiver to convey to said Intervenor those portions of said real estate hereinbefore found to be appurtenant to said railroads and included within the after-acquired real estate clause of their mortgage (page 346), (meaning thereby the real estate purchases next hereinbefore described in the Master's said report, and which are more particularly described in the inventory of Wash Adams, Receiver for said Central Improvement Company, filed in this cause on April 15, 1901, which descriptions are, by reference, made a part of these exceptions as fully as if set forth herein at length) whereas the Master ought to have found:

(a) That by reason of the law and the evidence, as stated in the report of said Master, requiring the dismissal of the original bill of the Cambria Steel Company in this cause, said Intervenor is not entitled to relief under the intervening petitions filed herein by the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and that said petitions as to each and all of the parts thereof should be dismissed.

(b) That the facts do not support the allegations of said intervening petitions of said Southern Railway Company, and that said real estate hereinbefore, and in the Master's report described, and each and every part and parcel of the same, was not appurtenant to the railroads described in said Master's report, was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, and was not included within the after-acquired property clause of the mortgages of the Gulf, Union Terminal and Belt Companies, and that said
1038 intervening petitions should in these respects and for these reasons [should] be dismissed as to each and all the parties thereof.

(c) That by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Real Estate Purchases No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, and No. 11 are located within the State of Kansas it is beyond the jurisdiction of this Court to decree the divesting of the title to the same out of the said Central Improvement Company, or requiring it to convey the same.

(d) That by reason of the fact and for the cause that the Central Improvement Company, the Union Terminal Railroad Company, the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, and the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company were not made parties to the intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, did not consent to such intervention, were not served with process thereunder, and never appeared to the same, there is a defect of parties necessary for such decree as is recommended and this Court is without jurisdiction to render a decree divesting title to said property out of said Central Improvement Company, or requiring it to convey the same.

(e) That by reason of the laches of the Southern Company and the Statute of Limitations, the intervening petitions of the Kansas City Southern Railway should be dismissed in all their parts.

Second. The Master has in said report stated (on page 461 thereof) as follows: "That the Southern Company is not in any way liable for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company", whereas the Master in his report should have omitted reference to or recommendation concerning the question of the liability of the Southern for said floating indebtedness of the Belt for the following reasons:

(a) The Master having found and stated in his report that by reason of the laches of the Southern Company and the Statute of Limitations said intervening bill was not maintainable against this defendant, therefore the said bill should be dismissed as to each and all the parts thereof.

(b) That said finding is unnecessary for the determination of this cause upon the facts found by him, and its incorporation in a decree in this cause would be unnecessary and immaterial.

(c) That by reason of the fact and for the cause that no relief was asked by this defendant against said intervenor and because the Master found that the other defenses interposed by this defendant to the intervention of the Southern were valid, such 1039 finding is unnecessary and immaterial in the rendition of the decree in this cause.

(d) That in a cause determined on a supplemental petition in this cause exhibited by said intervenor and said Belt Company against this defendant which was finally decided by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in a cause entitled Guardian Trust Company, Appellant, v. Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, et al., Appellees, numbered 2827, and reported in Federal Reporter Volume 171, page 43, the law of this case was enunciated by said United States Circuit Court of Appeals that the personal liability of said intervenor was not in issue in this cause and that said matter was for the determination of the Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri, in three causes then and now pending in said Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri, at Kansas City, and that said ruling and determination is binding upon all the parties to this cause, and upon this Court and upon the Master appointed by this Court. Said finding and decision of said Circuit Court of Appeals is as follows:

"The liability of the Southern Company to pay the debts which the Trust Company alleges in the actions at law it has promised to pay, is not in issue and cannot be determined in the suit in equity, and the state court has no jurisdiction over and cannot interfere in those actions in personam with the specific property which is the subject of the litigation in the federal court."

(e) That by reason of the law and the evidence, as stated in the report of said Master, requiring the dismissal of the original bill of the Cambria Steel Company in this cause, said Intervenor is not entitled to relief under the intervening petition filed herein by the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and that said petitions as to each and all of the parts thereof should be dismissed.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
EDWARD P. GATES,
Its Solicitor.

GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.
Of Counsel.

June 17th, 1910. Filed and overruled by me.
SHANNON C. DOUGLASS,
Special Master.

Afterwards, to wit, on the 17th day of June, 1910, the Exceptions of Central Improvement Company to the Report of the 1040 Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master was filed. Said Exceptions is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

No. 2468.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver, Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants.

Ancillary Bill.

Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Exceptions of Central Improvement Company to the Report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master.

And now comes the Central Improvement Company by Huston Crittenden, its receiver, and excepts to the report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed in this cause on the 21st day of May, 1910, and for cause of exception shows:

First. That the Master in said report (on page 341 thereof) stated and certified that:

"he finds that the titles to the following tracts should be vested by a decree in the Southern Company, to-wit:

Real Estate Purchases No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, No. 6, No. 9, No. 10, and the unsold part of No. 11, Nos. 12 and 13, No. 20, and undivided half of No. 21, Nos. 22 and 23, No. 24, No. 27, No. 29, and real estate purchases 'A' and 'B'."

and also (on page 346 thereof) that:

"The intervenor is entitled to the judgment order and decree of this Court, requiring the Central Company and its receiver, 1041 to convey to said intervenor those portions of said real estate hereinbefore found to be appurtenant to said railroads, and included within the after-acquired property clause of their mortgages."

and also (on page 346 thereof) that:

"Each and all of the paragraphs of the intervening petition should be dismissed, as being without either law or equity to support them, excepting paragraph 8, in respect to the Central Improvement Company lands."

This defendant says that instead of said findings the Master should have found as follows, namely:

(a) That by reason of the fact and for the cause that this defendant neither stipulated nor consented to the filing of the intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern in this cause, and that it never was served with process issued upon said intervening petition, and that it never filed answer to said petition, nor in any manner appeared thereto, this Court is without jurisdiction under said intervening petition to divest from this defendant the title to the properties in said intervening petition described, (which properties are more particularly described in the inventory of Wash Adams, Receiver of said Central Improvement Company, filed in this cause on April 15, 1901, which descriptions are by reference hereby made a part of these exceptions as fully as if herein set forth at length) and which properties are, as hereinbefore stated, referred to and described by the Master as real estate purchases No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4, No. 6, No. 9, No. 10, the unsold part of No. 11, Nos. 12 and 13, an undivided half of No. 21, Nos. 22 and 23, No. 24, No. 27, No. 29, and real estate purchases "A" and "B".

(b) The Master having found in his general findings and recommendations upon the whole cause (page 460) that each and all of the paragraphs specifically named on page 460 of said report, which do not relate to this defendant) has found that the prayer of the Belt for the transfer of the property of this defendant to the Belt should be denied and that the second ancillary bill of said Belt should be dismissed in respect to said matters. Therefore, the Master's statement on said page 341 of his said report stating in substance that said property hereinbefore described should be vested by decree in the Belt Company is in conflict with and inconsistent with his finding that the prayer of the intervenor the Kansas City Southern should be sustained as respects the above described properties of the Central.

1042 (c) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase Number 1 (page 327 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Union Terminal Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Union Terminal Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact that said Union Terminal Company was not made a party either to the second (or any other) ancillary bill or to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest said real estate purchase No. 1 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern. And further, because said land described as real estate purchase No. 1 is located in the State of Kansas, it is not within the jurisdiction of this Court to divest the title of the same out of this defendant and invest it in either said Belt or said Southern Company.

(d) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 2, (page 328 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Union Terminal Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Union Terminal Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact that said Union Terminal Company was not made a party either to the second (or any other) ancillary bill or to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest said real estate purchase No. 2 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern. And further, because said land described as real estate purchase No. 2 is located in the State of Kansas, it is not within the jurisdiction of this Court to divest the title of the same out of this defendant and invest it in either said Belt or said Southern Company.

(e) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 3 (page 329 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Union Terminal Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Union Terminal Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact that said Union Terminal Company was not made a party either to the second (or any other) ancillary bill or to 1043 the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest said real estate purchase No. 3 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern. And further, because said land described as real estate purchase No. 3 is located in the state of Kansas, it is not within the jurisdiction of this Court to divest the title of the same out of this defendant and invest it in either said Belt or said Southern Company.

(f) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 4 (page 330 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Union Terminal Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Union Terminal Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact that said Union Terminal Company was not made a party either to the second (or any other) ancillary bill or to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest said real estate purchase No. 4 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern. And further, because said land described as real estate purchase No. 4 is located in the state of Kansas, it is not within the jurisdiction of this court to divest the title of the same out of this defendant and invest it in either said Belt or said Southern Company.

(g) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 6 (page 327 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Gulf Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Gulf Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Gulf Company was not made a party to this suit or to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the said real estate purchase No. 6 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(h) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 9 (page 332 of his report) that said real estate 1044 purchase was not necessary for railroad purchases at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the title to the said real estate purchase No. 9 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(i) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 10, (Page 333 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the said real estate purchase No. 10 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(j) The Master should have found in respect to the unsold part of Real Estate Purchase No. 11 (page 334 of his report) that the said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Union Terminal Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Union Terminal Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact that said Union Terminal Company was not made a party either to the second (or any other) ancillary bill or to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest said real estate purchase No. 11 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern. And further because said land described as the unsold part of real estate purchase No. 11 is located in the state of Kansas, it is not within the jurisdiction of this Court to divest the title of the same out of this defendant and invest it in either said Belt or said Southern 1045 Company.

(k) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 12 (page 335 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the real estate purchase No. 12 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(l) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 13 (page 335 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent of the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was not relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the said real estate purchase No. 13 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(m) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 20 (page 336 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the said real estate purchase No. 20 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(n) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 21 (page 336 of his report) that said real estate
1046 purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the said real estate purchase No. 21 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(o) The Master should have found in respect to the unsold part of real estate purchase No. 22 (page 337 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the unsold part of real estate purchase No. 22 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(p) The Master should have found as respects the unsold part of real estate purchase No. 23 (page 337 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes, at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact that for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the unsold part of said real estate purchase No. 23 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(q) That the Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 24 (page 338 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the 1047 Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the real estate purchase No. 24 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(r) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 27 (page 339 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the real estate purchase No. 27 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(s) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchase No. 29 (page 339 of his report) that said real estate purchase was not necessary for railroad purposes at the time it was purchased, that it was not appurtenant to the property of the Belt Company, that it did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said inter-ention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the real estate purchase No. 29 out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

(t) The Master should have found in respect to real estate purchases "A" and "B" (page 340 of his report) that said real estate purchases were not necessary for railroad purposes at the time they were purchased, that they were not appurtenant to the prop-

1048 erty of the Belt Company, that they did not pass under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt Company's mortgage, and that by reason of the fact and for the cause that said Belt Company was not made a party to the amended or original intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railroad Company, did not consent to the filing of the same, was not served with process, nor appeared in said intervention, and that there was no relief prayed for against it, there was a lack of jurisdiction of the Court to divest the real estate purchases "A" and "B" out of this defendant and invest the title to the same in the Southern.

Second. The Master should have found that by reason of the want of equity in the original bill in this case, and his recommendation that said original complaint of the Cambria Steel Company should be dismissed, (page 461 of said report), that all the ancillary and intervening bills based thereon should also be dismissed and that this defendant should be discharged at the cost of said Cambria Company.

ED P. GATES & GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitor for Huston Crittenden, Receiver for Central Improvement Company.

Of Counsel.

June 17, 1910. Filed and overruled by me.

SHANNON C. DOUGLASS,
Special Master.

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, THE UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

No. 2468.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Com-
1049 pany and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver, Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants.

Ancillary Bill.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Complainant.

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILroad Company and Edward F. Swinney, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company; Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, its Receiver; Cambria Steel Company, Northern Townsite Company and its Receiver, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Defendants.

Intervening Petition.

Final Decree.

This cause, coming on to be heard upon the original bill of complaint of the Cambria Steel Company, the original, first and second amended and supplemental ancillary bills of complaint of Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers, the original and amended intervening petitions of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and the answers of the defendants in said bills and petitions respectively, and all the papers and proceedings filed and taken in this cause, including the evidence taken before the Special Master, Hon. Shannon C. Douglass, and the Master's report thereon, and all exceptions heretofore filed to said report, was thereupon argued by Frank Hagerman of counsel for the Cambria Steel Company, S. W. Moore and Thomas R. Marks of counsel for the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and Edward F. Swinney, its Receiver, and S. W. Moore and Thomas R. Marks of counsel for The Kansas City Southern Railway Company and E. P. Gates and Geo. H. English, Jr., of counsel for the Guardian Trust Company and Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, and Thomas B. Buckner, of counsel for Northern Townsite Company and its Receiver, Fairmount Amusement Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, The Union Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line; and the court being fully advised in the premises doth thereupon upon consideration thereof order, adjudge and decree as follows, to-wit:

I. That all and singular the exceptions filed by each and all of the parties to this cause to the report of Shannon C. Douglass Special Master, filed herein on May 21st, 1910, be and the same are hereby overruled; and the said report of the Special Master is hereby in all things approved and confirmed.

1050 II. That there is no equity in the original bill of the Cambria Steel Company as against any of the parties to this cause and that said bill be and the same is hereby dismissed; and that the injunction heretofore issued in this cause restraining the defendant, Guardian Trust Company from disposing of the stocks, bonds, accounts and other properties held by it as collateral and described in said order of injunction, be and the same is hereby dissolved.

III. That all and singular the allegations of the ancillary bill of complaint of Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and Stuart R. Knott and Edward F. Swinney, its Receivers, filed herein November 20th, 1901, and of the first and second amended and supplemental ancillary bills of complaint of Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and E. F. Swinney, its sole Receiver, filed herein March 22nd, 1905, and July 2nd, 1906, respectively, are true in respect to the following complaints or charges therein contained:

(a) Paragraph 13 of said second amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint in respect to the West Kansas City Land Company transaction, as to which the complainants therein are entitled to a credit on the Guardian Trust Company's account with the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company of $5600.00 with 6% interest thereon from and after November 28th, 1892.

(b) Paragraph 14 of said second amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint in respect to the Zumwalt transaction, as to which the complainants therein are entitled to a credit, on the Guardian Trust Company's account with the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, of $5,000 with 6% interest thereon from and after May 19th, 1903.

(c) Paragraph 21 (Item c) of said second amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint in respect to the amount received by Mark Hubbert, Treasurer of the Guardian Trust Company, from the Reorganization Committee in payment of 450 additional coupons, as to which the complainants therein are entitled to a credit, on the Guardian Trust Company's account with the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company of $11,250 with 6% interest thereon from and after July 14th, 1900.

As to all and singular the other allegations in the original and first and second amended and supplemental, ancillary bills of complaint, the said bills are without equity and are hereby dismissed.

1051 IV. That all and singular the allegations contained in paragraphs 123 and 124 and the supplemental account of the Guardian Trust Company in connection with said paragraph 124 filed September 22nd, 1905, of the answer of the Guardian Trust Company, to the second amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint, except as stated in paragraph III hereof, are true, and that the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company is indebted to the Guardian Trust Company, upon the following promissory notes, open account, and judgment described in said paragraphs:

One note dated March 31, 1899, due July 2, 1899, for $50,000.00, with interest from date at the rate of six per cent per annum, on which there has been paid and credited on June 14, 1900, $12,500.00 and which note with interest at this date amounts to $65,848.67.

One note dated July 26, 1899, due on demand for $203,900.00 with interest at six per cent per annum from date, upon which there was paid and credited on June 11, 1900, $9,996.65, and which note with interest at this date amounts to $327,423.90.

One note dated October 23, 1899, due on demand, for $7,162.40, with interest at six per cent per annum from date, which with interest at this date amounts to $11,748.70.

One note dated November 7, 1899, due January 8, 1900, for $50,000.00 with interest after maturity at eight per cent per annum, upon which there was paid and credited June 14th, 1900, $12,500 00, and which note with interest at this date amounts to $70,715.87.

One note dated January 25, 1900, due May 25, 1900, for $25,000.00 with interest after maturity at six per cent per annum; interest paid to September 1, 1901, and which with interest at this date amounts to $38,225.00.

One note dated February 8, 1900, due May 13, 1900, for $109,500.00 with interest from maturity at eight per cent per annum, on which there was paid and credited October 23, 1900, as proceeds of sale of collateral made by the National Bank of Commerce, $110,250.00, leaving a balance due on October 23, 1900, of $3,240.66 and which with interest at this date amounts to $5,748.14.

One note dated September 21, 1899, for $23,056.48, wtih interest after date at eight per cent per annum, and which with interest at this date amounts to $42,905.50.

One note dated February 9, 1900, due June 11, 1900, for $10,400.00 with interest from maturity at six per cent per annum 1052 and which with interest at this date amounts to $16,664.26.

Also an item of $34,061.46 for and on account of a certain judgment paid by the Guardian Trust Company to the First National Bank of Kansas City, Missouri, on March 27th, 1905, which with interest at seven per cent, from and after March 27th, 1905, aggregates at this date $46,565.76.

Also, upon an open account, on which the balance due said Guardian Trust Company on September 26, 1909, was $31,809.49, and which with interest at this date amounts to $50,412.62; and upon which account said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company is entitled to the credits mentioned and described in paragraph III of this decree.

That after allowing said credits on said account there is justly due and payable from said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to Guardian Trust Company, at this date, the total sum of $639,658.86 of which sum $473,723.59 shall bear interest at six per cent per annum, $46,565.76 shall bear interest at seven per cent per annum, and $119,369.51 shall bear interest at eight per cent per annum; and for the collection and enforcement of said total sum due and owing by said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the Guardian Trust Company, the latter is entitled to have execution issued in the form used in the Circuit Courts in suits at common law in actions of assumpsit.

V. That as security for said indebtedness of said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to said Guardian Trust Company, said Guardian Trust Company is entitled to subject all of the collateral pledged to it by Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company as security for said indebtedness, or the proceeds thereof, namely:

10,000 shares of the capital stock of the Union Company.

4,997 shares of capital stock of the Union Company.

4,994 shares of capital stock of the Air Line.

1,120 shares of the capital stock of the Central Improvement Company.

439 shares of stock of the Northern Townsite Company.

425 shares of stock of the Missouri Elevator and Terminal Company.

25 shares of stock of the Fairmount Amusement Company.

13920 shares of stock of the Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company.

67 9/10 second mortgage bonds of the said Northern Connecting Company.

1053 23 First Mortgage Bonds of the Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company.

26 First Mortgage bonds of the Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company.

315 first mortgage bonds of the Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company; also,

A certain account and claim of the Belt Company against the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, consisting of charges for material furnished and labor performed, switching charges and terminal rentals, due from the said Gulf Railroad Company to the said Belt Company, and which account on its face amounts to approximately $132,805.44, but inasmuch as the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company is not a party to this proceeding, no finding is intended to be made as to the exact amount of this claim.

343 1940/2240 tons of steel rails, also,

16 1712/2000 tons of fastenings.

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the act of Guardian Trust Company in heretofore selling certain of said collateral securities and applying the same upon the account of said Belt Company to said Guardian Trust Company as hereinbefore set forth, be and the same is hereby approved, and the Guardian Trust Company is hereby authorized to retain as its own the proceeds of ninety-nine first mortgage bonds and coupons of the Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company, together with the interest accrued thereon, which bonds were heretofore on November 1, 1901, sold for the sum of $40,001.25, under an order of this Court in the cause of Bierce v. Guardian Trust Company, et al., dated October 30, 1901, and which sum was under said order, by the Receiver of the Guardian Trust Company appointed in that case, placed in a separate fund to await the outcome of this litigation.

VI. It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that all and singular the allegations in the intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company filed herein February 27th, 1905, and in the amended intervening petition filed herein May 1st, 1905, are true in so far as they relate to the title, and ownership of the property of the Central Improvement Company, hereinafter specifically described.

That the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Kansas City and Independence Air Line, Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company and The Union Terminal Railroad Com-1054 pany were railway companies and each owned and operated a standard gauge railroad in or about Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas; and that between October 1892 and November 1898 each of said railway companies purchased certain lands in Jackson County, Missouri, and in Wyandotte County, Kansas, hereinafter specifically described, for the purposes of its railroad, and the said lands so purchased by each of said railway companies, respectively, constituted a part of its railroad and were reasonably necessary for the transaction of its business and the operation of its railroad; that the lands so purchased by each of said railway companies were paid for by the railway company so purchasing the same but the title to the said lands so purchased by each of said companies was for convenience taken in the name of defendant, Central Improvement Company, which last named corporation was organized for the purpose of holding such title and did in fact hold the same as trustee for the said railway companies, respectively; that after each of said railway companies purchased said lands, respectively, and paid for the same, the said Central Improvement Company, as a matter of convenience, issued its capital stock to the railway company making the payment in an amount approximately equal to the amount so paid.

That the railroad property and franchises of each of said railway companies were encumbered with a mortgage or deed of trust duly executed, delivered and recorded prior to the date of the purchase or acquisition of the said lands, each of which mortgages or deeds of trust covered all the franchises and property of every name and description then owned or possessed by the railway company executing the same and also all property and assets, legal or equitable, which such company should acquire in the future as a part of its railroad; that each of said mortgages or deeds of trust was a valid and subsisting lien upon the property existing and to be acquired of the railway company executing the same at the time of the purchase and acquisition of the said lands by such company and the lien of the mortgage and of the after acquired property clause thereof of each of said railway companies attached to the lands purchased by the company executing the same and constituted a valid and subsisting mortgage lien thereon; that in the years 1899, 1900, 1901 and 1902 each of said mortgages was duly foreclosed in actions brought for that purpose in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri and for the District of Kansas, and all of the property of each of said companies was, under the decree of foreclosure and sale rendered therein, duly sold, and the intervenor, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, duly 1055 purchased the same at the foreclosure sales and became the lawful owner and holder of each and all of said properties and it now the lawful owner and entitled to the possession thereof, which said properties are more particularly described as follows, to-wit:

Real Estate Purchase #1 being all that part commencing at a point in the South line of Cheyenne Avenue, Kansas City, Kansas, 30 feet West of the North and South ½ Section line through the center of Section 22, Township 11, Range 25; thence west along said South line of Cheyenne avenue, 37.8 feet; thence in a Southwest direction on a straight line forming an angle of 56″ 9′ with said South line of Cheyenne Avenue, 680 feet more or less, to the Northerly boundary line of a tract of land owned by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co.; thence in a northeasterly direction along said Northerly boundary line (the same being a curved line to the left) 575 feet, more or less, to a point in the West line of a 60 foot street, (the center line of which street is the North and South ½ Section line through the center of Section 22, Township 11, Range 25); thence along the West line of said street 197 feet to the place of beginning and containing an area of 1.65 acres.

All in Wyandotte County, Kansas.

Real state Purchase #2 being a certain strip or piece of land situated partly in the Southeast quarter of Section 21, and partly in the Southwest quarter of Section 22, Township 11, Range 25, in Wyandotte County, Kansas, and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the South line of the right of way of the Union Terminal Railroad, as said right of way is described in the deed to the Union Terminal Railroad Co., recorded in book 204 at page 418, and following, of the Real Estate Records of Wyandotte County, Kansas, where said South line would be intersected by the prolongation or extension Southward of the East line of Tenth Street (formerly 20th Street), in Kansas City, Kansas; thence in an Easterly direction along said line of right of way 2178 feet; thence South 208.3 feet; thence in a Westerly direction on a line parallel to the South line of said right of way of the Union Terminal Railroad, and at the uniform distance of 200 feet from same, 2178 feet to a point in the East line extended Southward, of the aforesaid 10th Street, in Kansas City, Kansas; thence North along said line 200 feet to place of beginning, containing 10 acres.

All in Wyandotte County, Kansas.

1056 Real Estate Purchase #3 being a certain lot or piece of land situated in the Northeast quarter of Section 22, Township 11, Range 25, in Wyandotte County, Kansas, bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the East line of Railroad Street, in Kansas City, Kansas, 1336.85 feet in a Southwesterly direction (Measured on the line of said street) from the South line of Osage Avenue; thence East along the South line of a tract of land formerly owned by the Western Dressed Beef Company, 270 feet, more or less, to a point in the West line of right of way of the Union Terminal Railroad; thence in a Southwesterly direction along said line of right of way, to a point where same intersects or coincides with the East line of Railroad Street; thence in a Northeasterly direction along the line of said street 390 feet, more or less, to place of beginning, and containing an area of 0.48 acres.

All in Wyandotte County, Kansas.

Real Estate Purchase #4 beginning at a point in the West line of the Northeast quarter of the Southwest quarter, Section 20, Township 11, Range 25, Wyandotte County, Kansas, 854 feet South of the Northwest corner of same, said point being also the Southwest corner of land of John O'Connor; thence North 414 feet to a point in the South line of right of way of the Union Terminal Railroad Company; thence South 71 degrees 40 minutes East along said line 603.5 feet to a point in the west line of land of Morris O'Connor; thence South along same 161.4 feet; thence South 63 degrees 37′ West 139.5 feet to a point in the South line of land of said John O'Connor; thence West along said South line 447.58 — to place of beginning, and containing 4.1 acres.

All in Wyandotte County, Kansas.

Real Estate Purchase #6 being all of lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, Block 14, West Kansas Addition No. 1, to City of Kansas (now Kansas City, Missouri); also commencing at the Northwest corner of said lot, thence running due North to the Missouri River; thence East following the meanderings of said River to a point due North of the N. E. Corner of said lot 5; thence due South to the N. E. corner of said lot 5, thence West to place of beginning; also commencing at the Southwest corner of Lot 11, in said Block 14, thence North along the East line of Santa Fe Street 86.67 feet to N. W. corner of lot 8, in said block 14; thence East along the North line of said lot 8, 98.2 feet; thence Southwest making an interior angle with the last described line of 50 degrees 35′ and running 112.2 feet to the South line of Lot 11, being the North line of Eighth Street at a 1057 point on said line 26.2 feet East of the East line of Santa Fe Street; thence West along the South line of lot 11 and the North line of Eighth Street 26.2 feet to place of beginning, subject to right of way of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company.

All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #9 being all of lots numbered 1-45-46, in Block 2, in Modern Mutual Place, an addition to Kansas City, Missouri, as the same appears of record upon the Recorded Plat thereof, and so much of lots numbered 2 and 44 in Block 2, and so much of lots numbered 6, 7, and 8, in Block 1, in said addition as lie N. & N. W. of a line parallel to and 20 feet South and S. E. of the center line of the most Southerly tract of the K. C. S. B. R. R. Co. or K. C. & Independence Air Line, as the same is now located across said lots, which said center line is described as follows:

Beginning at a point in the West line of Lot 8, in Block 1, of said Addition, 65/100 feet S. of the N. W. corner of said lot; thence in a Northeasterly direction on a line of a curve to the right of 550.8 feet radius, 210 feet more or less to a point in the W. line of lot 44, in Block 2, of said Addition 3.3 feet S. of the N. W. Corner of said lot; thence continuing on said curve to the right having a radius of 550.8 feet 198.8 feet to appoint in the E. line of Lot 1, in Block 2 of said Addition 2 1/10 feet South of the N. E. corner of said lot.

All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #10 being all of lots 31, 47 and 48 Hurck's Sub-division of Guinotte Farm, as the same are marked and designated on the recorded plat thereof, on file in the office of the Recorder of Deeds in and for the County of Jackson, State of Missouri.

All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #11 being Lots 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 Loomis' Riverside Addition, Lots 25, 27 and 28, Clifton Place Addition, to Kansas City, Kansas; Lots 2, 3, 5, 31 & 32 Block "D," F. J. Baird's Addition to Armourdale, now a part of Kansas City, Kansas.

All in Wyandotte County, Kansas; excepting that part of Lots 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, of the said Loomis' Riverside Addition to Kansas City, Kansas, located South and West of the right of way of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, formerly The Union Terminal Railroad Company and being that part of said lots heretofore sold and conveyed to August Uihlein on the 4th day of 1058 April, 1904, by Thomas T. Crittenden, Receiver of the Central Improvement Company, said deed being recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Wyandotte County, State of Kansas, in Volume 299 at page 80.

Real Estate Purchase #12 being Lot 4, Block 5 Lykins' Addition, Kansas City, Mo.

All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #20 being Lot 21, Block 9 of Centropolis, Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #21 being an undivided one half of Lot 124, Block 12, Old Town (now Kansas City) Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #22 being a tract of land described by metes and bounds as follows: Beginning at the N. E. Corner of Lot 16, Block 16, in that part of Kansas City, Missouri, known as "Extension of West Kansas Addition No. 1"; thence West along the North line of said Block 16, 72 feet, to the Northwest corner of Lot 14 in said Block; thence in a Northerly direction, on the prolongation or extension of the West line of said Lot 14, 62.1 feet to a point 22 feet (Measured at right angles) North of the center line of the main track of the K. C. S. B. R. R., as located and constructed upon the ground; thence in an Easterly direction on a line parallel to the center line of said main track, and at the uniform distance of 22 feet from said center line, 184 feet to a point in the Northerly extension or prolongation of a line parallel to and 4 feet East of the East line of Lot 2 Block 15, in West Kansas Addition No. 1, thence South on said line 73.1 feet to a point in the North line of said Block No. 15, 4 feet East of the Northeast corner of said Lot 1, thence 52 feet to the N. W. corner of Lot 1 of said Block; thence South along the East line of Mulberry Street, 13 feet more or less, to a point 6 feet north of the center line of the most northerly switch track of the K. C. Ft. S. & M. Ry.; thence in a westerly direction on a line parallel to the center line of said switch track, and at the uniform distance of 6 feet from the North of said center line 60 feet to a point in the West line of said Street; thence North along said line 18 feet more or less, to place of beginning.

All in Kansas City, Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #23 being a certain lot or piece of land situated in that part of Kansas City, Missouri, just North of and adjoining what is known as Extension of West Kansas Addition Number One, and bounded and described as follows, to-wit:

1059 Beginning at the Northwest corner of Lot one (1), in Block No. Fifteen (15) of said extension of West Kansas Addition No. One; thence North along the prolongation of the East line of Mulberry Street to the Missouri River; thence Easterly along the Missouri River to a point where the prolongation of the East line of Lot No. Eight (8) in said Block and Addition meets the Missouri River; thence Southerly along said prolongation of the East line of said Lot Eight (8) to the North line of Block No. Fifteen (15); thence Westerly on the North line of said Block Fifteen (15) to the place of beginning.

Also a certain lot or piece of land comprising parts of Lots One (1), Two (2), Three (3), Four (4), and Five (5), in Block No. Fifteen (15) in that part of Kansas City, Missouri, known as "Extension of West Kansas Addition No. One" and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at the Northwest corner of said block; thence East along the North line of same ninety-nine (99) feet more or less to a point Six (6) feet (measured at right angles) North of the center line of the most Northerly switch track of the Kansas City, Fort Scott & Memphis Railroad; thence in a Southwesterly direction on a line parallel to said center line and at the uniform distance of six (6) feet from same One Hundred (100) feet, more or less, to a point in the East line of Mulberry Street; thence North along said line Thirteen (13) feet, more or less, to the place of beginning, in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #24 being a certain lot or piece of land situated North and West of that part of Kansas City, Missouri known as "Extension of West Kansas Addition No. One" and bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point in the Northward extension of the East line of Hickory Street Eight feet South of the center line of the Consolidated Terminal Railroad (now The Kansas City Southern Railway) as said road is located and constructed upon the ground, and six hundred and thirteen and six-tenths (613.6 feet North of the North line of Ninth Street; thence in a Southwesterly direction on a line parallel to the center line of said Kansas City Southern Railway Company's Railroad and at the uniform distance of Eight (8) feet (at right angles) South of said line One Hundred and Ninty-two and Eight-tenths (192.8) feet to a point in the Northern extension of the East line of Lot number Eight (8) in Block number Sixteen (16) of said Extension of West Kansas Addition No. 1; thence South along said line-Fifty-five and nine-tenths (55.9) feet to a point six feet North of the center line of the Kansas City, Ft. Scott & Memphis Railroad Company's most Northerly main switch track; thence in a Southwesterly direction, on a line parallel to the center line of said Kansas City, 1060 Ft. Scott & Memphis switch track, and at the uniform distance of six (6) feet North of said center line, One Hundred and Ninety-two and Eight tenths (192.8) feet to a point in the Northward extension of the East line of Hickory Street, five hundred and twenty-six (526) feet North of the North line of Ninth Street; thence north along said line Eighty-seven and six-tenths (87.6) feet to place of beginning, and containing 0.308 acres, more or less.

All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #27 being

First Parcel.—A triangular piece of ground in the Northwest corner of Block Three (3) Coats & Hopkins' Addition to the City of Kansas (now Kansas City) bounded as follows: Beginning at a point on the West side of said Block Three (3) which is Sixteen (16) feet from the Northwest corner thereof, and running thence Northerly along said West side Sixteen (16) feet to said corner; thence Easterly along the North side of Block three (3) Seventy (70) feet; thence Southwesterly to the place of beginning, containing about 560 square feet or 13/1000 of an acre.

Second parcel,—A part of Block seven (7) in said Coates & Hopkins Addition, which is bounded as follows: Beginning at a point on the East side of said Block seven (7), which is two hundred and Fifty-two and four-tenths (252.4) feet from the Northwest corner of Eighth & Henning Streets; thence Northerly Forty-six (46) feet along said East side to the Northeast corner of said Block seven (7); thence Northwesterly along the Northerly side of Block seven (7) One Hundred Forty-four and Seven-tenths (144.7) feet to the Northwest corner thereof; thence South along the West side of said

Block seven (7) 84 degrees and four minutes included angle Two Hundred Forty-four and Three tenths (244.3) feet; thence Northeasterly 35 degrees 20 minutes included angles One Hundred Eighteen and One Tenth (118.1) feet; thence Northeasterly 187 degrees 15 minutes, included angles Sixty-seven and Five Tenths (67.5) feet; thence Northeasterly 188 degrees, 28 minutes, included angle, Sixty-eight and seven tenths (68.7) feet to the point of beginning, Containing 21,215 square feet, or 487/1000 of an acre.

All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #29 being all that part of Lot 32, Hurck's Sub-division of Guinotte Farm between right of way of the K. C. S. B. R. R., and the Missouri River, including all accretions, if any, to said lot, or any part thereof.

1061 All in Jackson County, Missouri.

Real Estate Purchase #13 being Lot 7 Block 4 Lykin's Addition, Kansas City, Mo.

All in Jackson County, Mo.

Wherefore and in consideration whereof it is hereby further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the defendant, Central Improvement Company, shall, after August 24, 1910, convey to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company all of the real estate and property above described, and that the Receiver of the said Central Improvement Company, join in said deed, if so requested by The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and that the said receiver, upon execution of said deed, forthwith deliver possession of said properties to said Company.

It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that as to all and singular the other allegations and charges and complaints in the intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, are without equity and that they be and are hereby dismissed.

VII. The Court finds the issues, made by paragraphs 15 to 20 inclusive of the answer of the Guardian Trust Company to the amended intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, against the Guardian Trust Company and in favor of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, in that and it is so decreed, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, did not assume, or degree to pay, or become liable for, the indebtedness or any part of it, owing by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Rail Road Company to the defendant, Guardian Trust Company, and that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company is in no wise liable or bound for the payment of the indebtedness of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the defendant, Guardian Trust Company, the payment of which is decreed in paragraph IV of this decree.

VIII. It is further ordered and decreed that the exceptions filed herein by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receiver, and also by The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, the Cambria Steel Company, the Guardian Trust Company, and the Central Improvement Company, be and the same are hereby overruled, except in the respects herein otherwise ordered and decreed.

IX. It is further ordered and decreed that, after the payment of all proper costs of the receiverships of the Central Improvement Company and the Northern Townsite Company in this cause, the balance of all the money, now in the hands of the receivers, 1062 respectively, of said companies, pending this litigation, shall be by said receivers paid into the registry of this Court, subject to the rights of the Guardian Trust Company, as the pledgee holder of part of the capital stock of said companies, as such rights shall be made to appear, inasmuch as it is not shown to the Court that there are any known officers of said Northern Townsite Company and said Central Improvement Company, to whom these payments can now be ordered to be made.

Upon any application made by the Guardian Trust Company for said moneys, so to be paid into the registry of the court, the same shall be referred to the Special Master herein, who shall forthwith ascertain the facts and report to the court, so that said moneys may be distributed without any unnecessary delay, and for such services the Special Master shall receive no other compensation than that hereinafter provided for.

X. It is further ordered and decreed that as to the Second Street Improvement Company, this cause shall be and is dismissed in all respects.

XI. It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the compensation of E. F. Swinney, as receiver of the Northern Townsite Company is hereby fixed at Fifteen Hundred Dollars ($1500.00), and that the compensation of S. W. Moore, as the counsel for the receiver, is hereby fixed at Fifteen Hundred Dollars ($1500.00), and that the said receiver be and he is hereby discharged and his bond canceled; that the compensation of H. H. Crittenden, receiver of the Central Improvement Company, is hereby fixed at Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00) and that the compensation of S. W. Moore, as the counsel of the receiver, is fixed at Two Thousand Dollars ($2000.00), and that said receiver be and he is hereby discharged and his bond canceled; that, it appearing to the court that all costs incurred by the Cambria Steel Company, prior to November 20, 1901, have been paid by it, it is ordered that no further costs in this proceeding be taxed against said Company, nor shall any costs heretofore paid by said Company be chargeable against any of the other parties to this action; and it is further ordered and decreed that, in addition to the allowances heretofore made to Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, on account of his services as such Master in this cause, there is hereby allowed to him as further compensation the sum of Fifteen Thousand Dollars ($15,000.00), for and on account of his said services, which shall be taxed as costs in this case, and it appearing to the Court that the former allowances heretofore made to him were paid in the same proportion and by the same parties as herein provided, no further order will be made in re-1063 spect to equalizing such payments, all said allowances to be taxed as costs herein.

XII. It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the costs of this action be paid as follows; one-third (1/3) thereof shall be paid by the Guardian Trust Company, and Two-thirds (2/3) thereof shall be paid by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and its receiver, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

XIII. It is further ordered and decreed that this Court retains jurisdiction of this cause in order to carry out the purposes and orders herein made in this decree.

(Signed) JNO. F. PHILIPS, Judge.

#2468. Decree-Comp.

Afterwards, to-wit, on the 10th day of August, 1910, the Assignment of Errors of the Guardian Trust Company was filed. Said Assignment of Errors is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company; and Fairmount Amusement Company; Defendants; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Ancillary Bill.

Assignment of Errors by Guardian Trust Company.

Now on this 10th day of July, 1910, comes the Guardian Trust Company, defendant in the original bill of complaint in 1064 this cause and defendant in the ancillary bill of complaint of Edward F. Swinney Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and The Kansas City Suburban Belt

Railroad Company, and defendant in the various intervening petitions of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and considering itself aggrieved by the order and decree entered in this court on the 25th day of June, 1910, whereby this court did enter a final decree in this cause, and did include in said decree a finding that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company was not liable for the indebtedness found in said decree and adjudged to be due to the Guardian Trust Company from The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company; and whereby the court ordered and decreed that the defendant Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, should, after August 24, 1910, convey to the said The Kansas City Southern Railway Company the railroad property in said decree described, and did decree that the costs of this action be paid as follows: One-third thereof by the Guardian Trust Company, and two-thirds thereof by The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its Receiver, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, does now [day] that said decree is errneous and against the just rights of this defendant, for the following reasons:

First. The court erred in over-ruling the exceptions of the Guardian Trust Company to the report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, and in over-ruling each of said exceptions made and taken by this defendant.

Second. The court erred in including in said decree and finding that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company did not assume or agree to pay, or become liable for the indebtedness, or any part of it, owing by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the Guardian Trust Company.

Third. The court erred in requiring the Central Improvement Company and its Receiver to convey to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company the properties and each of the properties in said decree specified.

Fourth. The court erred in refusing to hold that the claim of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company in respect to the properties of the Central Improvement Company, and each of the properties in said decree described, was barred by the statute of limitations and by laches.

Fifth. The court erred in ordering, adjudging and decreeing that the costs of this action be paid, one-third by the Guardian Trust Company and two-thirds by The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its Receiver, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

1065 Sixth. The court erred in taxing any part of the costs of this proceeding against the defendant Guardian Trust Company.

Seventh. The court erred in adjudging and decreeing that the costs and expenses of the administration of the defendant, Central Improvement Company, and the defendant, Northern Townsite Company, including compensation for the Receivers of said Company, and compensation for the counsel of said Receivers, should be paid out of the assets of said Company, because said expenses, costs and compensation should be paid by the Cambria Steel Company and the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its Receiver, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

Wherefore, this defendant prays that said decree be reversed and that this court be directed to enter a decree which shall exclude from its findings the findings that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company is not liable for the intebtedness of The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to this defendant, and that the decree be reversed as to the lands of the Central Improvement Company in said decree described, and that the said Central Improvement Company and its Receiver be not required to convey the said lands in said decree described to the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and that all the costs of this proceeding and the costs and expenses of administration of the various companies, defendants in this cause, including compensation for Receivers of the same, and compensation for counsel for said Receivers, be taxed against the Cambria Steel Company, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and for such other relief as to justice may pertain.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
By EDWARD P. GATES,
Its Solicitors.

Afterwards, to-wit, on the 10th day of August, 1910, the Assignment of Errors of the Central Improvement Company was filed. Said Assignment of Errors is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Ter-1066 minal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants.

Ancillary Bill.

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Assignment of Errors by Central Improvement Company.

Now on this 10th day of July, 1910, comes the Central Improvement Company, defendant in the original bill of complaint in this cause, and defendant in the ancillary bill of complaint of Edward F. Swinney, Receiver of The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and defendant in the various intervening petitions of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and considering itself aggrieved by the order and decree entered in this court on the 25th day of June, 1910, whereby this court did enter a final decree in this cause, and did include in said decree a finding that the Kansas City Southern Railway Company was not liable for the indebtedness found in said decree and adjudged to be due to the Guardian Trust Company from The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company; and whereby the court entered and decreed that the defendant Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, should, after August 24, 1910, convey to the said The Kansas City Southern Railway Company the railroad property in said decree described, and did decree that the costs of this action be paid as follows: One-third thereof by the Guardian Trust Company, and two-thirds thereof by The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its Receiver, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, does now say that said decree is erroneous and against the just rights of this defendant, for the following reasons:

First. The court erred in over-ruling the exceptions of the Central Improvement Company to the report of the Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, and in overruling each of said exceptions made and taken by this defendant.

1067 Second. The court erred in requiring the Central Improvement Company and its Receiver, to convey to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company the properties and each of the properties in said decree specified.

Third. The court erred in refusing to hold that the claim of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company in respect to the properties of the Central Improvement Company, in said decree described, was barred by the statute of limitations and by laches.

Fourth. The court erred in requiring this defendant, Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, to pay the costs and expenses of said receivership, including the compensation of the Receiver and counsel for the Receiver, whereas said expense and compensation should have been taxed against and paid by Cambria Steel Company, complainant, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its Receiver, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Wherefore, This defendant prays that said decree be reversed as to the lands of the Central Improvement Company, in said decree described, and that this defendant, Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, be not required to convey the said lands to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and that all the costs of this proceeding be taxed against the Cambria Steel Company, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and for such other relief as to justice may pertain.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By H. H. CRITTENDEN, Receiver;
By EDWARD P. GATES &
GEORGE H. ENGLISH, JR., Its Solicitors.

Afterwards, to wit on the 10th day of August, 1910, the Petition of Guardian Trust Company for Appeal and Order allowing appeal were filed and entered of record. Said Petition and Order are in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Ter-1068 minal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants.

Ancillary Bill.

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Petition of Guardian Trust Company for Appeal.

The above-named defendant, Guardian Trust Company, conceiving itself aggrieved by the final order and decree made and entered in the above-entitled cause, on the 25th day of June, 1910, does hereby appeal from said order and decree, to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, for the reasons specified in the assignment of errors, wrich is filed herewith; and said Guardian Trust Company prays that this appeal may be allowed and that citation issue as provided by law; that a transcript of the record, proceedings and papers upon which said order and decree was made, duly authenticated, may be sent to the said United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, and your petitioner further prays that the proper order, touching the security to be required of it to perfect its appeal, be made.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
By EDWARD P. GATES, Its Solicitor.

The foregoing petition for appeal is allowed and it is ordered that the cost bond to be filed by said appellant be and it is hereby fixed in the sum of Five thousand Dollars ($5,000.00).

Dated this 10th day of August, 1910.

(Signed) SMITH McPHERSON, Judge.

Afterwards, to wit, on the 10th day of August, 1910, the Petition for Appeal of the Central Improvement Company and Order allowing appeal were filed and entered as record. Said Petition and Order are in words and figures as follows:

1069 In the Circuit Court of the United States, for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmont Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver, Northern Townsite Company and Fairmont Amusement Company, Defendants.

Ancillary Bill.

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Petition of Central Improvement Company for Appeal.

The above-named defendant, Central Improvement Company, conceiving itself aggrieved by the final order and decree made and entered in this cause, the 25th day of June, 1910, requiring the Central Improvement Company and its Receiver, to convey to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company the properties and each of the properties in said decree specified; and refusing to hold that the claim of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, in respect to the properties of the Central Improvement Company, in said decree described, was barred by the statute of limitations and by laches, and requiring this defendant, Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, to pay the costs and expenses of said receivership, prays that this appeal may be allowed and that citation issue as provided by law; that a transcript of the record, proceedings and paper upon which said order and decree was made, duly authenticated, may be sent to the said United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

And your petitioner further prays that the proper order touching the security to be required of it to perfect its appeal, be made and, desiring to supersede the execution of the decree, your peti-1070 tioner here tenders bond in such amount as the court may require for such purpose and prays that, with the allowance of the appeal, a supersedeas be issued.

Dated this 10th day of August, 1910.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By H. H. CRITTENDEN, Receiver;
By EDWARD P. GATES &
GEORGE H. ENGLISH, JR., His Solicitors.

The foregoing petition for an appeal is allowed upon the petitioner giving bond, conditioned as the law directs, in the sum of Thirty thousand Dollars, ($30,000.00) which may operate as a supersedeas; and that a true copy of the record, assignment of errors and proceedings had in the case, shall be transmitted to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, for the Eighth Circuit.

Dated this 10th day of August, 1910.

(Signed) SMITH McPHERSON, Judge.

The Bond for Appeal of the Guardian Trust Company, approved and filed herein on the 10th day of August, 1910, as in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Gurdian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amustment Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Ancillary Bill.

1071 Bond of Guardian Trust Company on Appeal.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That The Guardian Trust Company, as principal, and United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company of Baltimore, Md., as surety, acknowledge themselves to be jointly indebted unto The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, The Kansas City Suburban Railroad Company and Edward F. Swinney, its Receiver, and Cambria Steel Company, in the full and just sum of Five thousand and no/100 Dollars ($5,000.00) to be paid to them, their successors or assigns, to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our successors and assigns jointly and severally by these presents.

Sealed with our respective seals.

Dated at Kansas City, Missouri, the 10th day of August, 1910.

The condition of the above obligation is that

Whereas, On the 25th day of June, 1910, in the above-entitled cause, a final order and decree was made and entered and the said Guardian Trust Company has obtained an order allowing an appeal from said final order and decree, and has obtained a citation directed to the complainants and defendants in said bill and supplemental bill, other than this defendant, Guardian Trust Company, citing and admonishing them to be and appear in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, sixty (60) days from and after the date of said citation.

Now, if the said Guardian Trust Company shall prosecute its appeal to effect, and answer to all costs if it fail to make its plea good, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise, to remain in full force and virtue.

In Witness Whereof, the said Guardian Trust Company and said United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company have caused these presents to be signed by their proper officers and their corporate seals to be hereunto affixed.

[SEAL.] GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,

Attest:
EDWARD C. WRIGHT,
Assistant Secretary,
By JOHN A. PRESCOTT,
Its Vice President.

[SEAL.] UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY COMPANY,
By MERRITT M. LUCAS,
JEAN L. CROSS,
Its Attorneys in Fact.

1072 Approved:
SMITH McPHERSON, Judge.

The Bond for Appeal of the Central Improvement Company, approved and filed August 10th, 1910, is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

No. 2468. In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amustment Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Ancillary Bill.

Bond of Central Improvement Company on Appeal.

Know All Men by These Presents:

That we, Central Improvement Company, as principal, and United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company of Baltimore, Md., as surety, are held and firmly bound unto The Kansas City Southern Railway Conpany, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Edward F. Swinney, its Receiver, and Cambria Steel Company, in the full and just sum of Thirty thousand and no/100 Dollars ($30,000) to be paid to them, their successors or assigns, to which payment, well and truly to be made, we bind ourselves, our successors and assigns jointly and severally by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and dated at Kansas City, Missouri, this 10th day of August, 1910.

The condition of the above obligation is that 1073 Whereas, on the 25th day of June, 1910, in the above-entitled cause, a final order and decree was made, requiring the Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, to convey certain properties in said decree described, to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and requiring the defendant, Central Improvement Company, and its Receiver, to pay the costs and expenses of the receivership, and the said Central Improvement Company has obtained an order allowing an appeal from said final order and decree, and has obtained a citation directed to the complainants in said bills, and the defendants other than the Central Improvement Company, citing and admonishing them to be and appear in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, sixty days from and after the date of said citation;

Now, if the said Central Improvement Company shall prosecute its appeal to effect and answer all damages and costs, if it fail to make its plea good, then the above obligation to be void; otherwise, to remain in full force and virtue.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By H. H. CRITTENDEN, Receiver,
By EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
His Solicitors.

Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Im-UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY COMPANY, [SEAL.] By MERITT M. LUCAS,
JEAN L. CROSS,
Its Attorneys-in-Fact.

Approved:
SMITH McPHERSON, Judge. [SEAL.]

Afterwards, to-wit, on the 10th day of August, 1910, the Præcipe for Appeal of the Guardian Trust Company was filed. Said Præcipe is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity. No. 2468.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street
1074 Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Ancillary Bill.

Præcipe for Record on Appeal.

To the Clerk of said Court:

For use in the appeal of the Guardian Trust Company from the order and decree of this court filed June 25, 1910, entering and rendering a final decree in the above-entitled cause, you will please prepare the transcript for the appellant court and include therein the following parts of the record:

1. The original bill of complaint of Cambria Steel Company, filed September 6, 1900, with exhibits attached.
2. Entry of appearance of the railroad companies and defendants in said bill, filed September 6, 1900.
3. Order granting restraining order, appointing receivers, etc., filed September 6, 1900.
4. Entry of appearance of Guardian Trust Company, filed October 1, 1900.
5. Entry of appearance filed October 1, 1900, for Central Improvement Company, et al.
6. Answer of Guardian Trust Company to original bill of complaint, filed November 5, 1900, with exhibit attached.

7. Answer of Central Improvement Company to original bill of complaint, filed November 5, 1900.

8. Order as to hearing of application for temporary injunction, filed November 7, 1900.

9. Replication of Cambria Steel Company to answer of Guardian Trust Company, filed December 3, 1900.

1075 10. Replication of Cambria Steel Company to answer of Central Improvement Company, et al. filed December 3, 1900.

11. Ancillary bill filed by The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its Receivers vs. Cambria Steel Company, Guardian Trust Company, et als., filed November 20, 1901.

12. Stipulation in cause No. 2616 extending time for filing answers.

13. Separate answer of Guardian Trust Company to ancillary bill filed in cause No. 2616 December 9, 1901.

14. Separate answer of Cambria Steel Company to ancillary bill, filed December 16, 1901, to cause No. 2616.

15. Exceptions by complainants to answer of Guardian Trust Company, filed December 31, 1901.

16. Replication to answer of Guardian Trust Company, filed April 9, 1902, in cause No. 2616.

17. Order sustaining exceptions and referring cause to Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed April 1, 1902, in cause No. 2616.

18. Resignation of Wash Adams, Receiver Central Improvement Company, filed May 29, 1902, and order of same date accepting same.

19. Order appointing Honorable Thomas T. Crittenden Receiver of Central Improvement Company, filed June 27, 1902.

20. Stipulation making The Kansas City Southern Railway Company a party, filed February 7, 1905.

21. Stipulation extending the time for the Kansas City Southern Railway Company to intervene, filed February 27, 1905.

22. Order granting leave to The Kansas City Southern Railway Company to file intervening petition and referring the issues to Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, as Special Master, filed February 27, 1905.

23. Intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, filed February 27, 1905.

24. Answer of Guardian Trust Company to intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, filed March 7, 1905.

1076 25. Answer of Central Improvement Company to intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company filed.

26. Amended and supplemental ancillary bill of Knott and Swinney, Receivers, filed March 22, 1905, omitting exhibits.

27. Order referring issues upon same to Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, filed April 7, 1905.

28. Stipulation that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company may file amended intervening petition to be referred to Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed May 1, 1905, and order made thereon, of same date, that issues stand referred to Honorable Shannon C. Douglass to take the testimony and report his findings of fact and conclusions of law.

29. Amended intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, filed May 1, 1905, omitting exhibits.

30. Order enlarging time of Guardian Trust Company to plead to amended intervening petition, filed May 15, 1905.

31. Answer of Guardian Trust Company to amended intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, filed May 20, 1905, and order of reference of same date.

32. Answer of Guardian Trust Company to amended and Supplemental bill of complaint of Knott and Swinney, filed June 1, 1905.

33. Answer of Central Improvement Company, T. T. Crittenden Receiver, to amended intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, filed August 7, 1905.

34. Answer of Central Improvement Company to amended and supplemental bill of complaint of Knott and Swinney, Receivers, filed June 9, 1905.

35. Replication to answers of Guardian Trust Company and Central Improvement Company, filed June 26, 1905.

36. Order granting leave to file second amended ancillary bill, filed July 2, 1906.

37. Second amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint, filed July 2, 1906, omitting exhibits.

38. Answers and pleas of Guardian Trust Company, filed July 2, 1906.

39. Stipulation making up the issues, filed July 2, 1906.

1077 40. Answer of Central Improvement Company, filed October 19, 1906.

41. Replication of Swinney, Receiver, to answer of Guardian Trust Company to second amended ancillary bill, filed July 2, 1906.

42. Replication of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company to answer of Guardian Trust Company to amended intervening petition filed July 2, 1906.

43. Answer of Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden Receiver, to second amended bill of Swinney Receiver, filed October 19, 1907.

44. Application of Swinney, et al., for leave to file supplemental bill, filed November 16, 1907, and order of same date granting leave to file.

45. Supplemental bill of complaint against Guardian Trust Company and exhibits attached, filed November 16, 1907.

46. Restraining order filed November 16, 1907.

47. Answer of Guardian Trust Company to rule to show cause, filed December 16, 1907.

48. Order granting temporary injunction against Guardian Trust Company, filed February 22, 1908.

49. Injunction bond filed, February 24, 1908.

50. Motion of Guardian Trust Company to dissolve restraining order, filed February 29, 1908, and order of same date denying said motion.

51. Petition for appeal from injunction order of February 22, 1908, and order allowing appeal.

52. Appeal bond Guardian Trust Company filed March 10, 1908.

53. Letter of S. W. Moore and affidavit of Thomas J. Bales, filed March 14, 1908.

54. Mandate and opinion of Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States for the Eighth Judicial Circuit, on appeal of Guardian Trust Company vs. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company et al., in cause No. 2827, filed June 21, 1909.

55. Order appointing H. H. Crittenden Receiver of Central Improvement Company, filed June 19, 1908.

1078 56. Report of Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed May 21, 1910.

57. Supplemental report of Special Master, filed June 22, 1910.

58. Exceptions of Guardian Trust Company to the report of Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed June 17, 1910.

59. Exceptions of Central Improvement Company by H. H. Crittenden, its Receiver, to report of Honorable Shannon C. Douglass, Special Master, filed June 17, 1910.

60. Final decree rendered in this cause on June 25, 1910.

61. Petition of Guardian Trust Company for appeal from said final decree, and order allowing appeal, filed August 10, 1910.

62. Petition for appeal of Central Improvement Company from said final decree, and order allowing appeal, filed August 10, 1910.

63. Assignment of errors of Guardian Trust Company, in connection with petition for appeal, filed August 10, 1910.

64. Assignment of errors by Central Improvement Company, filed in connection with petition for appeal, filed August 10, 1910.

65. Bond on appeal by Guardian Trust Company, and order approving same, filed August 10, 1910.

66. Bond on appeal of Central Improvement Company and order approving same, filed August 10, 1910.

66*a*. Præcipe of Central Improvement Company for record on appeal filed August 10, 1910.

67. Citation in connection with said appeal of Guardian Trust Company, and return of service endorsed thereon.

68. Citation in connection with said appeal of Central Improvement Company and return of service endorsed thereon.

Other portions of the record, i. e. interlocutory orders, directions to and reports by the various receivers, evidence taken by the Special Master, and other papers and documents in the case not being deemed necessary on the hearing of the appeal, may be omitted by you in preparing said transcript.

Respectfully,

EDWARD P. GATES,
Solicitor for Guardian Trust Company.

1079 Afterwards, to-wit, on the 10th day of August, 1910, the Præcipe of the Central Improvement Company was filed. Said Præcipe is in words and figures as follows:

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity. No. 2468.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,
vs.
THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company et al. Complainants,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Defendants; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Ancillary Bill.

Præcipe for Record on Appeal by Central Improvement Company.

To the Clerk of said Court:

For use in the appeal of the Central Improvement Company from the order and decree of this Court filed June 25th, 1910, entering and rendering a final decree in the above entitled cause, the Central Improvement Company adopts as its own the transcript for the Appellate court prepared in accordance with the præcipe for record on appeal of Guardian Trust Company, which præcipe and record it deems sufficient.

Respectfully,

EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Central Improvement Company and H. H. Crittenden, Its Receiver.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, sct:

I, Adelaide Utter, Clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a full, true and complete copy of the record, assignment of errors and all proceedings in cause #2468, Cambria Steel Company, complainant, vs. Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, et al., defendants, in accordance with the præcipes filed by the Guardian Trust Company and the Central Improvement Company upon their appeal from the decree made and entered herein on the 25th day of June, A. D.
1080 1910, as fully as the same remains on file and of record in my office. Copies of said præcipes are hereto attached.

I further certify that the documents numbered as follows in said præcipes, to-wit: No. 25, Answer of Central Improvement Company to intervening petition of Kansas City Southern Railway Company; No. 35, replication to answer of Central Improvement Company; No. 43 Answer of Central Improvement Company and T. T. Crittenden, Receiver to 2nd amended bill of Swinney, Receiver, and the opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals (No. 54) have never been filed in this court.

Witness my hand as clerk and the seal of said court. Done at office in Kansas City, Missouri, this 27th day of September, A. D. 1910.

[Seal U. S. Circuit Court, Western Division, Western District, Missouri.]

ADELAIDE UTTER, Clerk.

Filed Oct. 6, 1910. John D. Jordan, Clerk.

1081 (Appearance of Messrs. Gates & English as Counsel for Appellants in Cause No. 3489.)

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appellants,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellants.

EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
1003 Scarritt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Oct. 10, 1910.

(Appearance of Messrs. Gates & English as Counsel for Appellee Guardian Trust Co. in Cause No. 3489.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellee, Guardian Trust Co.

EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO H. ENGLISH,
1003 Scarritt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Dec. 17, 1910.

(Appearance of Mr. Frank Hagerman as Counsel for Appellee Cambria Steel Co. in Cause No. 3489.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellee, Cambria Steel Co.

FRANK HAGERMAN.

(Endorsed): Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Dec. 17, 1910.

(Motion of Appellant Central Improvement Co. to Dismiss Appeal in Cause No. 3489.)

Comes now the Central Improvement Company and moves to dismiss the appeal heretofore taken in its name and to strike the cause from the docket of this Court for the following reasons:

1082 The decree herein was rendered on June 25th, 1910. On August 10th, 1910, counsel purporting to represent the Central Improvement Company made application to the Circuit Court at Kansas City, Missouri, for an appeal in its behalf. An order was signed by Judge Smith McPherson on August 10th, 1910, allowing the appeal, and approving a supersedeas bond.

Afterwards and on October 8th, 1910, the Central Improvement Company presented an application to the Circuit Court at Kansas City, Missouri, to vacate the allowance of the said appeal, upon the ground that counsel, asking for the appeal in behalf of the said Central Improvement Company, had no authority to represent it. A hearing was accordingly had and the Court found that the said appeal, allowed on August 10th, 1910, was improperly allowed, in that the counsel, purporting to represent the Central Improvement Company, were not in fact authorized to represent it, or appear for it. The orders, allowing the appeal and approving the supersedeas bond, were set aside and vacated. This order was made on October 8th, 1910, at the same term at which said decree of June 25th, 1910, was rendered, and at the same term at which the order allowing the appeal of August 10th, 1910, was entered. A copy of the order, signed by the Honorable Smith McPherson, setting aside and vacating the orders allowing the appeal and approving the supersedeas bond, is herewith attached, marked Exhibit "A". A certified copy of said order of October 8th, 1910, was filed in this Court in December, 1910.

The Central Improvement Company further states that it did not desire to appeal from the said decree of June 25th, 1910, and that it did not authorize any one to take an appeal for it or in its behalf.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By T. B. BUCKNER, Its Solicitor.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
County of Jackson, ss:

J. A. Edson, of lawful age, being duly sworn, upon his oath states that he is President of the Central Improvement Company and makes this affidavit in its behalf; that he has read the foregoing motion and knows the contents thereof, and that the matters and facts therein stated are true.

1083 J. A. EDSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 14th day of April, 1911. My commission will expire October 15th, 1912.
[SEAL.] CLARENCE R. HALL,
Notary Public in and for said State and County.

EXHIBIT "A".

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

In Equity. No. 2468.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,
vs.
THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Bill.

EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants.
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, MISSOURI Elevator & Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, and T. T. Crittenden, Its Receiver; Northern Townsite Company, and Fairmount Amusement Company, Defendants; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Intervenor.

Ancillary Bill.

Order.

The Central Improvement Company has presented an application to vacate the allowance of an appeal made on the application 1084 of the said Central Improvement Company on August 10th, 1910. In support of the application the affidavits of J. A.

Edson, President of the Central Improvement Company and of H. H. Crittenden are offered which affidavits are ordered to be filed and made a part of the record herein. Said Central Improvement Company also offers the minute book of said Company of the said Central Improvement Company and the record thereof, which book is ordered to be filed and made a part of the record herein.

In resistance to said motion is offered the affidavit of H. H. Crittenden with the exhibit therein set out, namely, the letter of June 10th, 1910, from him the said Crittenden to Messrs. Gates & English.

Mr. E. P. Gates and Mr. George H. English specially appear to said motion claiming to be authorized to represent the receiver of the Central Improvement Company under the letter set forth in the affidavit of H. H. Crittenden, for the purpose of objection to the jurisdiction of this Court to pass upon said application and for the purpose of objection to the sufficiency of said application to confer jurisdiction on the court or to authorize the vacating of the order allowing the appeal referred to therein.

The said George H. English in open court professionally states to the court that the authority of said Gates & English to take the said appeal on behalf of said Central Improvement Company and said receiver Crittenden or either of them is as found in the decree of June 25th, 1910, and the said letter of June 10th, 1910, and not otherwise or by other authority. The decree herein was entered and ordered of record June 25th, 1910, the same being a day of the regular April term, 1910, of this court, and the said April term is still in session, the court not having yet adjourned for the said term.

There is no charge of bad faith on the part of said attorneys or solicitors in taking said appeal, and there is and has been no bad faith on the part of any one, but the court finds, and does hold that it has full power and jurisdiction to pass upon the application to vacate the order allowing such appeal of the Central Improvement Company, and the court further finds from the inspection of the petition for appeal, and of the assignment of errors, and of 1085 the supersedeas bond, that the attempt was made to appeal from the decree for and on behalf of the Central Improvement Company, only, and the court further finds the fact to be that neither the said Central Improvement Company nor the said H. H. Crittenden granted authority to any attorney or solicitor or other person to take said appeal and the order of this court by Smith McPherson, Judge, of August 10, 1910, allowing the said appeal of said Central Improvement Company or Receiver or either and in approving said bond and directing that said appeal, and bond should act as a supersedeas, were each and all done through inadvertence and without authority and by reason of a mistake of fact by acting upon such petition for appeal, when in truth and in fact neither the said Central Improvement Company, nor H. H. Crittenden had asked for an appeal and had not conferred authority upon anyone to ask for an appeal.

In view of the foregoing the order of August 10, 1910, allowing an appeal to said Central Improvement Company and the whole thereof is hereby vacated and declared for naught.

To each, all and every of which the said E. P. Gates and George H. English claiming to act under the authority of the documents heretofore referred to except on behalf of the receiver of the Central Improvement Company.

(Signed) SMITH McPHERSON, Judge.

(Filed October 8th, 1910.)

[Endorsed:] Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Apr. 18, 1911.

(Proof of Service of Motion to Dismiss Appeal in Cause No. 3489.)

To Frank Hagerman, Solicitor for Cambria Steel Company:
Messrs. Gates & English, Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company:

You and each of you are hereby notified that the Central Improvement Company has filed in this cause the attached motion to dismiss and strike from the docket the appeal allowed in the name of the Central Improvement Company.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By T. B. BUCKNER, Its Solicitor.

1086 Service of a copy of this notice and motion acknowledged this 17th day of April, A. D. 1911.

FRANK HAGERMAN,
Solicitor for Cambria Steel Co.
EDWARD P. GATES &
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Co.

[Endorsed:] Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Apr. 19, 1911.

(Counter Motion of Guardian Trust Co. to Motion of Central Improvement Co. to Dismiss Appeal in Cause No. 3489.)

Comes now the Guardian Trust Company, one of the Appellees in the above entitled cause, and shows to the Court, that the affidavit of H. H. Crittenden, the Receiver of the Central Improvement Company referred to in the order of the Honorable Smith McPherson, Judge, filed October 8th, 1910, which order is attached to the motion of the Central Improvement Company filed herein, is in words and figures as follows, to-wit:

"H. H. Crittenden, of lawful age, being duly sworn, on his oath states, that on June 10th, 1910, he addressed to Messrs. Gates & English, Kansas City, Missouri, a letter of which the following is a copy:—

KANSAS CITY, Mo., June 10", 1910.

Messrs. Gates & English, Kansas City, Mo., Scarritt Bldg.

GENTLEMEN: In response to your letter of June 8", 1910, I beg to say that I took up with Judge Phillips, in company with your Mr. English, the matters referred to therein and under his instructions at said interview, you were authorized by Judge Phillips in my name, as Receiver of the Central Improvement Company, to file and present to the Court such exceptions to the report of the 1087 Special Master and such other matters in connection therewith as in your judgment will best conserve the interests of the Central Improvement Co.

It is understood that the Receivership is to be put to no expense for attorney's fees in the matter.

Very respectfully,

H. H. CRITTENDEN, Receiver."

No revocation of authority conferred in this letter has ever been made by me.

Duly subscribed and sworn to on the 8th day of October, before a Notary Public."

This Appellee further shows to the Court that it is interested in the appeal of said Central Improvement Company by reason of the following facts, namely:

The said Central Improvement Company is a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, and having an authorized capital stock of Two Hundred Thousand ($200,000.00) Dollars, of which capital stock, 1,407 shares have been issued and are outstanding. Of said outstanding stock, 1,120 shares were pledged by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, the former owner thereof, to said Guardian Trust Company, as collateral security for an indebtedness owing by said Belt Company to said Trust Company.

In the final decree in the cause from which said appeal is taken, the validity of the indebtedness from said Belt Company to said Trust Company, is affirmed, and the right of the Trust Company to subject said shares of stock to the satisfaction thereof is likewise affirmed. But as a part of said decree, all the property of said Central Improvement Company described in said decree, was ordered to be conveyed to the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, thus rendering said shares of stock so pledged as aforesaid, worthless to said Trust Company.

The legal title to said 1,407 shares, or substantially all of them which were formerly owned by said Belt Company, was acquired by said Kansas City Southern Railway Company in connection with the foreclosure of the mortgages upon the property of said Belt Company, and all of said shares, or substantially all of them, are now held and voted by said Kansas City Southern Railway Company, or its employees or in its interest, subject however to the pledge of said 1088 1,120 shares as found in the final decree herein.

Said final decree having directed the conveyance of the property of said Central Improvement Company described in said decree, to said Southern Company, it is impossible for said Trust Company to obtain the consent of said Central Company to except to or appeal from, said final decree. Said Trust Company therefore, believing said decree was erroneous and prejudicial to its interests, sought to have said decree reviewed as respects said Central Improvement Company lands, through the Receiver of said Central Improvement Company.

Said Trust Company, through its solicitors, requested said Receiver to except to the Master's report filed herein, and requested said Receiver to authorize the solicitors of said Trust Company to appear for him in said matter and in such other matters as in their judgment would be deemed best for the interest of said company, and said Receiver did give them the authority so to do, as shown in said affidavit and letter of said Receiver hereinbefore set forth.

Your petitioner further shows to the Court, that it is of the opinion, that said decree, as respects the properties of said Central Improvement Company, is erroneous for the reasons heretofore stated in the brief of your petitioner and of said Central Company heretofore filed in this Court.

Your petitioner therefore prays the Court, that if the Court is of the opinion that said letter of said Receiver was insufficient to constitute authority for taking said appeal, that it direct said Receiver to ratify and confirm all the acts of said solicitors of said Guardian Trust Company in taking the appeal for said Central Improvement Company, to the end that a full hearing of said matters may be had upon the appeal of said Central Improvement Company.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
By EDWARD P. GATES &
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Its Solicitors.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
County of Jackson, ss:

George H. English, Jr. of lawful age, being duly sworn, states on his oath, that he is solicitor and agent for said Guardian Trust Company, Appellee, and makes this affidavit in its behalf, and 1089 that the matters and things in the foregoing counter motion are true.

GEORGE H. ENGLISH, JR.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22nd day of April, 1911.
[SEAL.] SILAS EMMET SKELLEY,
Notary Public.

My commission expires Feb. 28, 1914.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Apr. 24, 1911.

(Notice of Counter Motion Filed by Guardian Trust Co. and Acceptance of Service in Cause No. 3489.)

You, the above named Appellants and Appellees, will take notice, that the Guardian Trust Company, Appellee herein, has filed in the above entitled matter, a counter motion to the motion of the Central Improvement Company to dismiss the appeal, a copy of which is herewith furnished you.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
By EDWARD P. GATES &
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Its Solicitors.

Service of the above notice and receipt of a copy of the motion referred to therein is hereby accepted, this 21st day of April, 1911.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By T. B. BUCKNER, Its Solicitors.
FRANK HAGERMAN,
Solicitors for the Parties Represented by Them.
S. W. MOORE,
Solicitors for the Parties Represented by Them.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Apr. 24, 1911.

1090 Suggestion of Diminution of Record and Motion of Cambria Steel Co. for Writ of Certiorari.)

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appellants,

v.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,

v.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Suggestion of Diminution of Record.

Now comes the Cambria Steel Company, an appellee, and respectfully shows:

1. Upon the hearing before the master, as shown by his transcript of the evidence returned with his report contained in the record herein, the following, found on pages 8315 and 8316 of volume 16, appears as part of the proceedings in the cause:

"Monday, January 30th, 1905,—10 A. M. On Monday, the 30th day of January, 1905, at 10:00 o'clock A. M., the master re-1091 sumed the hearing of this cause, at the offices of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Thayer Building, northwest corner 9th and Broadway, and the following proceedings were had, to-wit:

'The MASTER: I will announce, gentlemen, that I make an order fixing the time for the taking of testimony in this cause, commencing each day at 10 o'clock A. M., and running until 1 o'clock P. M., and commencing again at 3 o'clock P. M. and running until 6 o'clock P. M.'

"Whereupon, and at the request of Mr. S. W. Moore, on account of his enforced absence from the city, the master adjourned the further hearing in this cause until Thursday, the 2nd day of February, 1905, at 10 o'clock A. M., then to be resumed at the same place.

THURSDAY, February 2nd, 1905, 10 A. M.

On Thursday, the 2nd day of February, 1905, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the same place, the master resumed the hearing of this cause, and the following further proceedings were had, to-wit:

'Mr. HAGERMAN: Before you proceed with this matter, I want to make this statement. So far as the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, or the Receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company are concerned, in this accounting, I have no longer any connection with it; but, something has been said in the course of conversation, by Mr. Rosenberger, in regard to serving notices, which made me think it would probably be better for me to come here at this hearing, so that Your Honor and these gentlemen will have no misunderstanding in regard to the Cambria case. As I understand it, this accounting is between the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and the Trust Company. The notices served, have all been entitled in the Cambria case; and, there is a stipulation on file in the case, which practically leaves the Cambria Company out of it until this accounting is all ended. I apprehend—the stipulation, in effect, so provides, that if upon the accounting it is shown or found there is a balance due the Suburban Belt Company or its Receivers, then the question is open,—it is open for us then to try the question whether that balance should not be subjected to the creditor's bill of the Cambria Company. Another question which will then arise, is, suppose a lot of this collateral on hand ought to be released, that is, released or freed from the particular pledge under which it is held; then, the question will arise whether it is not subject to the creditor's bill,—or, whether it can be held under the mortgage, or under the pledge. But, so far as this particular 1092 accounting is concerned, those questions between the Cambria Company and those parties cannot arise until after the testimony is taken. I simply wanted to come here and state my position, so that there would be no misunderstanding as to my not appearing in the future.

None of the counsel made any objection or reply to the statement. Whereupon, the master stated—'that is my understanding of the matter.'"

2. The said proceedings above set out are material parts of the record herein upon the question whether the court below was right in adjudging that this appellee pay no further costs, yet they do not appear in the transcript filed herein. The solicitor for the other parties hereto, except the Guardian Trust Company, prior to this term, signed a stipulation that the record should be amended in this respect. Said stipulation was submitted to counsel for the Guardian Trust Company, who promised to look into the matter, but upon April 28, 1911, they notified appellee that they would not so stipulate. Wherefore, the suggestion of diminution of record is made accompanied by the certificate of the clerk of the court, below, and a writ of certiorari asked to perfect the record in this respect.

FRANK HAGERMAN,
Solicitor for Cambria Steel Company, Appellee.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western Division of the Western District of Missouri, ss:

Adelaide Utter, Clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for said division and district, hereby certifies that the foregoing matter quoted from pages 8315 and 8316 of volume 16 of the evidence returned by the special master with his report in these cases in the court below, is correct as same appears of record in my office.

[SEAL] ADELAIDE UTTER, Clerk.

1093 Received copy this May 1st, 1911.

S. W. MOORE,
Solicitor for parties represented by him.
EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on May 4, 1911.

1094 In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

Number 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appellants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Number 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Suggestions of Guardian Trust Company in Opposition to Application for Writ of Certiorari of Cambria Steel Company, Appellee.

Now comes Guardian Trust Company, a party to the above entitled causes, and respectfully shows to the court, that the writ of certiorari asked by the Cambria Steel Company herein should not be granted for the following reasons, to-wit:

1095 I.

None of the matters and things set forth in said portion of the record embraced in said application are material to this hearing or necessary for the hearing on appeal.

II.

Said portion of the record is incomplete, in that it fails to set forth the entire transaction therein referred to. Said transaction was as follows, namely:

MONDAY, January 30th, 1905—10 a. m.

On Monday, the 30th day of January, 1905, at 10 o'clock a. m., the master resumed the hearing of this cause, at the office of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Thayer Building, northwest corner Ninth and Broadway, and the following proceedings were had, to-wit:

The MASTER: I will announce, gentlemen, that I make an order fixing the time for the taking of testimony in this cause, commencing each day at 10 o'clock a. m. and running until 1 o'clock p. m., and commencing again at 3 o'clock p. m., and running until 6 o'clock p. m.

Whereupon, and at the request of Mr. S. W. Moore, on account of his enforced absence from the city, the master adjourned the further hearing of this cause until Thursday, the 2nd day of February, 1905, at 10 o'clock a. m., then to be resumed at the same place.

1096 "THURSDAY, February 2nd, 1905—10 a. m.

On Thursday, the 2nd day of February, 1905 at 10 o'clock a. m. at the same place, the master resumed the hearing of this cause, and the following further proceedings were had, to-wit:

Mr. HAGERMAN: Before you proceed with this matter, I want to make this statement. So far as the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, or the receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company are concerned, in this accounting, I have no longer any connection with it; but, something has been said in the course of conversation, by Mr. Rosenberger, in regard to serving notices, which made me think it would probably be better for me to come here at this hearing, so that Your Honor and these gentlemen will have no misunderstanding in regard to the Cambria case. As I understand it, this accounting is between the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and the Trust Company. The notices served have all been entitled in the Cambria case; and, there is a stipulation on file in the case, which practically leaves the Cambria Company out of it until this accounting is all ended. I apprehend—the stipulation, in effect, so provides, that if upon the accounting it is shown or found there is a balance due the Suburban Belt Company or its receivers, then the question is open—it is open for us to then try the question whether that balance should not be subjected to the creditor's bill of the Cambria Company. Another question which will then arise, is, suppose a lot of this collateral on hand 1097 ought to be released, that is, released, or freed from the particular pledge under which it is held; then the question will arise whether it is not subject to the creditor's bill, or, whether it can be held under the mortgage, or under the pledge. But so far as this particular accounting is concerned, those questions between the Cambria Company and those parties can not arise until after the testimony is taken. I simply wanted to come here and state my position, so that there would be no misunderstanding as to my not appearing in the future.

None of the counsel made any objection or reply to the statement. Whereupon, the master stated, "that is my understanding of the matter."

Mr. ROSENBERGER: I understand that you still desire that all notices of motions be served on you.

Mr. HAGERMAN: I think you had better do that. I have no objection to signing any notices you may have and any acceptance of notices that affect the general merits of the case.

Mr. ROSENBERGER: I want to know whether you want to be served with all notices?

Mr. HAGERMAN: Yes, I think that would be the better way. You will have no trouble—they will all be accepted. But sometimes, in order to serve the Cambria Company, I might want to be present. It will be no more trouble in sending out the notices. Mine will only be a carbon copy of the one to Mr. Moore."

The following stipulation, which is the only one bearing on the subject mentioned by Mr. Hagerman, is on file in said cause:

1098 In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri.

Bill.

In Equity.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Complainant,

vs.

THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT RAILROAD COMPANY, UNION Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City & Independence Air Line, Guardian Trust Company, Missouri Elevator and Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Cross Bill.

STUART R. KNOTT and EDWARD F. SWINNEY, as Receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Complainants,

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY and FRANCIS M. BLACK, Its Receiver; Missouri Elevator and Terminal Company and Wash Adams, Its Receiver; Central Improvement Company and Wash Adams, Its Receiver; Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, and Northern Townsite Company, Defendants.

Stipulation.

It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between Stuart R. Knott and Edward F. Swinney, receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, complainants in the cross bill in the above 1099 entitled cause, and the defendants, the Guardian Trust Company and Francis M. Black, its receiver, Second Street Improvement Company and Cambria Steel Company, as follows:

First. That the said complainants shall withdraw or dismiss their cross bill heretofore filed herein, and shall file an amended cross bill, in the nature of an ancillary bill in this cause, making the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company a co-plaintiff with them in said amended ancillary cross bill, and also making the Cambria Steel Company, the complainant in the original bill herein, a defendant in said amended ancillary cross bill, and that said amended ancillary cross bill shall be filed on or before the 15th day of November, 1901, and that the defendants, the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver and the Second Street Improvement Company and the Cambria Steel Company, shall have leave to plead or answer to said amended ancillary cross bill, on or before the first Monday in December, 1901.

Second. That the accounting between the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers and the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver, sought by the said amended ancillary cross bill, shall be expended by all of the parties hereto, and whatever balance, if any, that may be found due to the said Guardian Trust Company or its receiver, from the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company or its receivers shall be entered up in this cause as a judgment in favor of the said Trust Company and its receiver and against the Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers without the necessity of presenting any claim therefor by way of cross bill; or other affirmative pleading; and whatever balance, if any that may be found due to the said Suburban Belt Railroad Company, or its receivers, from said Guardian Trust 1100 Company or its receivers, shall be entered up in this cause as a judgment in favor of the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and its receivers, and against the Guardian Trust Company and its receiver.

Dated this — day of November, 1901.

STUART R. KNOTT AND
EDWARD F. SWINNEY,
Receivers of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Co.,
By THOMAS R. MORROW,
S. W. MOORE,
Their Solicitors.
GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY AND
FRANCIS M. BLACK,
Its Receiver.
F. M. BLACK AND
TRIMBLE & BRALEY,
Its Solicitors.
SECOND STREET IMPROVEMENT COMPANY,
By TRIMBLE & BRALEY,
Its Solicitors.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY,
By —— ——, Its Solicitors.

I consent and agree to the foregoing stipulation with the understanding that it shall in no wise prejudice the right, if any, which the Cambria Steel Company has to subject any debt found to be due from the Guardian Trust Company, or to subject any property or collateral or the proceeds thereof, heretofore or now in the 1101 hands of the Guardian Trust Company or its receiver, or its or his assigns, and all the testimony introduced by any party herein shall be with the understanding that the Cambria Steel Company can, if it so desires, use the same upon final hearing of its bill in the case above entitled.

FRANK HAGERMAN,
Solicitor for Cambria Steel Co.

III.

Wherefore, your petitioner prays the court that the application of the said Cambria Steel Company for a writ of certiorari be not granted, or that if the same be granted, that the same be granted only upon condition that the entire portion of the record hereinbefore set forth be certified by the clerk of the court.

(Signed) EDWARD P. GATES &
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western Division of the Western District of Missouri:

I, Adelaide Utter, clerk of the Circuit Court of the United States in and for said division and district, do hereby certify that the foregoing matter quoted from pages 8315, 8316, 8317 and pages 8322, 8323 and 8324 of Volume 16 of the evidence returned by the Special Master with his report in these causes in the court below, is correct as the same appears of record in my office.

[SEAL.] (Signed) ADELAIDE UTTER, Clerk.

1102 STATE OF MISSOURI,
County of Jackson, ss:

George H. English, Jr., of lawful age, being duly sworn, upon his oath states that he is agent and attorney for Guardian Trust Company, and makes this affidavit in its itself, and that the matters and things set forth in the foregoing instrument are true as therein stated.

(Signed) GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 4th day of May, 1911.

(Signed) SILAS EMMETT SKELLEY, [SEAL.]
Notary Public.

My term expires the 28th day of Feb., 1911.

Received copy this May 4th, 1911.

(Signed) S. W. MOORE,
Solicitor for Parties Represented by Him.

(Signed) FRANK HAGERMAN,
Solicitor for Cambria Steel Co.

(Signed) T. B. BUCKNER,
Solicitor for Central Improvement Co.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on May 6, 1911.

1103 (Appearance of Mr. Samuel Untermyer for Certain Appellees, in Cause No. 3489.)

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellees (except Cambria Steel Co.).

SAM UNTERMYER.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on May 26, 1911.

(Motion to Dismiss Submitted in Cause No. 3489, to Be Considered with Cause on Merits.)

May Term, 1911.

FRIDAY, May 26, 1911.

In this cause the motion of appellees to dismiss the appeal herein having been called to the attention of the Court, it is now here ordered by the Court that said motion to dismiss be taken as submitted to be argued and considered with the cause on the merits.

(Order that Portions of Record of Circuit Court Printed in Suggestions of Guardian Trust Co., Filed May 6, 1911, Be Taken as Part of Record in Circuit Court of Appeals.)

May Term, 1911.

FRIDAY, May 26, 1911.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

and

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

The above entitled causes came on to be heard upon the suggestion of a diminution of record and motion of the Cambria Steel Company for a writ of certiorari.

On consideration whereof, and in pursuance of the agreement of counsel in open Court, it is now here ordered by this Court that the portion of the record of the said Circuit Court, as set out and 1104 printed in the suggestions of the Guardian Trust Company in opposition to the application for a writ of certiorari filed herein, shall be taken and considered by the Court as a part of the transcript of the record in this cause.

(Order of Argument of Question of Taxation of Costs Against Cambria Steel Co.)

May Term, 1911.

FRIDAY, May 26, 1911.

In the above entitled causes the question as to the liability of the Cambria Steel Company for costs was argued by Mr. Frank Hagerman, in behalf of the Cambria Steel Company by permission of the Court, in advance of the arguments on the merits.

(Order of Argument on Merits.)

May Term, 1911.

FRIDAY, May 26, 1911.

The above entitled causes having been called for hearing on the merits, argument was commenced by Mr. George H. English, Jr., for the appellants, and the hour for adjournment having arrived further argument is postponed until tomorrow.

(Order of Submission on Merits.)

May Term, 1911.

SATURDAY, May 27, 1911.

The above entitled causes having been called for further hearing, argument was continued by Mr. George H. English, Jr. for appellants, by Mr. Samuel Untermyer and Mr. Samuel W. Moore for appellees and concluded by Mr. Edward P. Gates for appellants.

Thereupon, these causes were submitted to the Court on the transcript of record from said Circuit Court and the briefs of counsel filed herein.

(Appearance of Messrs. Gates & English as Counsel for Appellant in Cause No. 3490.)

No. 3490.

1105 GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellant.

EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
1003 Scarritt B'ld'g, Kansas City, Mo.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Oct. 10, 1910.

(Appearance of Mr. S. W. Moore as Counsel for Appellees K. C. Sub. Belt Ry. Co. et al. in Cause No. 3490.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellees, K. C. Sub. Belt Ry. Co. et al.

S. W. MOORE.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Dec. 13, 1910.

(Appearance of Mr. Frank Hagerman as Counsel for Appellee Cambria Steel Co. in Cause No. 3490.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellee, Cambria Steel Co.

FRANK HAGERMAN.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Dec. 17, 1910.

(Appearance of Mr. Samuel Untermyer as Counsel for Certain Appellees in Cause No. 3490.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for Appellees (except Cambria Steel Company).

SAM. UNTERMYER.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on May 26, 1911.

1106 (Petition of Edward A. Shedd et al. for Leave to File Additional Briefs.)

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Petition for Leave, etc.

And now come Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law and show to the court that they are residents of the City of Chicago, Illinois; that they are stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company, said Shedd and Shedd having $66,700 par value and said Law $15,000 par value of said stock, the total outstanding stock of said Trust Company being about $2,200,000, and they petition for leave to file additional briefs herein in support of the appeal of the Guardian Trust Company.

1107 Said petition is based upon the following grounds:

1. The decree of the court below, entered in June, 1910, awarded the said Trust Company a judgment against the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company of $639,658.86, which with interest and the costs involved now amounts to over $700,000.

It appears from the record that said Belt Company is a defunct company, the assets of which were acquired by the Kansas City Southern Railway Company over ten years ago under a reorganization or consolidation plan, the essential provisions of which (including the depositors' agreement annexed thereto) are set out in the master's report herein (Pr. Rec., 942-955).

The lower court found in its decree that the said Southern Company was not liable for the Belt Company debts.

The first assignment of error herein is the only one bearing upon this issue, viz.:

"1st. That the court erred in including in said decree the finding that the Southern Company did not assume or agree to pay or become liable for the indebtedness owing by the Belt Company to the Trust Company."

The briefs filed on behalf of the Trust Company do not fully argue said first assignment of error:

In that said briefs present only the question of the right or propriety of the Circuit Court making a finding upon the question of the liability of the said Southern Company; whereas it is not argued in the alternative that said finding or ruling is in fact erroneous and wrong on the merits.

1108 2. That said ruling is wrong, and that the said Southern Company is so liable upon each of two separate and independent grounds, viz.:

1st. By virtue of the fact that said Southern Company is a consolidation of said Belt Company, as shown by the plan of reorganization and the provisions therein for the exchange of stock;

2d. By virtue of an express promise in said plan to pay the floating debt of the reorganized companies; in that it is announced in said plan inviting the deposits of stocks and bonds of the old companies that one of the "results to be attained" by the plan would be

"(b) The payment of the floating debt and the existing car trust company obligations;"

thus showing an election on the part of the reorganizers to recognize the floating debt of the old companies in reorganizing them into the new one.

3. That there will be occasioned by the allowance of this application no substantial surprise to the counsel for said Southern Company, nor will any new burden be placed upon them because:

Elaborate and thoroughly prepared briefs bearing upon this question were prepared in 1905 and 1907 by a former counsel of the Trust Company, Harry S. Mecartney, Esq., of Chicago, while he had charge of the present case in the court below, the first having been filed before the master in June, 1905, and the second, a complete revised brief, having been filed before him in June, 1907.

That there was also prepared at the expense of the Trust Company an opinion on said reorganization plan by C. O. Tichenor, 1109 Esq., of Kansas City, Mo., in November, 1905.

That the said counsel for the Southern Company, Samuel W. Moore, Esq., filed a printed brief on said issue before the master in the fall of 1906, and also in the fall of 1907, a second printed brief in answer to the second or revised brief of Mr. Mecartney.

That it is proposed to file herein only the said opinion of Mr. Tichenor and the said second or revised brief of said counsel, Mr. Mccartney, with a short abstract of the master's rulings on said issue.

4. If, therefore, as the case at present stands this court should hold that since the issue of the liability of said Southern Company was expressly raised in the answer of the Guardian Trust Company to the intervening petition of said Southern Company; since it was an issue so germane and so vital that, if decided in favor of the Trust Company, it would of itself alone have disposed of the entire case of the Southern; and since evidence was introduced on said issue by both parties, etc., etc., the master had a right to make a finding in respect thereto, and that the lower court had, therefore, a right to make a finding in respect thereto—as the counsel for the Southern Company contends herein—it will then of necessity follow, if the merits of said ruling be not gone into, that the Trust Company will lose its right to a decree against the Southern Company for over $700,000.

It appears from the briefs as well as from the record, that the Guardian Trust Company commenced three suits against the 1110 Southern in the Jackson County (State) Court at Kansas City to recover of the Southern as successor of the Belt the notes originally issued by the Belt. These are still pending. If the finding of no liability remains in this record the Southern will of course plead res judicata to these pending claims.

It is true that there is a claim on the part of the Trust Company to some collateral which the decree of the Circuit Court denies to it; and by which if it reverses—and only in case it reverses—such decree it will be apt to realize a portion of this claim—stated on the oral argument to be $300,000 to $400,000; but even as to such collateral and in such case said Trust Company is liable to be put to great delay, expense and complications in collecting or realizing upon the same.

Wherefore, petitioners submit affidavits and suggestions in support hereof, and pray for leave to file the opinion, brief and abstract of the master's ruling presented herewith, as well as a complete copy from the record in this case of the said reorganization plan.

Respectfully submitted,

NEWELL H. CLAPP,
ENOCH J. PRICE,
Counsel for Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law.

1111 Affidavit of Charles B. Shedd.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
County of Cook, ss:

Charles B. Shedd, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he and his brother, Edward A. Shedd, have been for more than seven years last past stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company of Kansas City, Missouri, and holding therein in common a total of 667 shares, or $66,700 par value of the stock of said company, the total par issue of which is about $2,200,000. That Robert H. Law is the owner of 150 shares of said stock.

Affiant further says that the present suit, represented in the appeal of the Guardian Trust Company, involves a claim against the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, including interest and costs of over $700,000, or nearly one-third of the capital stock, and being equal to or exceeding the value of all of the assets of said company other than said claim.

Affiant further says that if the said decree of the Circuit Court in this case is sustained it will make a difference to the applicants as stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company of about $25,000.

Affiants further say and show to the court that, as they are advised by counsel, the said claim against the Kansas City Southern Company is a good and valid claim and is clearly sustainable in law and equity. That the decree of the court below following the report of the special master has awarded the Guardian Trust Com-1112 pany judgment for all its claims (less a few small conceded off-sets) amounting to $639,658.86, against the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railway Company, but the assets of which company were absorbed about ten years ago by the Kansas City Southern Company under its reorganization plan. Hence, the said judgment, outside of the collateral securing the claims, is worthless.

Affiant further states that from the beginning of said cause until about December 6, 1904, or thereabouts, the Guardian Trust Company was represented in the litigation in the court below in this case by J. McD. Trimble, Esq., who was then succeeded by one Harry S. Mecartney, Esq., a counselor at law of Chicago, Illinois, who continued in charge of said litigation with Jules C. Rosenberg, Esq., of Kansas City as his local assistant counsel. Said Mecartney was succeeded on or about March 27, 1908, by Messrs. Gates and English, the present counsel.

That in the course of his said employment said Mecartney obtained an opinion of C. O. Tichenor, Esq., of Kansas City, upon the merits of the question of the liability of the Southern Company for said Belt Company debt, printed copies of which were furnished the directors (of which affiant was one) and the executive committee of said Trust Company in the fall of 1905, and presents herewith a printed copy of said opinion, which sustains the said claim of liability.

That said Mecartney also prepared a brief upon said issue and a later revised brief thereon.

That affiant is informed and believes that copies of said opinion of Mr. Tichenor and of said briefs are in possession of said 1113 Guardian Trust Company's counsel, who have presented the present appeals to this court, but they have declined to either present a brief of their own or to use said opinion or brief upon said issue.

Affiant further says that he only learned on or about May 14th or 15th, 1911, of the situation in respect to said appeal of said Trust Company in the Court of Appeals, and that the attention of the said counsel, Messrs. Gates and English, had been called to the same by said Mecartney and suggestion made that the briefs be filed upon said liability issue. That affiant immediately thereafter, and on May 20th, ult., retained counsel on behalf of himself and brother and said Law to look into said matter and present briefs and arguments thereon; but was advised that it was impossible to prepare the proper papers and application before the oral argument in said cause, which was set for four days later, the 24th of May.

Affiant further says that this litigation was instituted by and in the name of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company at a time when practically all of its stocks and bonds had been deposited in pursuance of the reorganization plan which involved said company and its constituent companies, along with the Kansas City, Pittsburgh & Gulf Company; and that at the time thereof, as the record shows herein, the said Southern Company and the reorganization committee,—which was practically identical in interest and in power with the said Southern Company,—had control of said Belt Company and all of its assets, and instigated this litigation.

1114 That shortly after the said suit had been commenced, John W. Gates and others who were minority stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company and of dominating influence with said Kansas City Southern and reorganization committee,—said Gates and his counsel, Max Pam, being members of said committee,—commenced a stockholders' suit in the name of one Bierce against said Trust Company, and a receiver for said company was appointed in said Bierce case, which affiant is informed was mentioned in the oral arguments in this case. Said receiver was discharged in 1902.

That after said receiver had been appointed the Guardian Trust Company ceased doing business as an active concern, and has not done business since, except to liquidate its assets.

That after a long factional contest and in October, 1905, one John A. Prescott,—who had represented said Gates and others as to their stock interests in the Guardian Trust Company,—got control of said Trust Company by virtue of a liquidating contract, and that said Prescott has been in control of said company since, and liquidating its assets under the formal direction of an executive committee.

Affiant further says that the stockholders of said Trust Company are widely scattered, there being at last accounts received by him about 400 in number; and it would be impossible to assemble a large number of them to join in the application now made without great effort and expense, especially since most of them have become discouraged on account of the long and oppressive 1115 Belt litigation and the court conditions under which it has been carried on; and that since, as he is advised, this application must be made quite early and as promptly as possible, there is not the time requisite to enlist them in any new movement to protect their interests herein by joining in this application.

That said Messrs. Gates and English (who are the regular counsel for said Trust Company), with said Prescott and Mr. E. C. Wright, his personal counsel and business associate,—all located at Kansas City—constitute four of the five members of the executive committee of the Guardian Trust Company. That the fifth member of said executive committee, Mr. A. E. Stilwell (who is a resident of New York City), is and has been for many years engrossed as the chief promoter and manager of the Kansas City, Mexican & Orient Railway and has been able to give but little time to the affairs of said Trust Company, and affiant believes is not advised of the precarious situation in respect to said appeal. That, therefore, any further application by affiant to the officers of said Guardian Trust Company to cause said briefs to be filed would be useless, even were there time allowed therefor.

CHARLES B. SHEDD.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of June, 1911.
N. R. WAKEFIELD, Jr.,
Notary Public.

1116 STATE OF ILLINOIS,
County of Cook, ss:

Harry S. Mecartney, being duly sworn according to law, doth depose and say that he is and has been for nearly thirty years last past a practicing lawyer, with headquarters in Chicago, Illinois.

That on December 6, 1904, affiant was retained in the litigation pending in the United States Circuit Court at Kansas City, between the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company as complainant and Guardian Trust Company, defendant, and the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, intervenor therein, affiant succeeding the Honorable J. McD. Trimble as counsel for said Guardian Trust Company.

That affiant continued in charge of said litigation until March 27, 1908, when he was succeeded therein by Messrs. Gates & English, who represent said Guardian Trust Company in the present and pending appeal in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit.

Affiant further states that in the summer and early fall of 1905 he prepared and printed a brief and argument on the question of the liability of said Southern Company for the floating debt of the Belt Company and other companies which had been merged by the reorganization agreement of 1899 into the Kansas City Southern Railway Company. That he obtained for the benefit and at the expense of said Guardian Trust Company an opinion from Honorable C. O. Tichenor, a leading lawyer of Kansas City and Missouri, the effect of which was to sustain said claim 1117 of liability upon two independent grounds, namely (1), that said Southern Company was a consolidation of said Belt Company and other companies, and also (2), that the plan of reorganization contained an express election or promise to pay such debts; which conclusions were also the contentions asserted in affiant's said brief.

That affiant in due course had said opinion printed and copies mailed to each of the directors of the Guardian Trust Company early in November, 1905.

Affiant further says that said cause referred to above, was argued before the special master, Shannon C. Douglas, in July, 1906, and that said Southern Company through its counsel, S. W. Moore, Esq., of Kansas City, presented a long printed brief upon said issue of consolidation and liability to pay the Belt Company's debts, exceeding 100 pages.

That after said arguments had been closed and while the cause was pending before said Master Douglas in June, 1907, affiant prepared an additional and revised brief on said issue, labeled "Supplemental Argument on Intervention Issues and on Cross Bill to be Filed," in which the conclusions were again reached that said

Southern Company was liable for the debts of said Belt Company, as outlined in the prior brief of affiant and in said Tichenor's opinion. Affiant had intended to file a cross-bill in said cause upon said issue.

That after this brief had been filed before said master in the spring of 1907, said S. W. Moore, Esq., presented a printed brief in reply thereto exceeding some 50 pages, to which affiant made no further reply.

1118 Affiant further states that subsequent to his leaving the case in March, 1908, he has had nothing whatever to do with this litigation, and did not keep track of the same; but that about May 1st last he learned in consultation with said Trimble that the present counsel had not argued the merits of said question of liability upon the present appeal, and later obtained from said Trimble a copy of the brief of the Guardian Trust Company, appellant in said cause.

That he later examined the record at Kansas City and had various copies made of some extracts thereof, and finally reported to Messrs. Shedd and Law, petitions herein, on or about May 16, 1911, the situation in respect to said appeal, and also the jeopardy in which, according to affiant's judgment, the said cause had been placed by the manner of its presentation; and that on May 18, 1911, he had a further consultation with them, immediately after which they retained counsel for the purpose of presenting further briefs to said Court of Appeals.

Affiant further states that their request and instance he attended the oral argument lately had in St. Paul in said case and took full notes thereof, and had the same written up and presented to the counsel herein for said Shedd and Law. That he has attempted to the extent of his ability to assist said counsel in understanding said record and in preparing said motion.

Affiant further states that on or about May 4, 1911, he fully explained to Messrs. Gates & English what he considered the danger in the way said appeal had been presented, and about 1119 that time furnished them with additional printed copies of the said opinion of Mr. Tichenor and of the said briefs prepared by him in 1905 and 1907, as hereinabove stated. That he also suggested that said briefs be filed in time for the coming argument, unless said counsel chose to file briefs of their own upon said issue. That the cause has been presented without any attempt on the part of said counsel to present such briefs of their own or to file the said briefs and opinion which had been prepared at great labor at the expense of the Guardian Trust Company.

Further affiant saith not.

HARRY S. MECARTNEY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 12th day of June, A. D. 1911.

N. R. WAKEFIELD, JR.,
Notary Public.

1120 Suggestions in Support of Above Petition.

This record presents a case where, as it is believed, some $700,000 has been put in jeopardy by the manner of the presentation of the present appeal lately heard on oral agreement.

The stockholders applying for leave have done nothing to bring about this state of affairs and failed in no duty which would have obviated it.

It is, therefore, a question of a clear loss to them alone of quite a snug fortune.

The application has two alternative bases, viz.:

I. That its equity appears alone upon the face of the issues of the pending appeal proper and of the briefs lately filed.

II. That if this be not sufficient in itself—and to aid the court only in case of doubt—the issue now pending is a branch or adjunct of a long litigation abnormally oppressive to the Trust Company, and is apt to result in an unjust ending of the same; and hence indulgence of the application is doubly warranted by the briefest survey of the entire record.

As this court has learned from the briefs filed and the late oral arguments, the original bill was filed in September, 1900, by the Cambria Company as a creditor of the Belt Company, against the latter and the Guardian Trust Company and other companies, praying for a receiver for the Belt Company, who, as it 1121 was prayed, should file a bill for an accounting on behalf of the Belt against the Guardian.

Receivers were promptly appointed and they filed a bill for an accounting, which has been called herein an "ancillary bill," and which became of course the main accounting bill.

The master and the court below have found after a ten years' litigation that there was no right to such accounting, and that the notes and claims held by the Guardian Trust Company against the Belt were all valid and due as per their terms. (Three conceded off-sets aggregating some twenty-odd thousand dollars were allowed.)

It also appears that in February, 1905, the Kansas City Southern Railway Company filed an intervening petition in the lower court, in which it claimed that various stocks and bonds and other personal and intangible property theretofore pledged by the Belt Company to the Guardian Trust Company as collateral to its debt and then held by the latter had been acquired by the Southern as purchaser under a foreclosure sale of the assets of said Belt Company. It also made a claim to the lands held by the Central Improvement Company, as shown in paragraph 6 of its printed petition filed therein.

In the year 1905 the Guardian Trust Company filed its printed answer to said intervening petition, in which, after denying the right of said intervenor to said collateral, it set forth in paragraphs Nos. 14 to 20 thereof that the Kansas City Southern Railway was a consolidation of the Suburban Belt and the Kansas 1122 City, Pittsburgh & Gulf and various other constituent railroad companies, and that thereby under the statutes of Missouri it was liable to pay the debt of the Belt Company.

It was also set forth that in the reorganization plan there was an express undertaking to pay said debts, as in said plan inviting the deposit of stocks and bonds it was expressly stated that one of the "results" to be "attained" by the said plan—i. e., one of its objects—was:

"(b) The payment of the floating debt and existing car trust obligations." (P. Rec., 944.)

In the decree entered in the court below, following the special master's report, the following finding is made:

"VII. The court finds the issues, made by paragraphs 15 (14) to 20, inclusive, of the answer of the Guardian Trust Company to the amended intervening petition of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, against the Guardian Trust Company, and in favor of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, in that and it is so decreed, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, did not assume, or agree to pay, or become liable for, the indebtedness, or any part of it, owing by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the defendant, Guardian Trust Company, and that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company is in no wise liable or bound for the payment of the indebtedness of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the defendant, Guardian Trust Company, the payment of which is decreed in paragraph IV of this decree." (Printed Rec., 1061.)

The Guardian Trust Company in the appeal herein has 1123 made but three assignments of error, of which the first is the only one relating to said issue:

"1st. That the court erred in including in said decree the finding that the Southern Company did not assume or agree to pay or become liable for the indebtedness by the Belt Company to the Trust Company." (Appellant's Brief.)

Counsel for appellants have not argued the merits of said claims set forth in paragraphs 14 to 20.

If the court should hold,—as we certainly are afraid it may hold,—that the court below had jurisdiction to pass upon this issue, it can and will be claimed by the Southern Company that there has been a final adjudication upon this issue of ultimate fact. So that when the pending cases against the Southern Company shall be brought on in the state courts of Jackson County, Missouri, the Southern will be enabled to defeat this large claim of over $700,000. (In fact, the Southern's counsel frankly say that this is their intention.) Thereby the Guardian Trust Company's stockholders are apt to lose said amount of money—unless the finding of the lower court is attacked herein upon its merits.

There is needed no new evidence nor any additional portion of the record below, as the master's report sets forth all the essentials of the reorganization plan and the prior depositors' agreement, and he expressly so states. (Print. Rec., 944.)

To save any question, however, as to an ultimate disposition of this liability issue in toto, we have concluded to present 1124 herewith a certified copy of the printed reorganization plan and the prior depositors' agreement annexed to the same as shown in the record, and ask leave to have it filed.

The assignment of error—the first—is sufficient, for our purposes here, as we believe. It is averred that the court erred "in including in its decree" the finding of non-liability of the Southern. This is in effect an averment that the court erred in decreeing that there was no liability.

Besides, this court under Rule 11 can at its option take notice of a plain error not assigned.

But to save any question upon this technical and formal point, we petition—in the alternative that the court should deem the assignment too narrow—to assign the following:

"IV. The said finding of non-liability on the part of said Kansas City Southern Railway Company to pay the debts of the said Belt Company was and is erroneous."

I.

The cases where stockholders of a corporation are allowed to intervene in behalf of the company and either conduct or control the administration of its affairs on the ground of waste or mismanagement, etc., etc., are well known to this court.

The present application does not go this far. It does not even ask the court to control this litigation—but is simply an attempt to save the case and the resultant loss. It is in substance a request to be enabled to aid the court in administering justice—the justice involved in the present appeal.

1125 It has for its equity that embodied in the following:

1. Applicants are stockholders in the appealing company.

2. A large financial interest of said company, making, in fact, the major quantum of its assets, some $700,000, is put in jeopardy by the manner in which the appeal has been presented, or at least argued. (It involves $25,000 of applicants' money alone.)

3. Applicants, learning of this fact or situation, make seasonable application to aid the company and the court—and, hence, the cause of justice—by presenting simply further argument upon the record. It will take the court but a few hours to read the briefs presented, and probably save an erroneous award of a sum of money huge in itself.

4. The faithful and prudent administration of corporate affairs and the protection of stockholders' interests thereby are of universal interest and concern. And

5. The protection of creditors of a large public enterprise such as a railroad—and especially where a reorganization plan contains a broad express provision for the payment of its obligations—is also a matter of universal concern.

Hence applicants suggest that the court should allow the additional argument upon the face of the appeal alone, and that portion of the record most strictly involved thereby.

1126 II.

As a second consideration or as a broader basis for the application, and particularly as emphasizing the eminent propriety in granting it, applicants desire to briefly point out the abnormal character of this litigation instigated and prosecuted by the Belt-Southern interests. If the decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed, it will all have resulted in success to them; and this success probably the sheer result of the oppressive dimensions of the case itself and its tendency to baffle the efforts of the ablest counsel in comprehending all its vital questions and effectually presenting arguments thereon. Much—in fact, all—of the subject-matter referred to on this head was referred to in the briefs filed and in the oral arguments, complete notes of which lie before the writer hereof.

36,000 pages of evidence!

The longest record ever made!

But this is not all.

This "longest record ever made" was made upon a hopelessly bad bill—upon a legally meaningless theory or complaint!

Can your Honors calmly conceive of such a thing?

Or that there existed court conditions at Kansas City or anywhere else in this country which permitted it?

1. In the briefs filed and in the oral arguments lately made it was calmly stated to the court that the Cambria bill and the An-1127 cillary bill and also the intervening petition all charged that the Guardian Trust Company had "dominated" the Belt and its constituent companies, and also the subsidiary companies allied in interest to it; that the master had found as a fact that the Trust Company had "not dominated" the said company.

No word was said by counsel on either side to the effect that there was no real intelligent charge of domination in the bills or petition, i. e., any domination such as could be exercised in inter-corporate affairs or relationships.

The chief and most explicit charge of domination or rather the nearest approach to one is set out in the ancillary bill. (Print. Rec., p. 236, 244.)

The judges will wonder when told that it was not claimed in the ancillary bill in any of these "domination" pleadings, either (1) that the Trust Company at any time ever held a majority of stock in the Belt, or even a respectable minority thereof, or (2) that any ring or set of men caused the Trust Company to dominate the Belt to their financial interest, or (3) caused the Trust Company to cause the Belt to enter into unfair or fraudulent "promoting" contracts with them, or (4) that they, by reason of having a much larger interest in one corporation than the other, caused such unfair contracts to be made in consequence of which they would receive an undue financial benefit, etc. (These are the only four classes of so-called domination cases which we have heard of.) But that the entire charge of "domination" and resultant fraud and unfairness is based solely upon the averment that during the entire 1128 period of eleven years covered by the accounting, the stockholders of each corporation—presumably adult and not under duress—happened to "elect" largely—and not wholly—identical directors (P. R., 244); that therefore and thereby the entire transactions between the two companies, all open and unconcealed, all spread at large and in duplicate on the books of each company (they "tallied to a cent"; P. R., 745, "(j)")—were constructively "fraudulent," no matter whether approved by the officers of each company, balances settled for by note, no matter whether older than the statute of limitations, etc., etc.

Of course, the court will see that it would be just as easy and just as logical to say that thereby the Belt Company "dominated" the Trust Company, and there would be just as much excuse for a bill by the latter and just as much excuse for a $23,000 reporters' bill and a $25,000 master fee or for total costs of nearly $100,000,—Judge Gates' estimate made on the oral argument. The strange thing about the master's report is that he finds the fatal insufficiency of the averments of the bill, but devotes some several hundred printed pages to finding from the evidence that there was "no domination"—and the bill is based on nothing else!

He mentions (P. R., 742) the four classes of "domination" cases mentioned above. He then "distinguishes" this case therefrom, by setting out (pages 743-745) some thirteen "Controlling Facts" "which appear on the face of the bill, or are practically undisputed in the proofs" numbered "(a)" to "(m)", most all, if not each of which, would have been a complete defense if a good or prima facie cause of action had been stated in the first instance!

1129 (Of what use such an elaborate report could be can not be imagined—although the labor involved in its preparation probably justified the unusually large fee allowed.)

In other words, the bill is at war with a well-known condition long common to the entire country. And if it were good, almost every large corporation in the country would be held liable to "account" to every other corporation with whom it had done business and whose directors were largely common to both and no matter how many, how old or how open or often settled the transactions had been. Such a ruling if generally enforced would, as it is easily perceived, overwhelm and paralyze the courts and throw them into a state of anarchy.

The "Stipulation" to Account.

The excuse for allowing the collossal record to be made—independently of the question whether the bill could sustain any decree rendered in pursuant of any such "accounting"—has been the stipulation so often and triumphantly referred to by counsel for the Belt and Southern. (Stip. shown in Print. Rec., 570, also 1034, and in Appellee's brief, p. 2.)

We can do no better than refer to Mr. Mecartney's printed argument on the subject filed before the master, copies of which have been in the possession of the Trust Company and Messrs. Gates and English as well, and here merely quote a few extracts from his analysis of this stipulation.

As a preliminary, we observe that any agreement between parties to take the time and use the functionaries of the public 1130 courts to re-account for 10,000 to 12,000 items of business (the master's estimate, Printed Rec., 662), all of which had been settled and shown on the books of the parties years before, and this upon a legally meaningless pleading, ought certainly not bind the courts, and hence not the parties.

The following are the extracts referred to:

"(1) Since the defendant expressly reserved the right to plead to the bill, it was clear that there was not meant to be a consent to a general accounting.

"(2) 'The accounting' to be expedited was, hence, an accounting subject to all pleas in bar or defenses to the right to an account.

"(3) The 'accounting' prayed for or 'sought' in the bill showed the scope of and merely identified the case itself. The accounting case was to be expedited.

"(4) The Trust Company did not waive any defenses to the bill as a whole or any part thereof; and where the right to plead or object to any accounting is expressly reserved, no other construction than the one stated is possible.

"(5) The bill had not been filed at the time the stipulation was made, and it is not to be supposed that a defendant would consent to go into evidence upon any transaction that might be attached, or to waive all legal defenses thereto. Hence,

"(6) As the accounting, after pleas and answers should have been filed, was to be expedited, the parties must have intended that 1131 the 'accounting sought,' subject to the pleas or answers to be filed, was to be expedited.

"(7) Even if the matter were otherwise in doubt, and even if defendant had not expressly reserved the right to plead—to object—the answer subsequently filed containing pleas in bar and denying complainant's right to an accounting would control, and on two grounds, viz.:

(a) As revealing the construction which the parties themselves had placed upon said stipulation.

(b) As superseding the stipulation. The case was to be tried upon pleadings to be filed, and not upon the stipulation.

(c) The fact that complainant later filed exceptions to the answer containing no objection that it was broader than the stipulation or was in violation of it, etc., etc., is also strong and controlling evidence as to how the parties construed the stipulation.

"To the above may be added:

"(8) The bill to be filed was later amended, and the answer to that again denied the right of complainant to any accounting, and set up various pleas in bar thereto. And the case has been tried upon the pleadings as filed.

"(9) The court would incline to adopt a construction against accounting for such stale transactions, especially where no secret fraud was alleged; and

"(10) Would probably decline on its own account to be used for such an investigation.

"(11) There is no intelligent statement in the bill of a right of or a basis for account. The bill is not capable of having any such stipulation applied to it,—otherwise than as an agreement to speed the cause.

1132 "There is no basis for 'an account' until some legal right or claim can be scraped up somehow and somewhere on the face of the bill."

In opposing the issuance of Judge McPherson's injunction (reversed here in Guardian Trust Co. v. Kas. Cy. Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43), and in the answer to the rule to show cause, Mr. Mecartney, former counsel for the Trust Company, set up the fatal insufficiency of the ancillary bill and the intervening petition (Secs. 13 and 14; P. R., 642), and argued the same in a short printed brief.

It seems somewhat strange that Messrs. Gates and English did not, in the argument on the former appeal, insist upon the insufficiency of the basal pleadings—the original support of the supplemental bill for injunction.

In fact, the last paragraph but one of this court's opinion fully justifies the point that the court should consider the basal pleadings, and the belief that it would have done so there had their apparent lack of merit been urged upon its attention.

We have quoted this brief analysis to show the court here the significance of this record and a purpose that has evidently lain back of this abnormal and oppressive suit.

For we cannot believe that the able and astute counsel for the Belt and Southern have not long since discerned the fallacy of their complaint.

It is hard for a fresh reader of these bills to believe that a counsel of Mr. Hagerman's standing and ability could either per-1133 sonally or in connection with Mr. Max Pam have filed a bill with no more legal or intelligent a charge than a mere cry of "domination and constructive fraud" and to tender such a basis to Judge Phillips for throwing a number of corporations into receiver's hands and joining all together in one suit.

On this record showing, therefore, we say that the entire case upon the face of the proceedings is an abnormal wrong upon the Trust Company; and that its very scope and dimensions alone are apt to have caused the present counsel for the Trust Company to have overlooked the great danger in the present appeal as presented, and possibly to be unconscious of the plain merits of the Trust Company's case and claim against the Southern.

Therefore, we say the counsel or party causing such a record and such a wrong have no basis of complaint against an attempt to save the situation and the cause of justice by the simple act of filing additional arguments.

And we of course assume that Messrs. Gates and English will not oppose it. For the merits of the question of the Southern's liability need only be considered in case the judges are of opinion that such issue was properly made the subject of a finding by the court below.

2. But a very marked and significant addition to the record showing just referred to is revealed in the record of the two dependent suits filed by the Southern's counsel, Mr. Moore, to enjoin 1134 the state court suits.

And with these this court is familiar.

The first is reported in 146 Fed. 337 (Guardian Trust Co. v. Kas. Cy. Southern Ry. Co.).

Now, in the case brought in 1900 to foreclose the Belt mortgage, the Guardian had been made a party by reason of its having been a co-trustee with the Provident Life in the mortgage. In addition to its formal answer as trustee, it asked leave to file "an amended and supplemental answer," in which it set up that the foreclosure was simply a part of a reorganization scheme and of a probable intent on the part of the reorganizers to use the prospective decree to embarras the Trust Company and other Belt creditors in asserting their claims against the prospective purchaser—the Southern. The application for leave to file was denied with the following stipulation inserted in the decree to protect and insure the company's clear right to sue the Southern and without question, viz:

"This decree is entered on the express condition to which the complainant has assented, that it shall be without prejudice to and shall not bar the right of the Guardian Trust Company, or its receiver to plead and insist in any litigation now pending, or hereafter brought, that the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, by virtue of the manner in which it was organized, or for any other reason, is legally or equitably liable for and bound to pay the unsecured debts of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company," etc.

Now, Mr. Moore, in July, 1905, filed a supplemental bill based upon the Southern's purchase of Belt assets upon fore-1135 closure to enjoin the prosecution of the Guardian's state court cases brought to recover of the Southern upon the Belt notes which it held.

In the face of this plainly worded stipulation the injunction was deliberately issued by Judge Phillips and the same deliberately accepted by Mr. Moore for the Southern!

It appears from page 16 of the briefs filed by Mr. Mecartney in this court upon the appeal from said order, that said stipulation had been quoted at large in the answer or printed brief which had been filed before Judge Phillips, but the same was not even referred to in his opinion in said cause.

Also, that in said brief in this court said counsel of course simply printed the stipulation without argument.

This court held the injunction without merit, (1) upon the face of the record, and also (2) by reason of the stipulation, which it held controlled in any event, and this, of course, without argument or analysis. It evidently was one of those instances where a thing was too plain to admit of analysis or argument.

3. What next was done to keep the issue and all of them in the United States Court under the direction or control of Judge Phillips and before Master Douglass or involved—or buried beneath—the awful pile of evidence, or, as Mr. Mecartney calls it, "dust"?

It seems that when the state court cases were nearly reached for trial after all manner of dilatory pleas and motions had 1136 been made in the state court and the case had been finally set for trial on a specific date, Mr. Moore filed a supplemental bill by the Belt and Southern jointly (claimed by him to be independent companies) to again enjoin the state court suits.

It was sought not only to enjoin the two suits in which the Belt notes held by the Guardian were involved, but a third suit based upon the notes of the Pittsburg and Gulf Company which notes were not involved and not even mentioned in the accounting case in the Federal Court was sought to be stayed. Judge McPherson enjoined all three suits!

It is no wonder that this court held that the injunctionary order lacked not only a legal basis but also involved an abuse of discretion on the part of the hearing judge. (See G. T. Co. v. K. Cy. South. Ry. Co., 171 Fed., 43.)

It therefore apparently, if not conclusively, appears from the record alone that an abnormal wrong has been committed here—invited and the results deliberately accepted by counsel for the Belt-Southern interests.

The Trust Company was represented until Dec. 1904, by Messrs. Trimble and Braley. They were then succeeded by Mr. Harry S. Mecartney of Chicago with Mr. Jules C. Rosenberger of Kansas City as local assistant counsel. Messrs. Gates and English succeeded him in March, 1908.

They now present the case here on the present appeal 1137 and risk the entire case against the Southern upon a mere technical point of pleading whose merit is in the gravest doubt to say the least. And they decline to submit the careful and thorough opinion of the able Mr. Tichenor, a leading giant of the profession in Missouri, as well as the carefully revised and finished brief of Mr. Mecartney prepared in the service and at the expense of the Trust Company. They do not argue even in the alternative that the Southern clearly is liable for Belt debts. They not only lose the opportunity to end the old and oppressive case, but needlessly risk the entire case and the $700,000 upon two or three sentences in this court's opinion in the second injunction case!

Can this be calmly tolerated?

(To explain: The court—in the case in 171 Fed.—evidently speaking of the pleadings upon which the injunctionary order had been based, remarked that the suit in the national court did not "involve" the personal liability of the Southern. This alone is the "sheet anchor," as Mr. English remarked, of the Guardian by which it seeks to escape the plea of res adjudicata to be offered by the Southern in the coming state court trials.)

Will the court not permit the case to be saved? Incidentally it may be better for Messrs. Gates and English that the case be saved. For if there be not actionable negligence involved in the presentation of the present appeal, there is something closely approaching it.

This precarious situation the court will observe (See affidavit of Shedd) was only known to applicant stockholders some ten 1138 days or less before the case was set for argument here.

It is apparent from the volume of the record here that due diligence has been used to prepare this application. In fact, without Mr. Mecartney's aid—volunteered without compensation—it would scarcely have been possible to present it thus early.

It will also be observed that the present counsel had their danger pointed out to them some three weeks before the argument here by Mr. Mecartney; but they do not seem to have appreciated the situation and the danger.

To fully present the liability issue we have prepared a schedule analysis of the master's lengthy conclusions or report on said issue and annexed the same to the briefs presented.

It is significant that the clause in the reorganization plan upon which is based one of the two independent grounds of liability sustained in Mr. Tichenor's opinion as well as in Mr. Mecartney's brief (Point IX, pages 59 to 68) while set out in the quotations of the master from the plan (Print. Rec. 944) is not even referred to by him in his opinion, and is wholly ignored therein.

It is therefore hoped and prayed that this application for leave to file may be granted.

It is therefore clear that this entire question of liability can be presented by the consideration of one document, the essentials of which are recited in the master's report, and disposed of by making a ruling on a point purely of law.

While as shown on pages 18-20 of the "Analysis of the 1139 Master's Rulings" presented herewith, there are two grounds of liability alleged other than the two above suggested, it seems clear to us that they are untenable, for reasons stated in said analysis. Secondly, they relate to or are based upon questions of fact, as to which exceptions have not been preserved.

To anticipate all possible technical objections to this application, we call attention in advance to the exceptions filed by the Guardian to the master's report. (Printed Record 1036-9.)

After stating generally that the Trust Company "excepts to the report," etc., and that "by reason of the laches of the Southern Company," etc., the intervening petitions "should be dismissed in all their parts," etc., it excepts.

"Second: The master has in such report stated (on p. 461 thereof) as follows:

'That the Southern Company is not in any way liable for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company.' "

This was the finding upon which Paragraph VII of the decree, quoted in our petition above, was based, and relates to the same subject matter.

It is true that the exception goes on to say:

"Whereas, said finding was unnecessary and should have been omitted," etc.

The "whereases" or suggestions as to what the master should have found are properly no part of the exception.

1140 So that we say:

1. The point here urged is plainly covered by the exceptions.

2. As the master in his report recites the essentials or the "basis" of the reorganization plan, his error—as we allege it herein to have been—was a pure error of law.

And to such error, as is well known law, no exceptions are necessary.

2 Daniel Chy. Pl. & Pr., Sec. 1310.
17 Enc. Pl. & Pr., 1048.
Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co., 40 Fed. 476.
Hurd v. Goodrich, 59 Ill. 450.
Van Tobel v. Ostrander, 158 Ill. 499.
Hayes v. Hammond, 162 Ill. 133.
Von Platen v. Winterbotham, 203 Ill. 202.

It is, of course, scarcely necessary to suggest that if the court should desire, in addition to the briefs presented here, an oral argument upon the issue, the petitioners would gladly respond, and present an oral argument thereon, either separately or in conjunction with Messrs. Gates & English, as the court might direct.

We have endeavored to place this issue before the court within the narrowest possible limits.

Point I of the petition is based primarily on the narrowest issues of the appeal, all of record, with which the court has been made familiar.

Point II is likewise based upon the record and only such outside facts as are not subject to dispute; and the latter are mentioned only in order to explain the situation and to excuse the lack 1141 of earlier action on the part of the petitioning stockholders.

Respectfully submitted,

NEWELL H. CLAPP,
ENOCH J. PRICE,
For Petitioners Shedd & Law.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on June 16, 1911.

1142 (Motion of Edward A. Shedd et al. for Order upon Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. et al. to Show Cause, etc.)

And now come Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law, by Newell H. Clapp and Enoch J. Price, their counsel, and move the court to grant a rule on appellees, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company and Cambria Steel Company, as well as upon appellant, Guardian Trust Company, to show cause why they should not be allowed to file additional briefs herein on behalf of the appellant, Guardian Trust Company, as is prayed for in their petition this day presented.

NEWELL H. CLAPP,
ENOCH J. PRICE,
Counsel for Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on June 16, 1911.

(Order to Show Cause Why Motion to File Additional Briefs Should Not Be Granted, etc.)

May Term, 1911.

FRIDAY, June 16, 1911.

Edward A. Shedd, Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law having this day filed their petition in writing for leave to file additional arguments on behalf of the appellant Guardian Trust Company in the above entitled cause and their written motion to the same effect, it is hereby Ordered that the appellees, Kansas City Southern Railway Company and Cambria Steel Company, and appellant Guardian Trust Company show cause before this Court at its chambers in the City of St. Paul on the 21st day of June A. D. 1911 at ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day why the prayer of said petitioners and their said motion should not be granted and said petitioners be given leave to file and have considered the additional brief, arguments and other documents in said petition referred to.

Let a copy of this order and of said petition and motion be served upon the solicitors for appellant Guardian Trust Company and for appellees Kansas City Southern Railway Company and Cambria Steel Company on or before the 17th day of June A. D. 1911.

Dated June 16th, 1911.

(Signed) WALTER H. SANBORN,
Circuit Judge.

1143 (Proof of Service of Notice of Hearing on Petition of Shedd et al. for Leave to File Additional Briefs.)

Notice.

To Frank Hagerman, Esq., Counsel for Cambria Steel Company;
To Samuel W. Moore and Samuel Untermyer, Esquires, Counsel for Kansas City Southern Railway Company et al., Appellees; and To George H. English and Edward P. Gates, Esquires, Counsel for Guardian Trust Company:

You and each of you are hereby notified that on Friday the 16th day of June A. D. 1911, the said Court of Appeals in and for the Eighth Circuit entered a rule in the above entitled cause upon the Cambria Steel Company, the Kansas City Southern Railway Company and the Guardian Trust Company, to show cause on or before the 21st day of June A. D. 1911, at ten o'clock A. M. why Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law should not have leave to file additional briefs in said cause upon the part of the appellant, Guardian Trust Company, as prayed for in their petition presented to the court on said day; with a copy of which rule and petition and affidavits and suggestions in support thereof, as well as with a copy of the said briefs proposed to be filed, you are herewith served.

Dated, June 16, 1911.

NEWELL H. CLAPP,
406 National German American
Bank Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.
ENOCH J. PRICE,
No. 9 South La Salle St., Chicago, Illinois,
Counsel for said Petitioners Shedd and Law.

1144 (MEMO. OF CLERK—Here follows a copy of the Motion of Edward A. Shedd, et al. for an Order upon the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, et al. to show cause, etc., filed June 16, 1911, and a copy of the order of said Circuit Court of Appeals of June 16, 1911, to show Cause why the Motion of Shedd, et al. to file Additional Briefs should not be granted, which said motion and order are omitted for the reason that copies thereof have heretofore been included in this transcript.)

Proof of Service.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
County of Jackson, ss:

On this 17th day of June A. D. 1911, personally appeared before the undersigned David A. Murphy a Notary Public in and for said county and state, Charles M. Bush, Esq., who being by me first duly sworn on his oath deposeth and saith:

That on the 17th day of June A. D. 1911, at the city of Kansas City in the state of Missouri, he served a duplicate copy of the petition of Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law, motion, notice of entry of rule to show cause, and rule to show cause, copies of each of which are hereto annexed as well as a copy of the additional briefs proposed to be filed which are mentioned in said notice, upon the following named persons and in the manner following, that is to say:

Upon Frank Hagerman, counsel for the above named appellee Cambria Steel Co. by handing a copy of said petition, motion, notice of entry of rule to show cause and rule to show cause and additional briefs to said Frank Hagerman in Kansas City, Jackson County, Missouri.

Upon Samuel W. Moore, counsel for appellees Kansas City Southern Railway Company, et al. by handing a copy of said petition, motion, notice of entry of rule to show cause, additional 1145 briefs and rule to show cause to said Samuel W. Moore in Kansas City, Jackson County, Missouri.

And upon George H. English and Edward P. Gates of counsel for appellant Guardian Trust Company by delivering a copy of said petition, motion, notice of entry of rule to show cause, additional briefs and rule to show cause to S. E. Skelley, he being in charge of the office of said English and Gates at 1003 Scarritt Building, Kansas City, Missouri; they being absent from Kansas City, Jackson County, Missouri.

Further deponent saith not.

[SEAL.] CHAS. M. BUSH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of June A. D. 1911.

DAVID A. MURPHY,
Notary Public, Jackson County, Missouri.

My commission expires June 5th, 1915.

(MEMO. OF CLERK.—Attached to this Proof of Service of Notice of Hearing on Petition of Shedd, et al. for Leave to File Additional Briefs is a copy of the Petition of Shedd, et al. for Leave to File Additional Briefs, Filed June 16, 1911, which is omitted here for the reason that a copy of same has heretofore been included in this transcript.)

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on June 20, 1911.

(Return of Guardian Trust Co. upon Rule to Show Cause, etc.)

Comes now Guardian Trust Company, Appellant above named, and for its return and answer to the rule and order heretofore made upon the 16th day of June, 1911, by the Honorable Walter H. Sanborn, Judge of this Court, says:

I.

That by reason of the former decision of this Court, and by reason of the state of the pleadings and record in the cause from which this appeal is taken, the question of the personal liability of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company for the debt of the Belt Company, is not in issue and can not be determined upon this ap-1146 peal. Since said issue is the only subject discussed in said briefs proposed to be filed by said petitioners, this appellant is of the opinion, that neither said briefs, nor any argument upon said issue, would be a proper matter to be sumitted to this Court.

II.

Said petitioners are not parties to the record of this cause.

EDWARD P. GATES &
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U S. Circuit Court of Appeals on June 21, 1911.

(Order of Submission of Petition of Shedd et al. for Leave to File Additional Briefs in Cause No. 3490.)

May Term, 1911.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, 1911.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

This cause came on to be heard upon the petition of Edward A. Shedd, et al., for leave to file additional briefs in this cause, with affidavits and suggestions in support thereof, and upon the return by the Guardian Trust Company to the rule to show cause heretofore issued and served upon it.

Thereupon, the said petition of Edward A. Shedd, et al., for leave to file additional briefs in this cause, was argued by Mr. Newel H. Clapp in behalf of petitioners in support of said petition, and by Mr. Edward P. Gates and Mr. George H. English, Jr., in behalf of the Guardian Trust Company, and by Mr. Samuel W. Moore, in behalf of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, in opposition thereto.

Whereupon, the said petition of Shedd, et al., was submitted to the Court and by the Court taken under advisement.

1147 (Order That Cases Stand for Further Hearing upon Additional Briefs of Parties to be Filed.)

May Term, 1911.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, 1911.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

and

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

In the above entitled cases upon the motion of the Guardian Trust Company for leave to file additional briefs, it is now here ordered by the Court that these cases be set down for further hearing before this Court, upon additional briefs of the parties to be filed herein, on or before the first day of December, 1911.

(Motion of Guardian Trust Co. for Leave to File Additional Briefs, etc.)

Comes now the Guardian Trust Company, and shows to the Court, that heretofore, to-wit, on the 21st day of June, 1911, oral application was made by this appellant to the Judges of this Court in Chambers, for leave to file additional briefs in the above entitled causes, particularly upon two points, namely:

1. Whether or not this Court could, upon the record, consider the question of the correctness of the findings of the Master and the Circuit Court, in respect to the liability of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company for the debts of the Belt; and

2. Upon the merits of said issue, if the Court should be of the opinion that the merits of said issue is a matter properly cognizable by this Court.

That by the agreement of the parties hereto, made in Chambers in the presence of said Judges of this Court on said day, such 1148 application or the filing of said briefs should not be deemed to conclude or affect this Appellant in respect to its contention that the ruling of this Court in these causes could not be readjudicated upon the State Court causes mentioned and described in the record herein, and further, that this application and the filing of said briefs should have no effect upon said State Court causes, save and except that appellant agreed to consent that said Court Causes might be passed from term to term during the pendency of this matter, and until this Court should have reached a decision thereon.

Said oral application was by said Judges granted upon the consent of the parties and under the agreements aforesaid, with the understanding that this Appellant should, within ten days, file formal written application for said leave, setting forth the above facts.

Now therefore, for the reasons and upon the agreements above mentioned, this Appellant, Guardian Trust Company, prays leave of Court to prepare and submit to the Court, additional briefs in these causes, on or before the 1st day of November, 1911, and to prepare and submit to this Court, reply briefs to any briefs which may be filed herein by the Appellees, on or before the 1st day of December, 1911.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
By EDWARD P. GATES &
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Its Solicitors.

Copy of above application received this June 30, 1911.
FRANK HAGERMAN.

Copy of the above application received this June 30, 1911. Appellee by this acceptance of service does not admit the alleged agreement set forth in the application.

S. W. MOORE,
For the Kansas City So. Ry. Co.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on July 1, 1911.

1149 In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Petition of Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law for Leave to File Suggestions as to Final Judgment Herein.

And now come Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law and show to the court that they are stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company, said Shedd and Shedd having $66,700 par value and said Law having $15,000 par value of said stock, the total outstanding stock of the trust company being about $2,200,000, the stockholders being over 300 in number and widely scattered. Said company has been in liquidation for over eight years last past.

1150 They hereby petition for leave to file:

1. Additional assignments of error herein on behalf of the Trust Company, as follows:

"IV. The said finding of non-liability on the part of said Kansas City Southern Railway Company to pay the debts of the said Belt Company was and is erroneous."

2. Certified copy of the reorganization plan and depositors' agreement of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company; and,

3. Suggestions in support of this petition to the effect that, in case this court finds said Southern Company liable to the Trust Company for the claims which the latter has established against the Belt Company, this court embody in its judgment herein a direction for a final judgment in the Circuit Court against said Southern Company.

Their petition is based upon the following grounds:

1. The appeal of the Guardian Trust Company from said decree contained—Par. "VII" thereof—a finding that the Southern Company was not liable for Belt Company debts.

At the instance of these petitioning stockholders and upon their representation that the claim of the Trust Company against the Southern Company was apt to be lost by failure of its counsel, Messrs. Gates and English, to argue the merits of this finding, this court granted the latter counsel leave to file additional briefs upon such issue.

Nevertheless, while they have filed such briefs, said counsel

1151 for the Trust Company—notwithstanding this court's announcement that such issue was properly in the cause—have declined to ask this court for a final judgment in case the Guardian's claim shall be sustained. This course can only result in prolonging a litigation already abnormally long and oppressive, with no benefit to any one so far as can be perceived.

2. This matter involves a claim now amounting to well above $725,000, independently of the Guardian's claim to the Central Improvement Company collateral; and such collateral may also be saved solely by having a favorable adjudication upon such liability issue. It represents a loss or gain to these stockholders alone of above $25,000.

3. This record—by far the longest ever made in the history of the known world—was made at the real instance of and supported only by the means of the Southern Company—and furthermore, has been made upon a thoroughly bad bill of complaint.

(See master's report, P. R. 742, where thirteen "controlling facts" are found "to appear on the face of the bill or are practically undisputed in the proofs.")

The Trust Company has been held out of its large debt by being forced into court and kept in court by a colossal yet useless "accounting" with the defunct Belt Company, the predecessor of the Southern. And this great wrong has been largely perpetuated by means of several injunctions issued against the prosecution of the state court cases (common law cases based upon such claim 1152 of liability), and both of which were held by this court to be absolutely without merit.

146 Fed. 337.
171 Fed. 43.

It would be painfully wrong to the stockholders of the Trust Company, to the court as an instrument of justice, and to the cause of justice itself, that the object of the Southern Company or its counsel should be further served by the determination of the Trust Company's counsel not to ask for a final judgment herein so as to end what has been practically found to have been scarcely less than a farce.

A photo of this huge record may aid in taking in the significance of the situation and one taken several years ago is annexed to this pamphlet.

4. There can be no good object in having this court find merely that the decree of the court below was erroneous on this issue, and still having it withhold a final judgment in the cause, after eleven and a half years of useless litigation.

The court granted leave to the counsel to reopen their case upon the very ground that they had allowed themselves to be foreclosed on this liability issue, and in effect that if the finding in the decree should not be attacked it would be res adjudicata of the issue, and this large claim would thus be lost to the stockholders. The counsel seem now to persist in their attitude that such issue is not in the case. They decline to file the additional assignment of errors, and merely invite the court to "notice a plain error" in their behalf—the correction of which they even refuse to formally ask for, 1153 to say nothing of their not accepting the wide-open opportunity to end the oppressive case.

5. While the master has recited the essential provisions of the complete reorganization plan, it is thought best to have it presented in its entirety. As this issue has been ordered to be argued it is probably the place of the Southern's counsel to bring up any omitted parts which he thinks material. Nevertheless to save any quibbling upon the question we think the plan complete should be filed.

(Messrs. Gates and English have printed a complete copy of this plan as an appendix to their Reply lately filed but have declined to file the original certified copy.

In support of this application petitioners present brief affidavits of Harry S. Mecartney and Enoch J. Price, Esqs., and also printed copies of their former petition filed in June, 1911, which resulted in the reopening of the case for the purpose of argument upon this vital issue.

6. Petitioners suggest that the application here made is only in aid of the court's doing ultimate and complete justice in the case, and as to what should be the form of the final order herein. Hence it is believed that the same are properly presented at any time before the final order has been entered; and that the court would not decline sincere and appropriate suggestions to that end. Nevertheless they present herewith such affidavits to show that this application and brief have been reasonably early and seasonably made under the circumstances.

Wherefore, petitioners pray that leave be given them to file 1154 (1) additional assignment of error as above; (2), a certified copy of the reorganization plan and the agreement prefixed thereto, and (3) the suggestions hereto annexed; and that in case this court finds that the Southern Company is liable for the Belt Company debts, a final judgment may be entered herein directing the lower court, upon the application of the Trust Company, to enter a decree against the Southern Company for the total amount of the decree formally entered against the Belt Company, with interest and costs.

And petitioners will ever pray, etc.

EDWARD A. SHEDD,
CHARLES B. SHEDD,
ROBERT H. LAW,
By NEWEL H. CLAPP AND
ENOCH J. PRICE,
Their Counsel.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
County of Cook, ss:

HARRY S. MECARTNEY, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was formerly counsel for the Guardian Trust Company, as appears from the records herein. That during last November he learned that counsel for the Trust Company were hesitating about insisting in this cause that this court, in case it should sustain the claims of the Trust Company against the Southern Company, direct a judgment in the lower court, in substance as set forth in the petition prefixed hereto. That thereupon at considerable labor, covering a total of several weeks of time, he corresponded with D. J. Haff, Esq., of Kansas City, Missouri—retained last fall as special counsel 1155 to aid Messrs. Gates and English in the matter of this appeal and as affiant understood the leading counsel in the case and made several brief for his consideration with a view to persuading him of the feasibility and propriety of having such judgment or final direction for a judgment entered herein.

That early in December affiant learned that such counsel had finally concluded to make no such formal request until the oral argument in the case or until this court might indicate of its own accord that it might give such relief to the Trust Company. That affiant about the middle of December last learned that there was to be no oral argument in the case. He thereupon reported the same to Messrs. Clapp and Price, attorneys for the petitioners herein; and said Clapp thereupon and about December 15th last, wrote Messrs. Gates and English to send him the certified copy of the reorganization plan and agreement of the Southern Company (which said Clapp had sent them for the purpose of having the same filed herein); but such copy was not received by him until about December 26th last. Affiant received the same from said Clapp on December 27th last. That since said time he has been in consultation with E. J. Price, Esq., one of said counsel, with a view to aiding him in preparing suggestions in support of the petition herewith filed; but affiant has been for four weeks since said date almost continuously in court attending upon two long jury trials, and has only within the last three weeks been able to aid such counsel in the preparation of the same.

HARRY S. MECARTNEY.

1156 Subscribed and sworn to before me this 17th day of February, A. D. 1912.

[Notarial Seal, Cook Co., Ills.]

EVERETT M. SWAIN,
Notary Public.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
County of Cook, ss:

Enoch J. Price, being duly sworn according to law, doth depose and say: That he is one of the two counsel for the petitioners Messrs. Shedd and Law in this cause who are stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company as set forth in the above petition; that several days before the first of January, 1912, when he was apprised of the final determination of the counsel in this case not to file the certified copy of the reorganization plan which had been furnished them for that purpose or to make an application for a final judgment against the Southern Company in this cause he conferred with Harry S. Mecartney, Esq., former counsel for the Trust Company, with a view to having him aid in preparing this petition and suggestions in support thereof.

That on account of the fact that the record herein is immense in proportions and that said Mecartney was entirely familiar with it and all the complex issues in the case and had also assisted in preparing the former petition of the stockholders herein, and on account of the fact that said Mecartney was perfectly willing to do all in his power to further the cause of the Trust Company herein affiant deemed it both wise and economical to rely largely upon the 1157 aid of said Mecartney in preparing such application and brief. That by reason thereof such work of preparation was delayed several weeks on account of the inexorable court engagements of said Mecartney. That it was further delayed for about one week's time by the fact that Mr. A. E. Macartney, Esq., the partner of Mr. Clapp, died suddenly about the 6th inst. and his said colleague Mr. Clapp was unable to consider and revise the papers on account thereof and the same were only received back from said Clapp upon the 15th instant.

Affiant says that had he and his said colleague alone prepared these papers independently of and without the aid of Mr. Mecartney they could have been prepared and presented to this court but little sooner than they have actually been.

ENOCH J. PRICE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 16th day of February, A. D. 1912.

[Notarial Seal, Cook Co., Ills.]

B. H. MONTGOMERY,
Notary Public.

1158 Suggestions in Support of Foregoing Application.

The undersigned counsel on behalf of the above named stockholders of the Guardian Trust Company again feel constrained to make application to this court touching the disposition of the appeal of said company in this case.

For failure of counsel for the Trust Company to argue the real merits of the main controversy between it and the Southern Company, viz: the liability of the Southern for Belt debts, these stockholders filed a petition last June for leave to file additional briefs. Their only claim in such behalf had been that such issue—raised by the Trust Company itself in its answer to the intervening petition—was not properly in the case and that the special finding of master and lower court of non-liability on the part of the Southern was unnecessary to a decision of the case and for this reason alone, erroneous.

While agreeing that the decision upon the merits was wrong, we disagreed with the counsel that it was not germane to the issues; and fearing a judgment here against the Trust Company which would be pleaded as res judicata in the state court suits, we filed a petition for leave to assign additional errors upon such issue, and to submit the briefs therein prepared by Mr. Mecartney, former counsel for the Trust Company, and one prepared by C. O. Tichenor, Esq., of Kansas City.

1159 A rule was issued upon counsel for both the Southern and Trust Companies to show cause why leave should not be granted.

Upon the hearing of the rule, Messrs. Gates and English—as well as Mr. Moore—opposed the same and announced their confidence in their position, and that they preferred to reserve the issue of the Southern's liability for trial in the three state court cases.

This court—through Mr. Justice Sanborn—then announced that the justices had unanimously reached the tentative conclusion that that issue had been necessarily involved in the case below and therefore had been properly—though not necessarily correctly—passed upon by master and court. That although it was rare for the court to make such an announcement prior to filing its written opinion, nevertheless in the peculiar circumstances the justices "felt it their duty" to make it, "because if we withheld it from you" (Messrs. Gates and English) "it may be that we would deprive you of some opportunities that you may desire to take advantage of."

Immediately upon such announcement Messrs. Gates and English made application for leave to argue the merits of the liability issue. Said Judge Gates on behalf of the Guardian Trust Company, "We should be glad if we could present a brief upon that point."

Thereupon the counsel for Shedd and Law did not press their appeal for leave to file their own briefs, but stated that in view of such application they had no desire to inject their own briefs
1160 into the case; and that "all we are asking is that all that can be said upon the proposition and all the authorities that there are to sustain the position of the Trust Company may be presented to the court. We would just as lief it should be presented under the signature of Gates and English and anybody else."

Messrs Gates and English then courteously said they would willingly submit their draft of brief to the undersigned counsel for petitioners for suggestions.

It was agreed that briefs would be exchanged by counsel for the Trust and Southern Companies November 1st, and any replies by December 1st last.

The court thereupon entered an order that the cause be re-taken upon briefs to be filed by December 1st last.

The briefs were exchanged and a reply submitted by Messrs. Gates and English, and an additional reply by D. J. Haff, Esquire, of Kansas City.

Messrs. Gates and English did, as per their agreement, submit to the undersigned counsel their first or typewritten draft of brief upon such additional issue of liability of the Southern and the latter made certain suggestions which were in part adopted by them.

We also sent them the original documents presented with our application last June, to which was attached the certified copy of the plan upon the assumption that they would desire to file the same and ask for a final judgment herein. On November 19th one of 1161 the undersigned counsel received a letter from them that they were yet undecided as to whether they would use the certified copy of the reorganization plan and desired to retain it a little longer. Learning about December 15th that they did not intend to use the same, we wrote requesting its return, and it was returned to us several days before the first of the year.

In the former application of these petitioners leave was asked (p. 19) to formally assign additional error as follows:

"IV. The said finding of non-liability on the part of said Kansas City Southern Railway Company to pay the debts of the said Belt Company was and is erroneous."

Leave was also asked to file a certified copy of the reorganization plan.

In the "Supplemental Brief" of Messrs. Untermyer and Moore upon this liability issue it was assumed that Messrs. Gates and English would argue for leave to file additional and specific assignments of error upon such issue in substance like the one presented with the petition of Shedd and Law. (Supplt. Brief, p. 5.)

In the "Reply" of Messrs. Gates and English, pp. 1 and 2, it is said that they had not made such application and in substance that they meant to rely upon the court to "consider the question"—of liability, etc.—"in the present state of the record without additional assignment of error"—as it was claimed the court had power to do, and correctly, as we agree.

A complete copy of the reorganization plan was printed as an appendix to the reply.

1162 It was then perceived that apparently Messrs. Gates and English did not mean to entirely yield to the new situation and that they were merely going to invite this court to notice upon their behalf, a $700,000 error, and also refrain from asking for a final judgment for the money—or a final direction for one; although this court had before it the one document from which the issue of liability sprung, and had entire jurisdiction of the issue.

In other words, the court's proffer of mercy or amnesty to the Trust Company is being thrown back into its face, with the suggestion that all that counsel care to accept from the court upon its own invitation is an order setting aside the objectionable finding and without the resultant judgment in their favor!

The court is formally invited to give its opinion upon an issue which evidently counsel still claim is not properly in the case; but they desire the finding of the lower court set aside in order that they "may not be embarrassed"—as they asserted upon the oral argument—by the claim of Mr. Moore that it is res judicata.

This presents to us a situation which is unique in the history of court practice and almost impossible of explanation.

The only suggestions that occur to us as rational are, first, that possibly the ruling of this court and the ultimate disposal of the case here would involve a confession of error upon the part of Messrs. Gates and English as to their having omitted in the first instance an attack upon the merit of this finding—which they are not yet ready to make.

1163 Second, the only other explanation possible is suggested by the fact that upon resisting the application of these petitioners last June, Messrs. Gates and English (as per stenographic report) announced to your Honors that before electing to omit any challenge of Judge Phillips' finding upon this liability issue they had submitted the question to the executive committee of the Trust Company and had obtained its approval of their plan of briefing the case. They also stated that after they had received notice of the application of these petitioners for leave to file additional briefs upon this liability issue, they had re-submitted the matter to that portion of such executive committee resident in Kansas City (Mr. Prescott, the liquidator of the Trust Company, and two others), and they had ordered that the application be resisted.

Although this fact might well serve to transfer the responsibility of the case from Messrs. Gates and English to the executive committee, or such portion of it as had given directions to them as to the argument of the case, and might thus well excuse their neglect to argue the real merits of the case, it does not explain their present declination to ask this court to end the matter, nor their insistence upon having the issue drag its course through the state court and possibly through the State Supreme Court—three years behind its call—and this at the cost of imperiling the issue in this cause by inviting the court to force upon them a final ruling or decree in their favor, for which they decline to ask!

For our part, we can see no benefit in such a course to anybody, except such as would ordinarily flow from keeping the Trust 1164 Company in further and prolonged liquidation.

In view of the facts shown in the affidavits presented in our former petition and the references to the record in the latter, we do submit that the stockholders of this Trust Company should not have this final issue held open longer. That if the Southern Company—whose resources have sustained its counsel in making this colossal record upon a bill found by the master to be bad upon its face for a half dozen reasons, and also further barred by a half dozen conceded and undeniable or "undisputed" facts—is liable for this big Belt debt, it is time for it to be finally adjudged so to be in a case where that specific issue has been brought into the case by the Trust Company itself and rests upon the construction of but one document.

It seems needless to add that if we had had any intimation at the hearing in chambers at St. Paul last June that Messrs. Gates and English had not meant to apply for leave to file the additional assignments of error and to ask for the fullest judgment they could get herein, or to temporize with the situation and with the court's leniency, we would not have so promptly waived insistence upon our application for leave to do so.

And as it was through our efforts that the issue has been saved it would seem that it is not inappropriate for us to insist that it be now disposed of.

We gather that the chief objections of Messrs. Gates & English to making formal assignments of error on this issue and presenting an application for a final judgment herein are two 1165 (which we try to anticipate in advance):

1st. That because no cross-bill was filed by the Trust Company based upon this issue, or because no affirmative relief was prayed by it in respect thereto, therefore such issue is not res judicata on this record and hence any adjudication of this issue in favor of the Trust Company would merely be "persuasive" evidence in the State Court Cases and not conclusive.

2nd. That if this court should hold that for lack of proper exceptions it could not review this finding, such action of the Trust Company in formally assigning error might tend to preclude it from claiming in the State Court Cases that the present finding of the master and court is not res judicata.

The idea that an issue set up merely in defense can never be held to be adjudicated even when a special finding thereon has been made, will certainly strike this court as novel indeed. And if this court should overrule this finding and award a judgment in favor of the Trust Company against the Southern, it certainly will satisfy the stockholders of the Trust Company and it ought to satisfy their counsel. It is what they have been fighting for—and we know of nothing else.

As to the second point, it would seem that counsel made their election as to this point last June. The counsel had submitted their case upon the risk that the liability issue was not in the case.

The court graciously warned them that it thought it was. They then elected to proceed upon the basis that it was.

1166 They certainly are not doing so by asking the court to elect whether it will treat each issue as in or out of the case.

This temporizing with the situation is not fair to the court or the Trust Company and its stockholders.

While it would be perfectly just for this court to rebuke them with directing a judgment in favor of the Trust Company, stockholders of the latter accurately advised of the situation naturally feel that there should be some one to make the formal request or to stand as sponsor for the judgment if granted.

We assume, too, that counsel are well advised of the uniform rule that where jurisdiction is invoked of a court and denied by the court, the action has no force whatever as res judicata of the subject matter.

The annexed brief is here submitted to meet all possible objections to the course proposed and to prove:

1. That the issue of the Southern's liabilitiy being in the case, it is of course competent for the court upon reversing to direct a decree against the Southern upon a formal amendment of the answer of the Trust Company to its intervening petition praying for such decree.

2. There is no rule of "laches" barring the Trust Company from such relief.

3. No further pleadings or amendments of the Southern Company should be allowed in such case.

4. The finding herein as to the liability of the Southern will be res judicata of such issue; and hence there is no reason why an end should not be made of the entire issue and final relief awarded herein.

* * * * * * *

1167 (Here follows a brief in support of the foregoing Petition for leave to file Suggestions as to Final Decree.)

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on February 19, 1912.

1168 (Order for Notice to Counsel and Fixing Time for Filing Briefs, etc., on Petition of Shedd et al.)

December Term, 1911.

MONDAY, February 19, 1912.

On reading the petition of Edward A. Shedd, and others presented this day,

It is hereby ordered, that copies of this petition and accompanying papers be served upon other counsel in the case as soon as convenient, that any other counsel in the case may, if they so desire, answer the petition and present affidavits concerning the same in writing or in print at any time within fifteen (15) days, and that the petitioners may reply in the same manner within ten (10) days thereafter when the matter will be submitted to the Court.

St. Louis, Missouri, February 19, 1912.

(Signed) WALTER H. SANBORN,
Circuit Judge.

(Proof of Service of Order of February 19, 1912, as to Filing of Briefs, etc.)

Affidavit of Mailing.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
County of Cook, ss:

B. H. Montgomery being duly sworn deposes and says that he is an office associate with Enoch J. Price, and at the instance of said Enoch J. Price mailed to Samuel Untermyer, 37 Wall St., New York, attorney for the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, on February 21, 1912, postage prepaid, a copy of the Petition of Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law for leave to file Suggestions, which petition was filed at the office of the clerk of said Court of Appeals at St. Louis on February 19, 1912.

B. H. MONTGOMERY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23rd day of February A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.] EVERETT M. SWAIN,
Notary Public.

Notice.

To Frank Hagerman, Esq., Counsel for Cambria Steel Company:
To Samuel W. Moore and Samuel Untermeyer, Esquires, Counsel for Kansas City Southern Railway Company et al., Appellees; and To D. J. Haff, George H. English and Edward P. Gates, Esquires, Counsel for Guardian Trust Company:

1169 You and each of you are hereby notified that on Monday, the 19th day of February A. D. 1912, the said Circuit Court of Appeals in and for the Eighth Circuit, sitting at St. Louis, entered a rule in the above entitled cause upon the petition of Edward A. Shedd and others that day presented, with a copy of which rule you are herewith served.

There is also served on you herewith a copy of said petition referred to in said rule. You are also served with a copy of the petition of said Shedd and others which was filed in said cause at St. Paul on June 16, 1911, and upon which a hearing was heretofore had; copies of said last mentioned document having been presented to said court along with the first mentioned petition.

Dated, February 20, 1912.

NEWEL H. CLAPP,
406 German American Bank Bldg., St. Paul, Minnesota.
ENOCH J. PRICE,
No. 9 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Illinois,
Counsel for said Petitioners Shedd and Law.

Proof of Service.

STATE OF MISSOURI,
County of Jackson, ss:

Charles M. Bush being duly sworn deposes and says that he is by occupation an attorney at law resident in and practicing law at Kansas City, in Jackson County, Missouri.

Affiant further states that on the 21st day of February A. D. 1912, he served true copies of the above and foregoing notice and of the annexed rule or order of court entered in said cause on February 19, 1912, and also true copies of the two printed petitions hereto annexed, upon the following counsel in said cause, viz.:

On Frank Hagerman, Esq., by leaving true copies of said documents with him personally in said county;

On Samuel W. Moore, Esq., by leaving true copies of said documents with F. H. Moore, Assistant General Solicitor of Kansas City Southern Railway Co., Assistant to Samuel W. Moore and in charge of his office, said Moore being absent from Kansas City, Mo.;

1170 On D. J. Haff, Esq., by leaving true copies of said documents with W. C. Michaels, Office partner of D. J. Haff and in charge of his office, said Haff being absent from Kansas City, Mo.;

On George H. English and Edward P. Gates, Esquires, by leaving true copies of said documents with said Edward P. Gates personally in said county.

And further affiant saith not.

CHAS. M. BUSH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of February A. D. 1912.

[SEAL.] MABEL C. TRUSSLER,
Notary Public.

My commission expires August 11, 1915.

(MEMO. OF CLERK.—Attached to the foregoing Proof of Service is a copy of the order of said Circuit Court of Appeals of February 19, 1912, for notice to counsel and fixing time for filing briefs, etc., and also a copy of the petition of Shedd, et al., for leave to file Suggestions as to Final Decree, filed February 19, 1912, and also a copy of the petition of Shedd, et al., for leave to file additional Briefs, filed June 16, 1911, which said copies so attached are omitted here for the reason that copies of same have heretofore been included in this transcript.)

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Feb. 22, 1912.

Order of Submission of Petition of Shedd et al., for Leave to File Suggestions as to Decree.)

December Term, 1911.

SATURDAY, March 16, 1912.

An order having been entered on the 19th day of February, 1912, in the above entitled causes, granting counsel for appellants and appellees fifteen days within which to answer the Petition of Edward A. Shedd, et al., for leave to file suggestions as to the final decree herein, and permitting the filing of briefs thereon within the same period, and allowing petitioners to reply within ten days thereafter, and it now being made to appear to this Court that neither an answer nor briefs have been filed, It is now here ordered that said petition of Edward A. Shedd, et al., for leave to file suggestions as to the final decree, be, and the same is hereby, submitted to Judges Sanborn, Marshall and Wm. H. Munger before whom the original appeals were argued and submitted.

March 16, 1912.

1171 (Opinion, Filed October 22, 1912.)

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, September Term, A. D. 1912.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appellants,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Appeals from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

Mr. George H. English, Jr., and Mr. Edward P. Gates (Mr. D. J. Haff and Mr. E. C. Meservey on brief), for appellants.
Mr. Frank Hagerman, for Cambria Steel Company.
Mr. Samuel Untermyer and Mr. Samuel W. Moore, for Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

Before Sanborn, Circuit Judge, and Marshall and Wm. H. Munger, District Judges.

WM. H. MUNGER, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court.

While the parties to these controversies are numerous, the questions involved upon the appeal require consideration only of acts of the following named companies, to-wit: The Cambria Steel Company, which, for convenience, will herein be designated Cambria Company; Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, herein called Gulf Company; Port Arthur Channel & Dock Com-1172 pany, herein called the Dock Company; Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, herein called the Belt Company; Kansas City Southern Railway Company, herein called the Southern Company; Guardian Trust Company, herein called the Trust Company; The Provident Life & Trust Company, herein called Provident Company.

The Gulf Company was a railroad extending from Kansas City to Port Arthur on the Gulf of Mexico; the Dock Company was a local company having terminal facilities at Port Arthur; the Belt Company was a belt line railroad having terminal facilities at Kansas City, Missouri. Each of these companies had outstanding bonds secured by mortgages upon its properties. The Cambria Company was a judgment creditor of the Belt Company. The Trust Company owned a large amount of the stock and bonds of both the Gulf Company and the Belt Company and was also a creditor of the Belt Company. The Gulf Company, having defaulted in the payment of interest upon its mortgage, a suit for foreclosure was instituted, and a committee of bondholders was selected to originate and propose a reorganization plan. This committee proposed a plan of reorganization by which the properties of the Gulf Company, the Dock Company and the Belt Company should be acquired and organized into or operated as a single new company. This committee formulated a plan of reorganization, by the terms of which it was proposed that a new company be organized to acquire the properties of the three mentioned companies. Their plan was published and submitted to the bond and stockholders of each of the companies, the committee declaring that it had formulated and adopted said plan as the basis of the reorganization of the railroad system, having for its ultimate purpose the unification of the main line and terminals into one ownership and under one management; that such object was sought to be accomplished by having the Gulf Company, when reorganized, acquire the capital stock of the other two companies, namely, the Dock Company and the Belt Company, and having thus acquired the control and possession, to thereafter adjust the bonded indebtedness standing against the properties of the Belt Company and Dock Company by retiring the existing bonds, and issuing therefor new bonds, the basis of the plan being that the property of the existing Gulf Company should be sold in the foreclosure proceeding, purchased by the committee, and a successor company organized, to which the property so purchased should be conveyed, together with the stock and bonds of the Dock Company and the Belt Company. If sufficient of the stock and bonds of those companies should be deposited with the committee, in exchange for bonds and stock of the new company to be organized, then those properties to be acquired. By that plan it was said the following results would be obtained: the new company to be organized would own the property of the Gulf Company and also the bonds 1173 and capital stock of the Belt and Dock Companies, and thereby all three properties would be under one corporate ownership, management and control. Said stock and bonds so purchased of the Belt and Dock Companies to be pledged under the mortgage to be given by the company to be organized for the payment of (1) floating debts and existing car trust obligations; (2) adequate provision for working capital for future acquirements. It was also stated that it was contemplated that said reorganized or new company should issue $30,000,000 fifty-year three per cent gold bonds, $18,000,000 of the bonds to be used for the conversion of the bonds of the Gulf Company, $1,330,000 for the conversion of the old or existing bonds of the Belt Company, $817,500 new bonds for the old or existing bonds of the Dock Company, $3,000,000 of the new bonds to be sold for the necessary cash requirements of the new company, $3,802,500 to be reserved for the future requirements of the new company, $3,050,000 of new bonds to be used in acquiring existing outstanding bonds of some other companies that were subsidiary companies of the Belt Company.

It was proposed in the plan that the holders of securities of the Gulf Company were to receive for their bonds seventy-five per cent in new bonds and fifty per cent in new preferred stock; the stockholders of the Gulf Company, upon paying $10.00 per share, were to receive one share of new common stock for each share of the old stock.

The bondholders of the Dock Company were to receive for their to receive 133 per cent of new bonds and 25 per cent in new preferred stock; the stockholders of the Belt Company were to receive for each share one-quarter of a share of new preferred stock and three-quarters of a share of new common stock.

The bondholders of the Dock Company were to receive for their old bonds fifty per cent in new bonds, fifty per cent in new preferred stock, and fifty per cent in new common stock; the stockholders of the Dock Company, for each share of their stock, were to receive three-quarters of one share of new common stock.

The stock and securities of the respective companies were largely deposited according to the committee's plan. A decree was entered in the foreclosure against the Gulf Company on February 5, 1900, sale had and the property thereunder acquired by the Southern Company on March 19, 1900, the date on which it was organized and incorporated.

The Southern Company issued a new mortgage and bonds, also its stock, according to the terms of the reorganization plan, and such bonds and stock were exchanged for the bonds and stock of the old companies, the holders of which had deposited their bonds and stock in accordance with the proposed plan. The Trust Company 1174 accepted the plan and deposited its stock and bonds which it held of the Belt Company and received in new bonds and stock its proportionate amount under the reorganization agreement.

Although the Southern Company had acquired practically all of the bonds and stock of the Belt Company in exchange for its new bonds and stock, in accordance with the reorganization plan and agreement, and acquired possession and control of the property of the Belt Company, the Provident Company, Trustee in the Belt mortgage, filed its bill of foreclosure and asked for the appointment of receivers. The Master's finding in this regard was as follows: "On September 6, 1900, nearly six months after the incorporation of the Southern Company, the receivers were appointed for the Belt Company, at the instance of the Southern, and through the Provident Company, as Trustee, which filed the foreclosure bill; the foreclosure decree being made on November 6th, 1901, and the sale on December 31, 1901, to the Southern Company." The Trust Company was a party to that foreclosure suit and before the decree was entered asked leave to file an amended supplemental answer, stating in effect that the reorganization plan had been promulgated in the interests of creditors of the Belt Company as well as bondholders and stockholders, and that it had been intended to pay the Trust Company's debt, the reorganization committee having often promised to pay it until about the time of the institution of the foreclosure suit, and that the purpose of such suit was to vest in the Southern Company title to all the Belt Company's property, free from the payment of that company's floating debt, which was a fraudulent purpose. It asked that the Southern Company be made a party to the cause, &c. The court denied the leave to file such answer but provided, however, as a condition of the denial that complainant (Provident Company) should, within five days thereafter, file a stipulation that the decree should be without prejudice to the claim of the Trust Company. The last paragraph of the foreclosure decree was as follows:

"This decree is entered on the express condition to which the complainant has assented, that it shall be without prejudice to and shall not bar the right of the Guardian Trust Company, or its receiver, to plead and insist in any litigation now pending or hereafter brought, that the Kansas City Southern Railway Company by virtue of the manner in which it was organized, or for any other reason, is legally or equitably liable for and bound to pay the unsecured debts of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, either in full or to pay them to the extent of the value of any property heretofore acquired by it from the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, or that may hereafter be acquired by it from said company by virtue of these foreclosure proceedings, and without prejudice to the right of said Guardian Trust Company or its receivers, to plead and insist, in any pending litigation or litigation hereafter brought, that the members of the reorganization committee of the Kansas City, 1175 Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company assumed to pay and are liable to pay the unsecured debts of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company existing at the time the alleged reorganization was undertaken."

On September 6, 1900, the Cambria Company filed a creditor's bill against the Belt Company, Trust Company and other companies, the object and purposes of which was to recover certain securities belonging to the Belt Company, which had been deposited with the Trust Company as security for the Belt Company's indebtedness to the Trust Company, claiming in its bill that the Belt Company was not in fact indebted to the Trust Company, and made an application for the appointment of a receiver, and on that day receivers were appointed for the Belt Company upon the joint application of the Cambria Company and the Provident Company complainant in the foreclosure suit against the Belt Company.

In the suit brought by the Cambria Company issues were joined, the receivers appointed for the Belt Company filed a cross-bill against the Trust Company, denying indebtedness upon the part of the Belt Company to the Trust Company, but claiming that the Trust Company was in fact a debtor of the Belt Company. The case was, in November, 1900, referred to Hon. Shannon C. Douglass, as Special Master, to take the testimony &c. The hearing proceeded before the Master and after much testimony had been taken an order was made by the court in February, 1905, pursuant to a stipulation of parties, admitting the Southern Company as a party and giving it leave to file a petition of intervention, and the Southern Company filed its petition of intervention on the 27th day of that month, claiming that the various securities held by the Trust Company to secure its indebtedness against the Belt Company were covered by the mortgage which was foreclosed against the Belt Company, and sought to recover such property by its bill of intervention.

The hearing before the Master extended over several years, upwards of 34,000 pages of testimony was taken, and the Master, on the 21st of May, 1910, filed his report, which comprises 381 pages of the printed record. The evidence has not been brought to this court; hence all questions of fact as found by the Master are conclusive upon the parties on this appeal.

The Master found that the evidence did not support the claim of the Cambria Company and recommended that its bill be dismissed for want of equity. The Master found upon the accounting that there was due from the Belt Company to the Trust Company the sum of $639,658.86.

The Master found fully the facts as to the reorganization plan, the acquiring by the Southern Company of the stock and bonds of the Gulf Company, Dock Company and Belt Company, the issuing of its new stock and bonds to the holders of the bonds and stock 1176 of those companies, in exchange for the bonds and stock of the respective companies held by them, as we have heretofore stated.

The Master found, as a matter of law, that the Southern Company was not liable for the debts of the Belt Company.

The Trust Company filed exceptions to the report of the Master, among other things to the finding that the Southern Company was not liable for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company, giving as reasons therefor that that was not an issue in the case, and no finding thereon should have been made by the Master.

Various exceptions were also filed by the Central Improvement Company, one of the defendants in the action.

Subsequently, a hearing was had by the court upon the report of the Master and the exceptions thereto, the exceptions were overruled and the report of the special master was in all things approved and confirmed, and a decree entered in accordance with the findings and recommendations of the Master, from which the Trust Company and the Central Improvement Company have prosecuted their appeal.

The decree also provided that, it appearing that all costs incurred by the Cambria Company prior to November 20, 1901, had been paid by it, no further costs should be taxed against the Cambria Company, nor should any costs which had been paid by the Cambria Company be chargeable against any other parties to the action. The remaining cost were taxed by the court one-third against the Trust Company and two-thirds against the Belt Company, to be paid by the Belt Company and Southern Company.

The assignments of error relied upon in this court are:

1st. That the court erred in including in said decree the finding that the Southern Company did not assume or agree to pay or become liable for the indebtedness owing by the Belt Company to the Trust Company.

2nd. That the court erred in requiring the Central Improvement Company and its receivers to convey to the Southern Company the properties specified in the decree.

3rd. That the court erred in adjudging that one-third of the costs of this action be paid by the Trust Company.

The principal question, and the one which involves the merits of the controversy, rests upon the correctness of the finding of non-liability upon the part of the Southern Company for the debt found due from the Belt Company to the Trust Company, for, as stated by counsel for the Southern Company in their brief:

"The decision of the question of the Southern Company's liability for the debts of the Belt Company was necessary to a dis-1177 position of the case. The defense pleaded by the Trust Company to the effect that the Southern Company had assumed or become liable for the indebtedness of the Belt Company was, if true, a perfect answer to the intervening petition. It said in substance to the Southern Company—'Even though you may have the legal or equitable title to the collateral securities or to the properties represented by them, yet they were pledged by the Belt Company to secure its indebtedness, you assumed and agreed to pay that indebtedness, and a court of equity will not award you possession of the securities until you discharge your own obligation. Any relief to you must be conditioned upon your payment of the Belt Company's indebtedness.'"

This contention that if the Southern Company had become liable for the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company that was a perfect defense to the intervening petition of the Southern Company is sound and unanswerable, and after a careful review of the record in this case this court holds, and it decides, that the issue whether or not the Southern Company was indebted to the Trust Company for the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company was a material and decisive issue between the Trust Company and the Southern Company in this case which it was the duty of the master and the court below to consider and decide. The remarks of this court in Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285, that "The liability of the Southern Company to pay the debts which the Trust Company alleges in the actions at law it has promised to pay is not an issue and cannot be determined in this suit in equity", upon which counsel rely, must be construed, as must all opinions of the courts, in the light of the facts and the issue then in hand. The issue before the court in that case was whether the causes of action in the state court were so identical with the cause of action theretofore pending in the court below that an injunction should be issued to stay the prosecutions of the actions in the state court. This court held that the suit in the Circuit Court was in equity, that it related to the title and ownership and the right to a conveyance of certain specific property, while the actions at law brought by the Trust Company against the Southern Company in the state court were purely in personam to recover the alleged debts of the Southern Company, that in the suit in equity the same relief was not sought as in the actions at law and that the prosecutions of the actions at law in the state court constituted no interference with the suit in the court below. There was nothing in the decision in that case in conflict with the conclusion which has now been reached.

The master and the court below decided that the Southern Company was not indebted to the Trust Company for the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the latter. The Trust Company requests this court to review that decision upon the report of the 1178 master and contends that as a matter of law the Southern Company is so indebted upon the facts which the master finds. The Southern Company objects to this review on the ground that the only exception to the master's conclusion here and the only assignment of error in the affirmance thereof by the court below was placed upon the ground that that issue was not judicable in this suit. But an appeal in a suit in equity invokes a trial de novo in the appellate court and entitles the appellant to a just decree. Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Lochren, 143 Fed. 211; Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 8, and under Rule 11 of this court a plain error not assigned may be, and ought to be, considered where the failure to consider it would result in a great injustice. United States v. Bernays, 158 Fed. 792; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rankin, 162 Fed. 103, 108; United States v. Tennessee etc. R. R. Co., 176 U. S. 242, 256. And in view of the facts that the issue here has been long and persistently contested below, that exception was taken and assignment of error made regarding it, though upon an erroneous ground, that both parties have prepared exhaustive briefs upon the question which the Trust Company asks us to review, that neither party can be taken by surprise and that a failure to review the legal conclusion below would result in an unjust final adjudication of the issue under consideration, we are constrained to consider and decide it.

It is claimed that the Southern Company is liable for the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company because it knowingly acquired the property of the Belt Company in the execution of a scheme to exclude the Trust Company's unsecured claim against the Belt Company for $639,658.86 from the benefit of the Belt Company's property and to apply that property by an exchange of stock and bonds and a mere formal and not actual foreclosure sale to the benefit of the stockholders of the Belt Company.

In Louisville Trust Co. v. Louisville &c. Ry., 174 U. S. 674, which was an action brought by a creditor to set aside a sale under a foreclosure as being in fraud of its rights, for the reason that such foreclosure was had in the interests of the stockholders as well as the bondholders, Mr. Justice Brewer, rendering the opinion of the court, said:

"The questions in this case are novel and important. They arise on the foreclosure of certain railroad mortgages, and suggest to what extent the same rules and considerations obtain in them as in the foreclosure of ordinary mortgages upon real estate. It goes without saying that the proceeding in the foreclosure of an ordinary mortgage on real estate is simple and speedy. No one need be considered except the mortgagor and mortgagee, and if they concur in the disposition of the foreclosure it is sufficient, and the court may properly enter a decree in accordance therewith. * * *

1179 "But this court long since recognized the fact that in the present condition of things (and all judicial proceedings must be adjusted to the facts as they are) other inquiries arise in railroad foreclosure proceedings accompanied by a receivership than the mere matter of the amount of the debt of the mortgagor to the mortgagee. We have held in a series of cases that the peculiar character and conditions of railroad property not only justify but compel a court entertaining foreclosure proceedings to give to certain limited unsecured claims a priority over the debts secured by the mortgage. It is needless to refer to the many cases in which this doctrine has been affirmed. It may be, and has often been said, that this ruling implies somewhat of a departure from the apparent priority of right secured by a contract obligation duly made and duly recorded, and yet this court, recognizing that a railroad is not simply private property, but also an instrument of public service, has ruled that the character of its business, and the public obligations which it assumes, justify a limited displacement of contract and recorded liens in behalf of temporary and unsecured creditors. * * *

"We notice, again, that railroad mortgages, or trust deeds, are ordinarily so large in amount that on foreclosure thereof only the mortgagees, or their representatives, can be considered as probable purchasers. * * *

"We must, therefore, recognize the fact, for it is a fact of common knowledge, that, whatever the legal rights of the parties may be, ordinarily foreclosures of railroad mortgages mean not the destruction of all interest of the mortgagor and a transfer to the mortgagee alone of the full title, but that such proceedings are carried on in the interests of all parties who have any rights in the mortgaged property, whether as mortgagee, creditor or mortgagor. * * * Assuming that foreclosure proceedings may be carried on to some extent at least in the interests and for the benefit of both mortgagee and mortgagor, (that is, bondholder and stockholder,) we observe that no such proceedings can be rightfully carried to consummation which recognize and preserve any interest in the stockholders without also recognizing and preserving the interests, not merely of the mortgagee, but of every creditor of the corporation. In other words, if the bondholder wishes to foreclose and exclude inferior lienholders or general unsecured creditors and stockholders he may do so, but a foreclosure which attempts to preserve any interest or right of the mortgagor in the property after the sale must necessarily secure and preserve the prior rights of general creditors thereof. This is based upon the familiar rule that the stockholder's interest in the property is subordinate to the rights of creditors; first of secured and then of unsecured creditors. And any arrangement of the parties by which the subordinate rights and interests of the stockholders are attempted to be secured at the expense of the prior rights of either class of creditors comes within judicial denunciation."

1180 A "transfer of property by a debtor with a reservation of an interest therein to himself" is always voidable by his creditors as against a debtor and all claiming under him with notice of his act, and a transfer by stockholders of a corporation of its property with a preservation of an interest in themselves is equally voidable against all who take the property with notice of their act. In Montgomery-Web Co. v. Dienelt, 133 Pa. St. 585, 596, 19 Atl. 430, a new corporation was formed and part of its stock was issued to the stockholders and a part of it was issued to the creditors of an old corporation for their holdings, and all the property of the old corporation was transferred to the new corporation. A single creditor of the old corporation assailed the transaction. The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania said:

"Under such circumstances they (the stockholders) were bound to take notice of the nature of the transaction and to know that equity would still regard the property as a trust for the payment of existing debts, and would follow it on behalf of the creditors until it should get into the hands of innocent purchasers for value. Such purchasers they were not. The old stockholders were not purchasers for value at all and the new stockholders were not innocent, for they knew, or were bound to take notice of the taint in their co-adventurers' title. We are of the opinion that as to the stockholders in the Aronia Company, this was a transfer of property by a debtor with the retention of an interest in himself within the settled rule of law that makes such transfers void as against creditors, and that, as to the Aronia creditors who became new stockholders in the Montgomery Company, they took with such notice as prevents them from claiming now as innocent holders for value against the appellants as execution creditors of the old corporation. It is not worth while to cite authorities for these principles, they are settled and familiar."

In Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Howard 74 U. S. 392, 409, the leading case upon this subject, where a foreclosure sale of the property of a corporation was made pursuant to an arrangement whereby 84 per cent of the purchase price was to go to its bondholders and 16 per cent to its stockholders, the Supreme Court said: "Equity regards the property of a corporation as held in trust for the payment of the debts of the corporation and recognizes the rights of creditors to pursue it into whatsoever possession it may be transferred, unless it has passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser; and the rule is well settled that stockholders are not entitled to any share of the capital stock, nor to any dividend of the properties until the debts of the corporation are paid." The facts and the ruling in that case are thus stated in the syllabus:

"A sale under foreclosure of mortgage of an insolvent railroad company, expedited and made advantageous by an arrangement between the mortgagees and the stockholders, under which 1181 arrangement the mortgagees, according to their order, got more or less of their debt (100 to 30 per cent), and the stockholders of the company the residue of the proceeds—a fraction (16 per cent.) of the par of their stock—held fraudulent as against general creditors not secured by the mortgage, and this although the road was mortgaged far above its value, and on sale in open market did not bring near enough to pay even the mortgage debts; so that in fact, if there had been an ordinary foreclosure, and one independent of all arrangement between the mortgagees and the stockholders, the whole proceeds of sale would have belonged to the mortgagees."

In Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Paul, 93 Fed. 878, 884, the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Fifth Circuit said:

"There is no substantial dispute that the appellee, Mary F. Paul, was and is a creditor of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, and the question is whether the Central of Georgia Railway Company is liable for her demand. The case shows that the sale of the railway properties under the foreclosure at the suit of the Central Trust Company, the sale of the collateral securing the floating debt claims, and the sale of the 'overflow property,' all were in pursuance of a reorganization plan, which was carried out, and resulted in the transfer of all the property and assets of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia to the Central of Georgia Railway Company; and the active participating reorganizers were not only the creditors of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, secured by mortgage and otherwise, but included as well the stockholders of said company; so that, for the purposes of the present case, it is an indisputable fact that, notwithstanding all the sales of property and other transactions in liquidation, the stockholders of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia retained their interest and rights, and by virtue thereof are now either stockholders of the new organization, Central of Georgia Railway Company, or are otherwise provided for, and that the new company has acquired, and now holds, all the former property and assets of the old company. It would seem from this state of facts that the appellee has the right to look to the new company for the payment of her claim."

Indeed, it is settled law, that "A reorganization of an insolvent railroad company by which both its mortgage bondholders and its stockholders, in exchange for their bonds and stocks, are given an interest in the new company which purchases the property of the old company at a foreclosure sale made pursuant to such plan of reorganization, and by consent of the old company and its stockholders is fraudulent in law as to unsecured creditors of the old company whose claims are left unpaid and renders the new company liable for the claims of such creditors." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 177 Fed. 804; Luedecke v. Des Moines Cabinet 1182 Co., 140 Ia. 223, 118 N. W. 456; Hurd v. New York & Commercial Steam Laundry Co., 60 N. E. 327.

The case under consideration falls directly under this rule of law. A scheme was devised and proposed for the benefit of the stockholders and bondholders of the Belt Company, the Gulf Company, and the Dock Company, as the reorganization agreement reads: "For the reorganization of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf R. R. Co., and its property, and also, if necessary, for the reorganization of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Co. and the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company and their properties, and for the consolidation of said corporations, if such consolidation can be lawfully made, and is found to be practicable either with or without foreclosure of either or all of said properties, or by means of the acquisition of the stock or other securities of either or all of said corporations, or in any other manner that may be deemed by said committee to be most practicable and feasible." That scheme was accepted, approved and executed by the stockholders and bondholders of the Belt Company and by the Southern Company for their benefit to the exclusion of the Trust Company's unsecured claim from all benefit from the property of its debtor, the Belt Company. A new company, the Southern Company, was organized, the stockholders and bondholders of the old company, the Belt Company, in exchange for their stock and bonds were offered and took an interest in the new company, the stockholders took for their $4,700,000.00 of stock in the old company about $1,857,000.00 of the preferred stock and about $3,562,500.00 of the common stock of the Southern Company, in all about $5,419,500.00 in stock at its par value, and the bondholders took about $1,330,000.00 of the preferred stock and $250,000.00 of the bonds of the Southern Company, in all about $1,580,000.00 at their par value, for their $1,000,000.00 of bonds of the old Belt Company and after the new company had obtained in this way more than 89 per cent of the bonds and more than 97 per cent of the stock of the old company it purchased the property of the old company at a formal, but not an actual, foreclosure sale, made pursuant to this plan of reorganization at the instigation of the Southern Company as holder of 89 per cent of the bonds of the Belt Company and with its consent as holder of more than 97 per cent of the stock of the Belt Company. And what was the actual effect of the entire performance? The property of the Belt Company was transferred to a new company and its stockholders preserved for themselves an interest in that property. Before the transaction they had common stock of the Belt Company of the par value of $4,700,000.00 and the Belt Company owned its property, after the transaction the stockholders had preferred stock of the Southern Company of the par value of about $1,857,000.00 and common stock of that company of the par value of about $3,562,500.00 and the Southern Company owned the property of the Belt Company. But a sale or transfer by 1183 stockholders of the property of their corporation in which they preserve an interest, whether that sale or transfer be by deed, by mortgage, by judgment, by foreclosure sale, or by any other means, is fraudulent and voidable against the unsecured creditors of their old corporation and a purchaser who takes and converts such property to its own use with knowledge of the facts, becomes legally liable to pay the unsecured debts of the old corporation, at least to the extent of the value of the property so taken and converted. The value of the property of the Belt Company so taken and converted by the Southern Company was many times the amount of the Belt Company's debt to the Trust Company. The conclusion is irresistible and the judgment of this court is that the Southern Company which, pursuant to this scheme and in its execution, purchased the Belt Company's property at the formal foreclosure sale with full knowledge of the scheme and of the fact that by its execution the stockholders of the Belt Company were appropriating to themselves the benefits of the property of the Belt Company which in law and in equity belonged to the unsecured creditors of that company, became legally liable to pay and is indebted to the Trust Company to the amount of the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company in the sum of $639,658.86 and interest from June 22, 1910, on $473,723.59 at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, on $46,565.76 at the rate of 7 per cent per annum and on $119,369.51 at the rate of 8 per cent per annum.

The contention of the Southern Company that the Trust Company is estopped from enforcing and collecting this claim based on the unsecured debt of the Belt Company to it, because, for the bonds and stock of the Belt Company, which is owned, it received bonds and stock of the Southern Company under the plan of reorganization, is untenable. The collection of this claim is not an avoidance, it is an enforcement and execution of the scheme of reorganization and of the trust in favor of the creditors of the belt Company, which that scheme created. The published plan of reorganization was plenary notice under the law to the Southern Company, and to all who became interested under that plan, that purchasers of property of the companies foreclosed pursuant to it took that property in trust for the unsecured creditors of those companies. That plan expressly set apart $475,000.00 to be applied to the payment of the floating debts of those companies, vested in the committee of reorganization discretionary power to pay such of those floating debts as it saw fit to discharge and that it actually expended $1,164,172.56 in paying such debts. The committee had full authority to pay this claim of the Trust Company. The Trust Company may well have supposed that its claim, as well as the claims of other creditors of these foreclosed companies, which were paid to the amount of over a million dollars, would be paid by the committee. The Trust Company never represented that it 1184 would not, but persistently asserted that it would enforce its demand, and the collection of it from the Southern Company is neither barred by estoppel nor inconsistent with the previous position and action of the Trust Company.

Another objection to the enforcement of this claim is that the Trust Company was guilty of laches. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the Southern Company did not intend to pay the debts of the Belt Company until the foreclosure proceeding was brought by the Provident Company. As stated, the Trust Company interposed its claim in that action and the decree provided that its rights respecting the enforcement of such claim should remain unaffected. When the Southern Company filed its petition of intervention in the case brought by the Cambria Company, the Trust Company promptly asserted in defense thereto the liability of the Southern Company. The Trust Company also brought an action in the state court against the Southern Company for a part of its claim, for the reasons which it had before asserted. The Southern Company filed its supplemental bill and obtained an injunction against the prosecution of the action in the state court, which was reversed by this court. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 146 Fed. 337. The Trust Company then brought a second action in the state court for another portion of its claim. The Southern Company moved the state court to stay the actions, which motion was denied. It then filed another bill for an injunction against the Trust Company to prevent the prosecution of these actions, and the circuit court granted a preliminary injunction, which was reversed by this court. Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry Co., 171 Fed. 43. Under these circumstances, the plea of laches is unfounded.

Again, the issue of the liability of the Southern Company to the Trust Company for the debt of the Belt Company to it came into this case as an equitable defense to the intervening petition of the Southern Company of February 27, 1905, wherein it sought to appropriate to itself property of the Central Improvement Company, 1120/1407ths of the shares of the stock of which company had been pledged to the Trust Company by the Belt Company to secure $203,900.00 of the debt of the latter company to the former. The Southern Company endeavored to appropriate this property of the Central Company under the after-acquired clauses of the old foreclosed mortgages of the Belt Company, the Air Line Company and the Gulf Company. The Trust Company answered (1) that the Southern Company owed it this debt, that he who seeks equity must do equity, that the Southern Company was entitled to no relief until it paid this debt, and (2) that by virtue of the pledged stock of the Central Company to secure the payment of the debt of the Belt Company its equitable right to the property of that company was superior to that of the Southern Company. The Trust Company was 1185 guilty of no fatal laches here because it held the majority of the stock of the Central Company and that company held the title to the property which the Southern Company sought to take, so that the Trust Company had a perfect legal right by virtue of its stock to appropriate the property to the payment of its debt and it needed no affirmative relief, and a court of chancery will, and it is its duty to, condition its grant of relief to a complainant with the enforcement of any just claim of the defendant which the latter ought in equity and good conscience to pay, although on account of the statute of limitations, or for some other reason, the defendant might not be able affirmatively to enforce it. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Denver, L. & G. R. Co., 126 Fed., 46, 51, 60 C. C. A. 588, 593; Pomeroy's Eq. Jur. Secs. 386, 393, note 4; Brent v. Bank of Washington, 10 Pet. 596; De Walsh v. Braman, 160 Ill. 415, 43 N. E. 597, 600; Farmers' Bank v. Englehart, 6 Gill., 50, 57; Fievel v. Zuber, 67 Tex. 279, 280, 3 S. W. 273; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 275, 276, 17 Pac. 225; De Cazara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 132, 134, 22 Pac. 74; Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 354, 22 Pac. 200; Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298, 301; McKeen v. James (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S.

W. 460, 464; Rodriguez v. Haynes, 76 Tex. 225, 232, 13 S. W. 296; Hartranft's Estate, 153 Pa. 530, 533, 26 Atl. 104; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) pp. 177, 178; Dimick v. Grand Island Banking Co., 37 Neb. 394, 399, 55 N. W. 1066; Gage v. Riverside Trust Co., (C. C.) 86 Fed. 984, 998; Whitmore v. Savings Union, 50 Cal. 145, 150; Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437, 444, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137.

It is insisted upon the part of the Southern Company that the reference to a Master was by consent of parties, and hence, that the findings of the Master are not subject to review. We do not think the record supports the statement that the Master was appointed by consent of parties. As before stated, the Cambria Company filed its bill September 6, 1900, and the record shows that, on the 7th of November, defendant having answered, the case was referred by the court upon its own motion to Shannon C. Douglass. On February 27, 1905, a stipulation was filed by the parties to the effect that the Southern Railway Company might become a party to the action either by joint complaint or by bill of intervention, as it might elect, and file its bill, asserting its claim, on or before February 25, 1905; that the adverse party should have ten days thereafter in which to plead and that the testimony theretofore taken should be applicable as evidence in support of and in resistance of the Southern Company's claim; "that such orders of court as may be necessary for the purpose may be entered carrying into effect this stipulation." In accordance with this stipulation, the court made an order, permitting the Southern Company to file its bill of intervention, and gave the adverse party ten days in which to plead to the same, referring the issues to Shannon C. Douglass to take the testimony 1186 thereon and report, &c. This stipulation was not a stipulation consenting to the appointment of a Master but was simply one which authorized the court to make the necessary orders relative to permitting the Southern Company to intervene, and fixing the time within which the parties should plead thereto and an order that the testimony theretofore taken should be treated and considered as testimony relative to the issues made by the Southern Company's bill of intervention. The reference to the Master was by the court upon its own motion. The court would naturally refer that issue to the Master who had theretofore been appointed by the court on its own motion to hear the case. Subsequently, on the 1st of May, 1905, the parties stipulated that the Southern Company might amend its intervening petition, setting up, in addition to the matters contained in its intervening petition on file, a claim against the Trust Company for an alleged breach of trust, and consented in the stipulation that such new issue should be referred to Shannon C. Douglass, the Special Master, and the court, pursuant to the stipulation, made an order permitting the Southern Company to file its amended intervening petition in that respect, and referred it to Shannon C. Douglass. It is this last stipulation and this order of the court upon which the Southern Company bases its argument that the reference of the case to the Master was by consent of parties. As before stated, the main issues, and the issues involved on this appeal, had been referred to the Master by the court upon its own motion. The stipulation that the new issue made by the amended intervening petition should be referred to the Master was a stipulation with reference to that issue, that issue was decided by the Master in favor of the Trust Company, and is not before us for review. So the case is not one where the issues involved have been heard by a master appointed by consent of the parties. Even though the original appointment of the Master had been by consent of parties, a reference under those circumstances would not preclude the court from correcting manifest errors of law made by the Master. Rule 11 of this court. United States v. Tennessee & Coosa R. R. Co., 176 U. S. 242-256; Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 222; United States v. Bernays, 158 Fed. 792; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Rankin, 162 Fed. 103, 108.

The Central Improvement Company has made application to dismiss its appeal. It is not very material to the disposition of this case and to the adjudication of all the rights of the parties to this suit whether the application is granted or denied because the Trust Company had such an equitable interest in the property of the Central Company by virtue of the pledge to it of 1120 out of the 1407 shares of the stock of that company issued that the Trust Company's appeal completely challenges the decree of the court with reference to that property and furnishes ample warrant for its review and reversal. The Central Company has no prop-1187 erty of substantial value except that specified in the decree. It is a mere holding company either for the Trust Company or for the Southern Company and the determination of their respective equities necessarily determines the rights of the Central Company and the ownership of the beneficial interest in its property, and the motion to dismiss its appeal is denied.

The result is that the Southern Company is entitled to no relief in this suit unless it first pays to the Trust Company the amount of the Belt Company's debt to it and the costs of this suit because it became indebted to the Trust Company in the amount of that debt by its acquisition of the property of the Belt Company under the reorganization scheme with full knowledge that the stockholders of the Belt Company thereby preserved for themselves an interest in that property to the exclusion of the Trust Company, a creditor of that corporation.

Moreover, if the Southern Company were not equitably estopped from recovering the property of the Central Company by its indebtedness to the Trust Company, nevertheless, equity would require it to pay to that company the value of the latter's 1120 pledged shares of the stock of the Central Company before it would permit it to take the property of the latter company and thus to destroy the value of its stock through its claim as a purchaser at foreclosure sales under the after-acquired clauses of the old mortgages of the Gulf Company, the Air Line Company and the Belt Company. The property in controversy is the remnant of numerous pieces of real estate to which the Central Company took title and for the purchase prices of which it issued its stock at par to the Gulf Company, the Belt Company and the Air Line Company respectively, which companies paid the par value of that stock either to it or to the vendors from whom the property was bought. The result was that the Central Company, a corporation, owned and held the property in trust to pay the stockholders the par value of its stock which was the purchase price of the property. In this state of the case the Belt Company, which acquired 1120 of the 1407 shares of the stock thus issued by the Central Company, pledged this stock in the year 1899 to the Trust Company to secure the payment of $203,900.00 of its debt to that company and the title and rights of the parties stood thus unquestioned from 1899 until 1905, when the Southern Company filed its intervening petition in this case. It asserted that the Central Company held this property in trust for the mortgagor companies and that the after-acquired clauses of their mortgages carried it to itself, the purchaser at the foreclosure sales thereunder. Conceding that the property was appurtenant to the railroad and that the terms of the after-acquired clauses were broad enough to include it, how can this claim of the Southern Company be sustained. The after-acquired clause of a mortgage attaches to the interest acquired by the mortgagor only and it is always sub-1188 ject and inferior to junior liens, incumbrances and equities under which the property comes to the mortgagor. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Denver L. & G. R. Co., 126 Fed. 46, 49, 60 C. C. A. 588, 591; United States v. New Orleans R. R. Co., 12 Wall. 362; Central Trust Co. v. Kneeland, 138 U. S. 414, 423. In a simple case the justice and the application of this rule is plain. A railroad company makes a mortgage of its property with an after-acquired clause. It subsequently purchases a piece of property and gives its note and mortgage for the purchase price and the vendor sells or pledges the note to a third person to secure his debt. The mortgagee of the railroad may not deprive the pledgee of the note of the property which secures it under the after-acquired clause of his mortgage until he pays the junior note and mortgage and this because he has given nothing for this property while the junior mortgagee and his pledgee have parted with value for their security upon it. In the case in hand, the Central Company acquired the property here in dispute for its liability to pay to its stockholders the par value of its stock and it held the property in trust to secure the payment to its stock-holders of that liability. The mortgagees under the railroad mortgages and the Southern Company, the purchaser thereunder knew these facts. They parted with no value on account of this property and a court of conscience may not permit them to deprive the stockholders of the Central Company, who have really paid for it, of the trust property which the Central Company holds to reimburse them unless the court first requires them to pay to the holders of the stock its actual value.

The fact that the mortgagor companies originally took and held the stock of the Central Company before the Belt Company pledged it to the Trust Company, has not been overlooked. That fact, however, only clearly fixes the legal rights and equities of the parties, fixes the title to the land in the Central Company and estops the mortgagor companies and all claiming under them from denying that the stock which they took and sold or pledged constituted the primary liability of the Central Company and the primary equity in the property it holds as against the mortgagees of the railroad companies and the purchaser thereunder. Watson v. Bonfils, 116 Fed. 157, 163, 166, 167, 53 C. C. A. 535, 541, 544, 545.

The stock of the Central Company was not the property of that company. It was a liability of that company. Conceding that the after-acquired clauses of the mortgages conveyed the Central Company's interest in this land subject to its primary trust to pay this liability they did not convey its liability, or the stock which represented it. Humphreys v. McKissock, 140 U. S. 304, 314. The equity of the stockholders as against the Southern Company which took whatever it has with full notice of all the facts in this case, is the same that it would have been if the liability of the Central Company, now represented by its stock for the purchase price of 1189 the property, had been represented by its promissory notes and a mortgage upon this land to secure them and they had been pledged by their owners to secure their debt to the Trust Company. The Trust Company, which holds 1120 shares of the stock of the Central Company to secure a debt to it of more than $200,000.00, has an equitable interest in the land of the Central Company superior to that of the Southern Company and the latter is entitled to no relief with reference to this property until it pays to the Trust Company the value of that stock.

The controlling equities of this case require that the decree below should be so modified, among other things, that it will adjudge that the Southern Company is indebted to the Trust Company in the amount which the Belt Company owes it, that is to say, in the sum of $639,658.86 and interest thereon from the date of the original decree, and that no relief be granted to the Southern Company unless that debt is paid.

Three of the stockholders of the Trust Company, at whose instance the question of the liability of the Southern Company was pressed to a decision in this court by the Trust Company, and its counsel, have filed a petition for leave to present the suggestion, that, in case this court finds, as it has found, that the Southern Company owes this debt, a decree should be rendered against it in this suit to the effect that the Trust Company recover this amount from the Southern Company and have execution therefor. There is no prayer for this specific relief in any of the pleadings of the Trust Company, but it is relief to which, under the law and upon the facts now found, the Trust Company is clearly entitled from this, or some other court, and in its answer to one of the numerous bills filed in this case it prayed for such other and further relief as should seem meet and just in the premises. The facts that the Southern Company voluntarily intervened in this suit in 1905 and sought to take from the Trust Company the security for its claim furnished by the stock of the Central Company and by a large amount of other stocks, bonds and property, to which the Southern Company was not entitled, that this attempt of the Southern Company called into this suit the Trust Company's claim that the Southern Company owed it the amount of the debt of the Belt Company, that the Trust Company tendered that issue in actions at law which it brought as long ago as 1905 and 1906, against the Southern Company in a state court to recover from it this very indebtedness, that the Southern Company delayed and prevented the trial of that issue in those actions at law by means of two successive injunctions which it obtained from the court below, on the ground that this issue was pending in this suit, injunctions which on appeal this court promptly dissolved, Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 146 Fed. 337, 76 C. C. A. 615; Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43, 96 C. C. A. 285, that 1190 this suit has been thoroughly litigated by all parties interested in it for more than six years, that tens of thousands of pages of evidence have been taken in this litigation and that further litigation in the state court over this issue, although it becomes res adjudicata by this decision, may by appeal or otherwise result in further delay, cause this suggestion of these stockholders to challenge serious consideration. It seems that if by the amendment of any of the pleadings of the Trust Company, or by the filing by it of a cross-bill, or a supplemental bill, or without them, such a decree as suggested may be lawfully rendered, justice and equity would require that that course should be pursued. That three stockholders are accordingly permitted to file their suggestion and leave is granted to the Trust Company, the Southern Company, and to any other party to this suit, to make such motions and present such arguments and authorities, either orally or in writing, to this court at St. Louis on January 10, 1913, regarding this suggestion, as to them shall seem meet. The issue presented by this suggestion is reserved for later consideration. But whatever may be the result of that consideration, the decree below must be reversed and this case must be remanded to the court below with instructions to render a decree which shall contain the first five paragraphs of the decree below, shall adjudge that the equitable claim of the Trust Company, by virtue of the pledge to it of 1120 shares of the stock of the Central Company, in the property of that company described in the sixth paragraph of that decree, is superior to the claim and equity of the Southern Company therein, that the Southern Company is indebted to the Trust Company in the amount of the indebtedness of the Belt Company to that company, that is to say, in the sum of $639,658.86 and interest from the date of the original decree below, on $473,723.59 at 6 per cent per annum, on $46,565.76 at 7 per cent per annum and on $119,369.51 at 8 per cent per annum, that the Southern Company must pay this debt as a condition of obtaining any relief in this suit, that the ninth, tenth, eleventh and thirteenth paragraphs of the original decree be again adjudged and that the Trust Company recover its entire costs of the Southern Company and the Cambria Company, and that the share of such costs as between themselves, but not as against the Trust Company, that shall be paid by the Cambria Company and the Southern Company shall be determined by the court below as to it may seem just and equitable.

Filed October 22, 1912.

1191 (Order Suspending Entry of Decree, etc., and Denying Motion of Central Improvement Co. for Leave to Dismiss Its Appeal.)

September Term, 1912.

TUESDAY, October 22, 1912.

In the above entitled causes this Court having this day filed its opinion directing a reversal of the decree below with a remand of the cases for further proceedings, it is now here ordered that the entry of a decree in this Court, be, and the same is hereby, suspended and withheld until the "Suggestions" by Edward A. Shedd, et al., Petitioners, as to the form of the final decree to be entered in the Court below, shall be heard and determined as hereinafter provided, or until the further order of this Court, and full jurisdiction of these causes is hereby retained for all purposes.

It is further ordered and adjudged and leave be, and the same is hereby, granted to Edward A. Shedd, et al., Petitioners, to forthwith file their "Suggestions" as to the form of the final decree to be entered in the Court below, and that said "Suggestions" be set down for a hearing before this Court at St. Louis, Missouri, on the 10th day of January, 1913.

Leave is hereby granted to the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, to the Guardian Trust Company, or to any other party to this suit, to file such motions and to present such authorities, either orally or in writing, on or before the above named date of hearing, regarding the said "Suggestions" as to them may be deemed advisable.

It is further ordered and adjudged that the motion of the Central Improvement Company for leave to dismiss its appeal herein, be, and the same is hereby, denied.

October 22, 1912.

1192 (Motion of Edward A. Shedd et al. for Leave to File Suggestions as to Further Directions to be Embraced in Decree of Reversal.)

And now come Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law, and present to the court their petition entitled "Petition of Edward A. Shedd and Others for Leave to File Suggestions as to Further Directions in Reversal Order of Judgment to be entered herein", and move the Court for leave to file the same, and to have the subject-matter thereof considered along with other questions in said cause now reserved for hearing upon the arguments to be had and made on January 10, 1913, or at such other time and in such manner as the Court may order.

NEWEL H. CLAPP,
ENOCH J. PRICE,
HARRY S. MECARTNEY,
Counsel for Edward A. and Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law.

Dated December 21, 1912.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Dec. 21, 1912.

(Proof of Service of Motion of Shedd et al. for Leave to File Further Suggestions to be Embraced in Decree.)

Notice.

To Messrs. Samuel Untermyer and Samuel W. Moore, Counsel for Kansas City S. Ry. Co. and Central Imp. Co.:
To Frank Hagerman, Esq., Counsel for Cambria Steel Co.:
To Messrs. Gates & English and D. J. Haff, Counsel for Guardian Trust Co.:

You are hereby notified that the undersigned, as counsel for Edward A. Shedd, et al., have this day presented to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, Honorable Walter H. Sanborn, Judge Presiding, the petition of said Shedd, et al., as to the taxing of attorneys' fees and other costs in said case, and a notice of motion for leave to file the same, with a copy of which petition and motion you are herewith served; and that said Court, 1193 by said Presiding Justice, announced that the undersigned should serve copies of said petition and motion upon the various counsel in the case, together with a notice that the arguments on January 10th next in said cause would include an argument upon the merits of said petition and that all parties would have leave to file any suggestions or answer to said petition as they might deem advisable.

Dated St. Louis, December 21, 1912.

NEWELL H. CLAPP,
ENOCH J. PRICE,
HARRY S. MECARTNEY,
Counsel for Shedd et al.

Rec'd copy of above notice, motion and Petition Dec. 23rd 1912.
GATES & ENGLISH.
D. J. HAFF, AND
EDWIN C. MESERVEY.
S. W. MOORE.
FRANK HAGERMAN.

(MEMO. OF CLERK.—Attached to the foregoing notice is a copy of the motion of Shedd, et al., for leave to file Suggestions as to further Directions to be embraced in the Decree of Reversal, which is omitted here for the reason that a copy thereof precedes the foregoing notice.

Attached to the said Notice is also a copy of the Petition of Shedd, et al., for leave to file further Suggestions as to the Decree, which is omitted here for the reason that said petition was filed on January 20, 1913, and follows this Proof of Service.)

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Dec. 26, 1912.

1194 In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Petition of Edward A. Shedd and Others for Leave to File Suggestions as to Further Directions in Reversal Order of Judgment to Be Entered Herein.

And now come Edward A. Shedd, Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law, and show to the court:

That they are stockholders in the Guardian Trust Company, holding respectively the amounts of stock shown in the following schedule, viz.:

Name.	Shares.	Par value.
Edward A. Shedd and Charles B. Shedd	766	$76,600
Robert H. Law	150	15,000

1195 That the total outstanding stock of said trust company is about $2,000,000, the stockholders being over 300 in number and widely scattered.

That said company has been in liquidation of its assets for nearly twelve years last past.

That the majority of the stock of said company has been held in voting trust (of which the West End Trust Company of Philadelphia is, or was until lately, the depositary), which stock is voted at the annual meetings by the liquidator of said company, John A. Prescott, and several others, who have on formal request made in writing therefor declined to give the petitioners, Shedd and Shedd, the names of the various stockholders appearing of record on the books of said trust company.

That therefore petitioners have no opportunity to appeal to the large number of widely scattered stockholders, either those appearing upon the face of the books or those who are such stockholders through the medium of holding certificates in said voting trust.

Petitioners are advised, however, that their petition is plainly in the interest of all the stockholders of said company, and that they therefore fully and sufficiently represent a stockholders' appeal in respect to the subject matter of this petition; and do not believe it wise or necessary to use up resources or time in mere attempts to find additional stockholders, and to get them to join herein.

These petitioners hereby ask the court for leave to file suggestions in support of the following appeal, viz.:

That this court embody in its proposed order of reversal 1196 to be entered herein in pursuance of the opinion heretofore filed—

A special finding to the effect that the said litigation commenced by said Cambria Steel Company, and prosecuted by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company in the way of an ancillary bill filed in this cause, which issues were raised, and said suits instigated at the instance and bequest of and prosecuted in reality on behalf of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and that the said intervening petition filed and prosecuted by said Southern Company were each and all instituted and prosecuted without good faith, and that said entire litigation has been trivial, wanton and oppressive.

That thereupon:

1. This court direct the lower court upon entering the decree against the said Southern Company, as ordered by the opinion lately filed herein,

(1) To reserve jurisdiction to inquire as to the amount of attorney's or solicitor's fees, stenographer's fees, expert accountant's fees, and such other expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred by said Guardian Trust Company in making its defenses to such bill and ancillary bill and intervening petition and in asserting its claims herein;

(2) That upon petition or suggestion as to the same being filed in said cause by the Trust Company and upon evidence taken by affidavits or otherwise as the court may direct, the said court make a finding as to the amount of such fees, costs and expenses;

(3) That it thereupon order the same to be taxed as costs in said cause and a further decree be entered against said Cambria Company and Southern Company for said amounts respectively, in 1197 favor of said Trust Company, and that it be awarded execution therefor—the said inquiry and taxation of costs not to delay the entry of the said principal decree, as heretofore directed by said opinion, and not to stay the collection of the same in any manner.

Or,

2nd. In the alternative that the court be disposed not to enter the orders or directions herein above requested, that then the court direct specifically that the decree to be entered by the court below shall be entered without prejudice to the right of the Guardian Trust Company to commence such suit or suits at law or otherwise, as it may be advised may be proper against said Cambria and Southern Companies for such damages, expenses, costs, attorney's or solicitor's fees, stenographer's fees, expert witness' fees, and all such other expenses and damages as may have been incurred by said Trust Company in making its defenses to said bill of complaint, the ancillary bill and intervening petition, and in asserting its claims in said cause or causes.

3rd. That in respect to the damages, costs, fees and expenses which may have occurred to, or been incurred by, said Guardian Trust Company from the issuance of the two injunctions referred to in said opinion, restraining said Trust Company from prosecuting the actions at law in the state courts of Missouri—which injunctions were respectively ordered dissolved in the cases of Guardian Trust Company v. Kansas City Southern Railway Company, 146 Fed. Rep. 337 and Guardian Trust Company v. Kansas 1198 City Southern Railway Company, 171 Fed. Rep. 43—the said decree to be entered herein in the court below shall include such costs, solicitors' fees and other expenses and damages adjudged supplemental to the main case involved in the record herein; as to such items involved in said first mentioned case the said decree shall not prejudice the right of the Guardian Trust Company to move in said cause, if the same be still pending for the purpose, to have such costs, solicitor's fees and other expenses and damages adjudged therein to the Guardian Trust Company—unless the said Southern Company and said Trust Company shall expressly elect to have the same and the amount thereof adjudicated along with other solicitors' fees, costs and damages taxed herein or in the court below in this cause.

Your petitioners, as a basis for their said appeal, refer to the facts stated in the two petitions of Messrs. Shedd and Law filed heretofore in this cause and in this court, and the affidavits filed therewith, and to the following affidavit; and they suggest as grounds therefor those which are stated in their brief annexed hereto.

Respectfully submitted,

NEWELL H. CLAPP,
ENOCH J. PRICE,
HARRY S. MECARTNEY,
Counsel for said Petitioners.

1199 STATE OF ILLINOIS,
County of Cook, ss:

Harry S. Mecartney, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

1. That he is an attorney at law.

2. That he is one of the counsel for the petitioners in the above and foregoing petition.

3. That he knows the facts stated in the said petition, and that the same are true.

4. That he was formerly counsel for the Trust Company in this cause.

5. That the present regular counsel for said Trust Company in said cause, Messrs. Gates & English, have had called to their attention from time to time the claims made by affiant as counsel for the Trust Company, to the effect that said Trust Company should be allowed its solicitor's fees and other fees and costs and expenses suffered or incurred by it in making its defenses and in asserting its claims in said cause. That affiant made such claim in a printed report to the Trust Company, made by him immediately prior to his formal retention in said cause in December, 1904. That affiant made said claim in various reports and letters from time to time to the Executive Committee of said company. That affiant made said claim in arguments and briefs filed in said cause before the master, and that Messrs. Gates & English have had copies of said documents in their possession for more than 3 years last past.

6. That therefore affiant believes it to be proper and timely 1200 to submit said claim for fees, expenses and damages in the name of the above petitioners and on behalf of said Trust Company and all of its stockholders.

Further affiant saith not.

HARRY S. MECARTNEY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of December, A. D. 1912.

B. H. MONTGOMERY,
Notary Public.

* * * * * * *

(Here follows a brief in suppport of the foregoing Petition for Leave to File Further Suggestions.)

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 20, 1913.

1201 United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appellants,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Suggestions of Guardian Trust Company in Respect to a Decree for a Specific Judgment Against the Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

This court, having found upon the record, that the Kansas City Southern Railway Co. owes the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company, reserved for consideration the question of whether a decree should be rendered against the Southern Company in this suit to the effect that the Trust Company recover this amount from the Southern Company, and have execution therefor. The facts which would move a court of conscience to grant this relief, if it might be done under the pleadings and in accordance with the principles of equity, are stated in the court's opinion fully, fairly and tersely. The only obstacle in the way lies in the fact 1202 that the answer of the Trust Company to the intervening petition of the Southern Company, does not pray for the specific relief to which, under the findings of the court, the Trust Company is justly and equitably entitled. Precisely the same question has been repeatedly before the Supreme Court and other courts of lesser, though unquestioned authority. The settled principles of chancery practice have been found sufficient to accomplish the high aim of equity and to enable the court to do full and complete justice.

We call the court's attention to the following precedents:

In the case of Wiggins Ferry Company v. Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, 142 U. S. 396, 35 L. Ed. 1055, the action was in equity, wherein the Ferry Company claimed under certain deeds and contracts that certain tracks, ties and switches, upon an island in the Mississippi River belonged to it, and that its rights were for reasonable compensation for the use and occupation of the island and for certain property and material removed from it.

The Supreme Court found that the Ferry Company was not entitled to the relief sought in its bill, but that it was entitled to other relief, which relief it had never asked for, but on the contrary, even after a similar finding by a master and a recommendation that such relief be granted it, had refused to act upon such recommendation. The court said:

"When the facts of the case show the plaintiff to have an equitable title for relief, this court, while it may be unable to afford such relief upon the case made by the bill, has in several instances asserted its power to remand the case to the court below for an amendment of the pleadings, and such further proceedings as may be consonant with justice. * * * Rules of pleading are made for the attainment of substantial justice, and are to be construed so as to harmonize with it if possible. A mistaken view of one's rights or remedies should not be permitted wholly to defeat a claim founded upon principles of equity and justice, and if the pleadings can be so amended as to admit proof of such claim, and such amendment does not introduce a new cause of action, though it may set up a new measure of damages, or work a real hardship to the party defendant, it is within the discretion even of the appellate court to permit such amendment to be made."

Accordingly, the decree of the court below was reversed and the case remanded for such proceedings as should be consonant with justice and in conformity with the opinion.

1203 In Goodman v. Niblack, 102 U. S. 556, 26 L. Ed. 229, the bill was fatally defective because of the lack of certain parties defendant. The court said:

"If the decree of the Circuit Court had dismissed the case without prejudice for want of proper parties, we should have been bound to affirm it. But standing as it does now, it is a decision on the merits of the case and a bar to any other suit. It must, therefore, be reversed, and remanded to that court. If the complainant shall ask leave to amend his bill by making Cheever and Wiles, defendants, he should be permitted to do so and proceed with his case. If he does not do this, a decree should be entered dismissing the bill for want of these parties and without prejudice to any other suit on the merits."

In Crockett v. Lee, 7 Wheat, 522, 5 L. Ed. 513, the pleadings were defective in failing to controvert the location and entry of the land in dispute. Though the court expressed itself as being inclined to the opinion that the decrees on the merits were right, still rather than reverse the cases on a question of pleading, it remanded them to the Circuit Court with directions to permit the parties to amend their pleadings.

In Walden v. Bodley, 14 Peters, 156, 10 L. Ed. 398, Bodley had sought an injunction against Walden, the dispute being in respect to the title to certain lands in Kentucky. Walden in his answer stated that he had obtained judgment in an action at law against the complainants who were tenants on the land, and had been a long time delayed by the complainants from obtaining possession. The prayer of his answer was merely for a dissolution of the injunction and that the bill be dismissed, just as here; but the court found that equity and good conscience required that the value of the improvements be estimated, the rents and profits ascertained, as well as any damages that might have been done to the land, and then that an order or decree should be made that the tenants should relinquish possession to Walden. The court said:

"It is true, the answer prays merely for a dissolution of the injunction, and that the bill may be dismissed. But the courts have, by the bill, answer and evidence, the equities of the parties before them; and having jurisdiction of the main points, they may settle the whole matter. A court of equity cannot act upon a case which is not fairly made by the bill and answer. But it is not necessary that these should point out in detail, the means which the court shall adopt in giving relief."

1204 Accordingly, the court affirmed the decrees, with the modification that the circuit court was directed to take such steps in regard to the improvements as the putting of Walden or his representatives in possession of the premises, and should be conformable to the decrees affirmed and the principles of equity.

In Thompson v. Maxwell, 95 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 481, the bill was wrongly conceived and complainants were entitled to no relief under it. The court said:

"But, so far as the present decree undertook to reverse and modify the decree of September, 1866, we think it is clearly erroneous. Still, although we feel obliged to reverse the present decree, we do not think that the bill should be absolutely dismissed. And, as the whole question between the parties has been fully litigated on the proofs, it would be unreasonable to require that these should be taken over again.

Our conclusion is, that the present decree must be reversed, with the costs, and that the cause be remanded to the court below, with directions to allow the complainants to amend their bill as they shall be advised, and with liberty to the defendants to answer any new matter introduced therein; and that all the proofs in the cause shall stand as proofs upon any future hearing thereof, with the liberty to either party to take additional proofs upon any new matter that may be put in issue by the amended pleadings."

In Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756, 28 L. Ed. 1141, the supreme court considered the propriety of the action of the lower court in permitting the complainants, at the hearing, to amend the prayer of their bill so as to obtain relief not before specifically asked. The court held this amendment to be proper, and among the reasons assigned for its ruling stated:

"The amendment had no other effect than to make the bill read just as it might have been originally prepared, consistently with the established rules of equity practice. It suggested no change or modification of its allegations, and in no just sense made a new case. * * * The amendment here did not introduce new allegations, nor make additional parties, nor incumber the record, nor increase the expenses of the litigation, nor complicate the suit, nor make new issues of fact. It simply enabled the court, upon the case made by the original bill, to give the relief which that case — plaintiff. * * * We are of the opinion, for the reason stated, that the amendment of the prayer of the bill was properly allowed."

1205 In Lewis v. Darling, 16 Howard 1, the bill was defective for want of proper parties. The supreme court said:

"As the case stands it is not too late to amend the bill by making the proper parties. The rule in equity, permitting it to be done, is this; that upon the hearing of a cause, even upon an appeal, an order may be made for the cause to stand over, with the liberty to the plaintiff to amend by adding proper parties, if it appears that the plaintiff is entitled to relief, but that it cannot be given for the want of proper parties. The equity of the plaintiff is sufficiently obvious in this case for the application of the rule. The proofs in the case show that she has a strong claim upon the appellant for the payment of the legacy for which she sues him. It is manifest that the legacy has been made by the testator a charge upon both the real and personal estate which he means to give to his daughter. It will not do then to permit it to be defeated in this suit by any mistake or unskillfulness in pleading. We shall then reverse the judgment appealed from in conformity with the first objection made against it. But we will remand the case to the circuit court for further proceedings and for the proper parties to be made."

In Union Central Life Insurance Company v. Phillips, 102 F. 19, 41 C. C. A. 263 (5th Circuit), the insurance company had wrongfully refused to deliver an insurance policy, upon which by a misapprehension as to who the beneficiaries were, a suit at law had been brought by the wrong party. The proper party, after the period of limitation prescribed in the policy, filed a bill in equity to compel the defendant to deliver the policy and for a decree for the amount due thereon. The court found the complainant entitled to equitable relief but not that contemplated in the bill. It therefore ruled as follows:

"In the present instance the variance between the case-made by the evidence and that by the bill is such that the latter requires amendment to support the decree, and under the controlling authorities cited to take such action as will permit such amendments as the equity rules warrant, and as counsel may advise, upon such terms as may be just.

In Hubbard v. Manhattan Trust Company, 87 F. 51, 80 C. C. A. 520 (2nd Circuit), the bill was demurrable on its face for several reasons. A demurrer had been sustained below with leave to to complainants to file an amended bill within thirty days. No amended bill having been filed, the bill was dismissed. Yes 1206 the appellate court in view of the equities stated in the bill, reversed the case and remanded it with directions to allow complainants to amend their bill.

In Street's Federal Equity Practice, Article 1126, it is said:

"In passing on records where the proofs shows an undoubted right to certain equitable relief but where the bill appears not to be so framed as to justify the granting of exactly that relief, the supreme court will sometimes remand the cause to the lower court in order that the bill will be so amended as to permit the relief in question to be granted. The supreme court here acts upon the idea that rules of pleading are made for the attainment of substantial justice and are to be so construed as to harmonize with it, if possible. A mistaken view of one's rights or remedies, it is said, should not be permitted wholly to defeat a claim founded on principles of equity and justice."

In Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 44 L. Ed. 49, after the coming in of all the evidence, the defendant's solicitor moved the trial court for leave to file a supplemental answer, wherein the devolution of the title in question (an Indian title) was differently stated than in the original answer. The new contention was clearly inadmissible under the allegations of the original answer, and the trial court denied leave to file the same. The supreme court said:

"The reasons for denying the motion in this case are *noted stated in the record. They may have been the late stage of the case at which the motion was made, and a failure to satisfy the court that the facts now attempted to be set up were not known, or, at least accessible to the defendant or his solicitor long before. But as this court might, even now, if justice appeared to require it, allow an amendment of the pleadings, this part of the case may be more satisfactorily disposed of by considering what the effect of these facts would have been, had they been duly pleaded."

The early case of Estho v. Lear, 7 Peters, 129 8 L. Ed. 632, is illustrative of the distance to which the court has gone, even from its earlier days, in order to arrive at a decree which should be adequate to the rights of the parties. The case was a bill in equity to contest the will of the celebrated Polish patriot, Kosciuszko, in which Thomas Jefferson was named as executor. Justice Marshall rendered the opinion of the court, and apparently of the court's own motion suggested the inadequacy of the record to disclose the essential facts necessary for a complete determination of the rights of the parties. He stated that "in its opinion the court thought the case was not properly prepared for a decision." It, therefore, directed that the decree be reversed and the cause remanded with liberty to the plaintiff to amend his bill.

1207

In Liverpool, etc., Co. v. Phœnix Insurance Co., 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. Ed. 788, defendant's answer was defective in failing to aver the material facts of the existence of a certain British law and its applicability to the case. Application had been made below for leave to amend the answer in this respect, which had been denied. The Supreme Court said:

"On such a question we should be slow to overrule a decision of the Circuit Court. But we are not prepared to say that if, upon full consideration, justice should appear to require it, we might not do so, and order the case to be remanded to that court with directions to allow the answer to be amended and proof of the foreign law be introduced."

In Moran v. Hagerman, 64 Fed. 499 (C. C. A. 9th), Moran Bros., owning 310 out of 600 railway bonds brought two proceedings in equity—one to foreclose and the other to declare void the residue of the bond issue. In the latter proceeding, it was ultimately held by the Supreme Court that some of the residue were valid bonds and that their holders should share in the security on an equality with Moran Bros. In the meanwhile the property had been sold in the foreclosure suit and bought in by Moran Bros. at the amount of their debt and interest. On the return of the mandate of the Supreme Court the Circuit Court merely decreed, that the other bondholders share in the proceeds of the sale on an equality with Moran Bros. At a subsequent term of the Circuit Court, one of the other bondholders moved for a modification of the decree for an ascertainment of the amounts due him and for judgment against Moran Bros. for the amount, which the Circuit Court granted. The point was made on appeal that this was relief not within the issues of the pleadings, "since the appellees were content to answer the bill denying complainant's equities and filed no cross bill asking for affirmative relief." The court said:

"The petition on the application to amend the decree brought all the necessary facts before the court and for that purpose may be deemed a pleading in the way of a supplemental answer. Under such pleadings the court had the power to decree the relief the defendants were entitled to."

1208

The relief of a judgment against the Southern Company may be rendered upon the answer, if it contains an appropriate prayer and need not be by cross-bill.

Flournoy v. Lastrapes, 25 L. Ed. 406.

In the early case of Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. 54, 1 L. Ed. 507, the court expressed itself as follows:

"It is alleged, damages were not prayed for by the libel. It is sufficient answer, that there is prayer for general relief. And so little do I think of this objection, and so much of the duty of a court, unaided by formal applications, where there is a substantial one, that I am strongly induced to think, if a case proper for a specific relief was laid before a civil law court, and the direct contrary to the proper relief was prayed for, yet the court even in this case would be justified in granting the relief that might be properly afforded, if the party who had committed the mistake consented to it; without that indeed it might be improper, for no court ought to force a benefit on a party unwilling to receive it."

In Clark v. Clark, 62 N. H. 267, the proceeding was in equity to foreclose mortgages. The pleadings are not given, but it appears that the defense was that the mortgages were without consideration. The plaintiffs were in possession, but the answer apparently did not ask for the relief of a decree awarding the defendant possession. The court held the defense good, and said:

"The defendant Tilden is entitled to a decree that the mortgage debts are extinguished; and if he desires it, upon amending his answer and asking for possession of the premises, he can have a decree accordingly."

The case of Trimble v. Bank, 71 Mo. App. 467, though involving a comparatively small amount, was carefully briefed by eminent counsel and was obviously decided after careful consideration by an eminent jurist of Missouri, Judge R. E. Rombauer sitting as special judge in that case. The plaintiff, Trimble, was the owner of certain shares of stock in the defendant bank. His clerk stole the stock and forged his name to an assignment. The defendant, Wollman, a stock broker purchased the stock from the clerk and with the aid of the clerk procured the issue of a new certificate in the name of Wollman. A portion of the proceeds of this sale were recovered from the forger. These proceeds the bank attached and ultimately obtained. Wollman's claim in his pleadings was to 1209 the stock. Although made a party to the attachment proceedings for the proceeds, he had refused to claim the money, nor did he in his pleadings in the reported case make any claim to it. The appellate court found that the plaintiff, Trimble, was entitled to the stock, that the money which was recovered from the forger was in reality Wollman's and that Wollman was equitably entitled to obtain this money back from the bank, notwithstanding that he only made claim to the stock, which claim was held to be unfounded. The court said (l. c. 484):

"This is a case in equity, and if a complete disposition can be made of the entire controversy between the parties, which will do complete equity between them, it is the duty of the court to do so. The fact that the pleadings do not warrant it is no obstacle, since the decree must necessarily be reversed, and may be reversed with directions to permit such an amendment of the pleadings as would warrant a decree in conformity with equity and good conscience, provided always that Wollman is not concluded by his election; that the necessary parties for making a complete disposition of the case are before the court, and that the evidence warrants such a disposition."

After consideration of the question, the court held that Wollman was not bound by his election and said (l. c. 486):

"All the parties necessary to a final decree are before the court. The attachment for the $100 is still pending, and no reason is apparent why Wollman should not interplead in that suit even now, and obtain the money which is clearly his. Or, if the statute of limitations is likely to be interposed to such a plea, there is no reason why the garnishees should not amend their answer reciting the facts and stating that the money is the money of Wollman. Hence no disposition need be made of that action. The judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the lower court to permit the defendant, Wollman, so to amend his cross bill as to pray for the relief herein indicated, and upon his cross bill being thus amended to enter judgment against the bank in his favor for the sum of $487.16, with interest from October 6th, 1891."

The foregoing authorities fully sustain the view that the practice of equity courts under the conditions disclosed in this case, is to remand the case with directions to permit an amendment and render a decree upon the pleadings as amended and the evidence already taken. The present case differs from many of the precedents above quoted, in that the amendment here in question would be merely the amendment of a prayer of the answer, and would not open up any new issuable fact, nor involve the taking of additional testimony, nor the addition of any new parties, but would merely "enable the court upon the case made by the original bill to give the relief which that case justified" (Hardin v. Boyd, supra).

1210

We, therefore most respectfully suggest and urge that this court, in remanding the case, direct the District Court to grant leave to the Guardian Trust Company to amend the prayer of its answer to the amended intervening petition of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, so as to include a specific prayer that the Trust Company recover the amount which the Belt Company owes it from the Southern Company and have execution therefor, or to file the same answer with the formal requisites of a cross bill added and that, upon such amendment, a decree be entered in accordance with such prayer.

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD P. GATES,
GEORGE H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on January 20, 1913.

1211 (Order Granting Leave to Shedd et al. to File Petition for Further Suggestions as to Decree.)

December Term, 1912.

MONDAY, January 20, 1913.

These causes came on to be heard upon the motion of Edward A. Shedd, et al., petitioners, for leave to file "Further Suggestions" as to the form of decree to be entered in these causes in the Court below.

On consideration whereof, it is now here ordered that leave be, and is hereby, granted to file printed copies of said "Further Suggestions" forthwith.

(Order of Reargument of Certain Questions.)

December Term, 1912.

MONDAY, January 20, 1913.

These causes being now called for further hearing in pursuance of an order entered by this Court in these causes on the 22nd day of October, 1912, came on for reargument upon the question of liability and the subsidiary questions as to the stock of the Central Improvement Company.

Whereupon, argument was commenced by Mr. Samuel W. Moore for the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, continued by Mr. Harry S. Mecartney for Edward A. Shedd, et al., Petitioners, by Mr. George H. English, Jr., and Mr. D. J. Haff for the Guardian Trust Company and the Central Improvement Company, and concluded by Mr. Samuel Untermyer in behalf of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

Thereupon, the said questions were submitted and taken under advisement by the court, and the hour for adjournment having arrived the argument of further questions herein was postponed until tomorrow.

(Order of Further Reargument of Certain Questions.)

December Term, 1912.

TUESDAY, January 21, 1913.

1212 The above causes having been called for further hearing, argument upon the questions as to the form of the decree and the value of the property, etc., was commenced by Mr. George H. English, Jr., in behalf of appellants, and the hour for adjournment having arrived further argument on said questions is postponed until tomorrow.

(Appearance of Mr. Delbert J. Haff as Counsel for Appellant in Cause No. 3489.)

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellant.

DELBERT J. HAFF,
Of Counsel.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 22, 1913.

(Appearance of Mr. Harry S. Mecartney as Counsel for Petitioners Shedd et al., in Cause No. 3489.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as additional Counsel for the Petitioners, Edward A. Shedd, Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law.

HARRY S. MECARTNEY.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 22, 1913.

(Appearance of Mr. Delbert J. Haff as Counsel for Appellant in Cause No. 3490.)

No. 3490.

GUARDIA TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al.

The Clerk will enter my appearance as Counsel for the Appellant.

DELBERT J. HAFF,
Of Counsel for Guardian Trust Company.

1213 (Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 22, 1913.

(Appearance of Mr. Harry S. Mecartney as Counsel for Petitioners Shedd et al. in Cause No. 3490.)

The Clerk will enter my appearance as additional Counsel for the Petitioners, Edward A. Shedd, Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law.

HARRY S. MECARTNEY.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 22, 1913.

1214 In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, Appellees.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, et al., Appellees.

Reply to Petition of Edward A. Shedd and Others.

Counsel for Shedd et al. suggest that this litigation was neither instituted nor carried on in good faith, and they petition the Court to find that such was the case, and ask that a new precedent be established by this Court, under which the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the Trust Company may be taxed against the Southern Company.

This charge leveled against counsel instituting and carrying on these proceedings would be robbed of its seriousness if it 1215 were accompanied by the various written and printed attacks of a similar nature, made from time to time by one of the counsel for Shedd et al. against both State and Federal judges, the master, the receiver, the officers of both parties, opposing as well as associate counsel, in fact, against all who have been connected with this case. The charge now made would appear, in the light of these and other numerous effusions of a similar nature, to be more the result of a confirmed habit of indiscriminate vilification and abuse than of a conviction based upon any real or imaginary wrong. Its author obviously belongs to that class of persons who are ever ready to admit that they are always right, no matter how inconsistent or absurd their views may appear to others, and whose vocabulary of invective is quite insufficient to properly characterize those who disagree with them.

First, as to the institution of the accounting proceedings: Aside from the question of the standing and character of the counsel who signed the bill of the Cambria Company (Frank Hagerman and L. C. Krauthoff) as well as the ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers (Thomas R. Morrow and C. W. Lucas) and thereby stood as professional sponsors for the proceedings, it is to be remembered that the accounting between the Belt Company and the Trust Company was provided for by stipulation (Rec. p. 570), signed by Judge Francis M. Black, the receiver of the Trust Company, as well as by Messrs. Trimble & Braley, its regular counsel. This stipulation provided that there should be an accounting upon an ancillary bill to be filed, the Trust Company apparently regarding an accounting between the parties as inevitable and being desirous of speeding it as fast as possible. The ancillary bill of the Belt Company 1216 and its receivers was filed on November 20, 1901, pursuant to the stipulation referred to (Rec., p. 115). After the bill had been filed and the Trust Company and its counsel had had an opportunity to see and examine it, the Trust Company and Judge Black, its receiver, and Messrs. Trimble and Braley, its counsel, desired time, not to demur to the bill, but to file an answer to it, and it was accordingly stipulated (Rec., p. 136), that the time for answering should be extended to December 9, 1901, instead of December 2, 1901, as originally provided in the stipulation.

The answer of the Trust Company to the ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers signed by Judge Black as well as by Messrs. Trimble and Braley, was filed on December 9, 1901, (Rec., p. 137). Exceptions to the answer were filed December 31, 1901 (Rec., p. 184). The exceptions were sustained on April 1, 1902 (Rec., p. 187), and the replication was filed to the Trust Company's answer on April 9, 1902 (Rec., p. 186). Thereupon the taking of testimony began.

Judge Black during his lifetime was an honored member of the bar of this State and for ten years was one of the judges of our Supreme Court. No man in the State stood higher as a citizen of incorruptible integrity. No able lawyer ever practiced at our bar, and no more just and upright judge ever sat upon the bench of the Supreme Court of this State. He, as well as Messrs. Trimble and Braley and the officers of the Trust Company, no less than the officers and counsel of the Belt Company, felt that an account between them was an imperative necessity. The relations between the parties for a period of more than ten years had resulted in complicated and confusing accounts and questionable charges 1217 and counter-charges, caused, it was thought, by common directors and common officers controlling all of the companies and advancing the interest of the Trust Company at the expense of the other companies. Judge Black, as receiver of the Trust Company, felt under obligation to enforce the notes of the Belt Company held by his trust, and he realized the propriety, under the circumstances, of an accounting, and therefore readily assented to it. The charge indulged in by counsel for Shedd et al., as to the institution of these proceedings, is not only an unmerited and unwarranted criticism of living counsel connected with the case at its inception, but is a wanton and unjustifiable attack upon the memory of one of the ablest and most conscientious lawyers of our State.

Next, as to the conduct of the litigation: One of the counsel for Shedd et al. came into this case as counsel of record for the Trust Company in December, 1904. He severed his connection with the Trust Company some four years later, at its request, leaving as a souvenir of his employment an action against it for attorney's fees in a large amount, which is yet pending undetermined. At the time of his advent into the case, some ten thousand pages of testimony had been taken on the accounting issue. If he thought the ancillary bill, which as before stated, had been filed under stipulation with Judge Black and the regular counsel for the Trust Company, was bad on its face, and subject to demurrer, as is now claimed, what excuse can be offered for the failure on his part to at once file a demurrer and have it heard and sustained, and thus end this tedious and expensive litigation? If the bill is bad now, it was certainly bad then, and it was certainly the duty of counsel to stop the proceedings if it was so utterly devoid of merit. But nothing of the kind 1218 was done or attempted under his management of the case. He complacently proceeded with the taking of testimony until twenty-four thousand additional pages had been added to the record. So far from taking steps to end the case, he stipulated in February, 1905 (Rec., pp. 191-193), that the Southern Company should come into the suit as an intervenor, and again at the close of all of the evidence on July 2, 1906 (Rec., pp. 541-545), he stipulated for the filing of a second amended and supplemental ancillary bill of complaint, the filing of an answer thereto, and the withdrawal of objections to certain depositions, exhibits, etc.

The question arises as to how much good faith there is back of the charge of bad faith. Does not the charge of bad faith in the institution and prosecution of this litigation come with poor grace from one who should have put an end to the waste of time and substance, or at least have made an effort to do so, if he had entertained an honest conviction that the bill was bad on its face, or that the litigation was oppressive or vexatious. Should he not, in his generous distribution of criticism, apply some of it to himself? If the Trust Company could have stopped the litigation eight years ago, as is now insisted, is it in any position to impose upon the Southern Company, or upon anyone, the expense of attorneys' fees or other costs imposed by the willful neglect or oversight of its counsel?

We cordially invite the Court to scan the record in the case, the report of the Master, or any other proceedings, to ascertain if there is anything to criticise either in the institution of the litigation or its conduct thereafter. It is true there was a contest over the forum in which the liability issue should be determined, we insist-1219 ing that it should be determined in the Federal Court in this case, and endeavoring to maintain our position by injunction under supplemental bills, the Trust Company contending just as strenuously for a decision of the issue in the state court, and insisting upon trial of its cases there. Each party was well within its rights in endeavoring to confine a decision of the liability issue to the forum of its preference, and neither is subject to criticism therefor. This court held that we were wrong in our injunctions, and this court also held that the Trust Company was wrong in its effort to eliminate the liability issue from the proceedings in this case in the lower court, as well as in this court.

The master, in the main, found the accounting issue in favor of the Trust Company. We filed exceptions to this finding before the master and in the lower court, and they were overruled. We did not take an appeal from that issue because the appeal taken by the Trust Company did not question the correctness of the finding of the master or the decree of the lower court on the liability issue, but sought only to eliminate that issue from the case. The master found that the Trust Company had dominated and controlled the affairs of the Belt Company, but not to such an extent as to warrant opening up the accounts after the lapse of so much time, and the defense of laches interposed by the Trust Company was sustained. Whether the master, and the lower court in affirming the master were right or not, is a serious question. Perhaps we should have prosecuted a cross-appeal, but the enormous labor and expense involved in testing this question in the Appellate Court were not justified, in our judgment, in view of our belief that the liability issue was properly 1220 in the case and properly decided, and that the Appellate Court would so hold, as well as our belief that we were justly entitled to the properties of the Central Company, and that the ruling of the lower court in this respect would be affirmed upon appeal.

It is further contended by counsel for Shedd et al. that the Southern Company is not acting in good faith in resisting liability for the obligations of the Belt Company, and that the expense of counsel fees and other costs in that litigation should also be taxed against the Southern Company. We regard this contention as too absurd and childish to merit any consideration whatsoever.

SAMUEL UNTERMYER,
SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Solicitors for the Southern Company.

1221 STATE OF MISSOURI,
City of St. Louis, ss:

Samuel W. Moore, of lawful age, being duly sworn upon his oath, states:

I am now, and for many years have been, a member of the law firm of Lathrop, Morrow, Fox & Moore of Kansas City, Missouri, and have been in charge of the legal business of The Kansas City Southern Railway at Kansas City, Missouri, as its general solicitor, for the past ten years. I am familiar with the case of Cambria Steel Company v. Kansas City, Suburban Belt Railroad Company et al., now pending in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, Missouri, having had charge of the interests of the Southern Company, as well as of the Belt Company and its receiver, in that litigation, since early in the year 1905.

Mr. H. S. Mecartney and his assistant, Mr. Jules C. Rosenberger, succeeded Messrs. Trimble & Braley as attorneys for the Guardian Trust Company in this cause in December, 1904. At that time some 8,000 or 10,000 pages of testimony upon the accounting feature of the case had been taken.

On February 7th, 1905 (Rec., p. 191), I stipulated with Mr. Mecartney to make the Southern Company a party to the proceeding to test its right to the collateral held by the Trust Company, the order therefor being made on February 27th, 1905 (Rec., p. 194), and the intervening petition of the Southern Company being filed on the same day (Rec., p. 194), and answered by the Trust Company on March 7th, 1905 (Rec., p. 217).

Very soon after Mr. Mecartney assumed charge of the case for the Trust Company he complained to the Master that the 1222 ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers was too general, and that it did not point out specific matters with sufficient definiteness, and it was accordingly arranged between counsel and the Master—in reality by agreement, although the record does not so recite—that I should prepare and file an amended ancillary bill for the Belt Company and its receivers, surcharging and falsifying in accordance with equity practice. This I did, filing the same on March 22nd, 1905 (Rec., p. 236), having to go through all the testimony taken, and other records, for the purpose of preparing the bill, as I had not been familiar with the case before taking charge of it, except in the most general way. Neither Mr. Mecartney nor any one else filed any demurrer to the bill, or even suggested that one should be filed. The Trust Company answered the amended ancillary bill on June 1st, 1905 (Rec., p. 362).

Mr. Mecartney and I agreed from the first that the taking of testimony should be expedited in every way possible, to the end that there should be a speedy hearing and decision. He put his assistant Mr. Rosenberger, in charge of the taking of testimony, and I assigned my assistant, Mr. Marks, to the same duty. There were a number of unnecessary delays. On one occasion the Trust Company refused to produce its books upon an order made by the Master, and appealed to the Circuit Court, which affirmed the ruling of the Master, resulting in a delay of a number of weeks. On another occasion I tried to agree with Mr. Mecartney that some long complicated statements compiled by Mr. H. B. Johnson, the auditor of the Southern Company, in narrative form, covering the history of the Central Improvement properties, should go in as his 1223 direct examination, reserving to him the right to cross-examine, but he declined to agree to this, and as a result considerable time was unnecessarily consumed in getting these facts into the record by question and answer.

The testimony, now amounting to 34,000 pages, had been completed some months before July 2nd, 1906, on which date a stipulation was entered into (Rec., p. 541), providing that the Belt Company and its receiver should file a second amended ancillary bill of complaint, which had been prepared, to conform to the proof in some minor particulars, and that the Trust Company should file its answer thereto, which had also been prepared, within ten days thereafter, all of which was done.

The case was argued before the Master in July, 1906. The argument had been delayed for some months for various causes, sometimes at my request and some ti-es at the instance of the Trust Company, and once to enable the parties in New York to get together and try to work out a settlement, which, however, failed of consummation. The argument consumed two weeks and was participated in by Mr. Mecartney, Mr. Rosenberger, Mr. Marks and myself.

Mr. Marks, under my direction, prepared and filed with the Master a most excellent abstract of all the evidence, covering each allegation of the bill and intervening petition and the evidence relating thereto, and a reference to the volume and page of the record. This required months of the most arduous labor. Neither Mr. Mecartney nor any one else for the Trust Company ever prepared and filed an abstract or abridgment of the record to aid the Master or the lower court. The Master made his report and filed it in court in 1224 May, 1910. All parties filed exceptions, which were heard and disposed of by the lower court, and a final decree was rendered June 25th, 1910.

During the course of this litigation, and particularly after its submission to the Master in July, 1906, Mr. Mecartney made many bitter and uncalled for attacks on the Court, the Master, the receiver of the Central Company, and opposing counsel. On one occasion he prepared and his associate sought to file in the Circuit Court when this case was pending, a motion supported by his affidavit, which the Court considered so scandalous and abusive that he ordered it stricken from the files and to be sealed up and lodged in the safe in the office of the clerk. Afterwards Mr. Mecartney prepared another printed effusion which he proposed to file in the same court, which was so highly abusive and outrageous that the officers of the Trust Company intervened, as I am informed, and dispensed with his further services in the cause. He thereupon filed suit against the Trust Company for attorney's fees which is still undetermined. Mr. Mecartney represented the Trust Company in an action for attorney's fees brought by Messrs. Trimble and Braley, reputable attorneys of Kansas City, Missouri, and file- a counter-claim, in a large amount, charging them with malpractice and incompetency, which the referee found to be untrue. Mr. Mecartney wrote a long libelous letter to Mr. Samuel Untermyer, General Counsel of the Southern Company, complaining of my conduct in this cause. He has written, I am informed, a similar letter or letters, to the directors of the Trust Company abusing Mr. John A. Prescott, a gentleman of high character and standing, who has had charge of the affairs of the Trust Company for some years.

1225 I deny most emphatically that this litigation has been oppressive to the Trust Company, or that it has been carried on in bad faith. On the contrary, it is my opinion that the litigation against the Trust Company was properly instituted and properly carried on to a conclusion. My own view was that we should prosecute a cross-appeal from the decree of the lower court on the accounting issue, but this was abandoned finally, largely for the reason that the Trust Company did not except to the correctness of the Master's finding on the liability issue, and did not assign the action of the lower court thereon as error in this court. I firmly believe that the Trust Company, by its community of directors and officers, whose allegiance to the Trust Company was the greater, imposed upon the Belt Company, in a legal sense, to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and that the defense of laches or limitations, which was sustained by the Master, was of a very doubtful application in view of the relations of the parties. I personally secured the signature of Judge Black to the stipulation providing for an accounting (Rec., p. 115). He said that he was willing to have an accounting between the Trust Company and the Belt Company—in fact, if we did not ask for one he would sue on the notes of the Trust Company against the Belt Company, and that he realized that if he did so we would answer, insisting on an accounting. He said that he would insist that the Belt Company itself should be a party complainant in the bill—the original bill had been in the name of its receivers alone—with a provision that if the balance on the accounting should be in favor of the Trust Company, it should be entered up as a judgment against the Belt Company, as well as against the receivers. He explained this by saying 1226 that if he obtained a judgment against the Belt Company he thought he could collect it from the stockholders of that company, as he was informed that its stock was not all paid up, and that there would be a stockholders' liability. The stipulation was prepared to meet his views, the Belt Company being made a party to it, and it being provided that judgment should be rendered against the Belt Company, if the balance should be against it, and he signed it.

SAMUEL W. MOORE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of January, 1913.

JOHN D. JORDAN,
Clerk U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

[Endorsed:] Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on January, 22, 1913.

1227 (Order of Submission With Leave to File Further Briefs.)

December Term, 1912.

WEDNESDAY, January 22, 1913.

The above causes having been called for further hearing upon the questions as to the form of the decree and the value of the property, etc., argument was resumed by Mr. George H. English, Jr., in behalf of the appellants and concluded by Mr. Sampel W. Moore in behalf of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and said questions were submitted to the Court.

Thereupon, the question of the taxation of certain costs in the trial court was brought on for hearing and was argued by Mr. Harry S. Mecartney in support of and in behalf of the suggestions by Edward A. Shedd, et al., petitioners, and by Mr. Sampel W. Moore in behalf of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, opposing, and this question was then submitted to the Court.

Thereupon it was ordered by the Court that Counsel for appellants have leave to file further briefs in these causes within twenty days from and after this date with like leave to counsel for the Kansas City Southern Railway Company to file further briefs herein within twenty days thereafter.

(Order Declining to Receive Further Briefs of Shedd et al., Petitioners.)

December Term, 1912.

TUESDAY, April 8, 1913.

In these causes it appearing that counsel for Shedd et al., Petitioners, have prepared and tendered additional briefs in behalf of the Petitioners after the time limited by the former order of this Court for the filing of further briefs herein, it is now here ordered by this Court that the reception of said briefs be, and is hereby, declined and the Clerk of this Court is directed to notify counsel for all parties herein of this order.

April 8, 1913.

1228 (Opinion of December 2, 1913, as Modified by Order of January 22, 1914.)

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit, December Term, A. D. 1913.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY et al., Appellant,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

No. 3490.

December Term, A. D. 1913.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,

vs.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY et al., Appellees.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

Mr. George H. English, Jr., and Mr. D. J. Haff (Mr. Edward P. Gates and Mr. E. C. Meservey, on the brief), for Guardian Trust Company.

Mr. Frank Hagerman, for Cambria Steel Company.

Mr. Samuel Untermyer and Mr. Samuel W. Moore, for Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

Mr. Newell H. Clapp, Mr. Enoch J. Price and Mr. Harry S. Mecartney, for Edward A. Shedd, and others.

Before Sanborn, Circuit Judge, and Marshall and William H. Munger, District Judges.

PER CURIAM:

The paramount issue in these cases is, Did the Southern Company become liable to pay the unsecured debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company by participating in the execution of a scheme whereby it acquired the title to the property of the Belt Com-1229 pany, deprived its creditor, the Trust Company, of recourse thereto by execution to collect its claim and yet reserved to itself and other stockholders of the Belt Company an equity in its property and a benefit therefrom more valuable than the amount of the Trust Company's claim? After exhaustive arguments and briefs and a review of the master's report on which this case came to this court the conclusion was reached that this question should be answered in the affirmative. This question had been at issue between the Trust Company and the Southern Company in this suit and in actions at law in the state courts for many years. The prosecution of those actions had been repeatedly enjoined and delayed by orders of the court below and those orders had been as often reversed by this court. While the pleadings of the parties squarely presented the issue, while this issue had been litigated strenuougsly in this suit the Trust Company had not in any of its pleadings made a specific prayer for a decree for the payment of its claim by the Southern Company, nor for the seizure or sale to pay it of the property of the Belt Company which the Southern Company had taken. The question had been suggested by three of the stockholders of the Trust Company whether or not, in view of the long delay, this court could or should direct an entry of a decree for such relief in these cases rather than to leave that relief to be granted upon trials of the cases in the state court, and as this question had not been argued counsel for all the parties were permitted to be heard upon it. That hearing developed into a re-argument of all the salient issues in the cases and at the close of that hearing they were taken under advisement by the court. It is the purpose now to state the conclusions at which we have arrived after another consideration of the issues presented.

The history of this litigation, the issues and many of the facts found by the master are set forth in our former opinion. Central Improvement Co. v. Cambria Steel Co., 201 Fed. 811, 120 C. C. A. 121.

(1) From all the facts pertinent to the issue which are set forth in many printed pages of his report, the master deducted this decisive conclusion. "That the Southern Company is not liable in any way for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company." To this conclusion the Trust Company excepted on the ground that in view of other conclusions which the master reached adverse to it it was unnecessary for him to determine that issue. A considera-
1230 tion after argument of all the facts relating to this issue which the master found in his report convinced this court that the conclusion lawfully deducible from them was that the Southern Company was liable to pay to the Trust Company the debt which the Belt Company owed it. Counsel for the Southern Company now insist that his court was without power to consider or correct this conclusion of the master which the court below followed, and that the Trust Company must suffer the loss of this amount because its counsel did not state in its exception that the conclusion was wrong on the merits of the issue. They invoke the conceded general rule that where no exception is taken to the master's report it will be deemed to be true and where exceptions to parts of it are taken the parts to which no exception is taken will stand as correct and will not be open to review in an appellate court. Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449; Provident Life & Trust Co. v. Railway Co., 177 Fed. 854, 859. But this rule, like most rules of law or practice, is not without its exceptions. In Sheffield, etc. Ry. Co. v. Gordon, 151 U. S. 285, 291, the Supreme Court, while holding the exceptions in that case insufficient to present the questions argued, said: "It is true that if the report of the master is clearly erroneous in any particular it is within the discretion of the court to correct the error, but we see no occasion for exercising such discretion in this case." In 2 Daniell's Chancery Pleading and Practice, at page 1314, it is said that it is entirely discretionary with the court to grant an opportunity to except to a report after it has been absolutely confirmed. Counsel also claim that by the Trust Company's exception they were induced to forego a review of the finding of the master that the Belt Company was indebted to the Trust Company and that thereby an equitable estoppel from reviewing the issue of the liability of the Southern Company was created. But suits in chancery are tried and reviewed in view of the fact that a court of equity has and frequently exercises the power where justice may thereby be done, to grant to litigants the right remedy although they have sought the wrong one. Clark v. Clark, 62 N. H. 267, 272; Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio & Mississippi Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 414, 415, 416; Bradford v. Bank, 13 How. 56, 69, 70; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. 156, 164; Moran v. Hagerman, 64 Fed. 499, 503, 504. As an appeal in equity in the federal courts results in a trial de novo the appellate court is not, in our opinion, so powerless that it is compelled to affirm an unjust decree, nor is 1231 the appellant so conclusively estopped that it may not attack such a decree by the fact that it gave a wrong reason for its exception to the erroneous conclusion of the master it assails.

Moreover, the conclusion here challenged was a mere deduction from the facts disclosed in the master's report and where it appears on the face of the report that the master has drawn an erroneous conclusion from the facts he found, the absence of an exception does not disable the court from correcting the error and entering a just final decree. 2 Daniell's Chancery Pleading and Practice, * page 1310; 17 Encyc. of Pleading and Practice, 1048; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Cellonite Mfg. Co., 40 Fed. 476, 477; Burke v. Davis, 81 Fed. 907, 910, 26 C. C. A. 675, 678; Haymond v. Murphy, 64 S. E. (W. V.) 855, 857; Hayes v. Hammond, 44 N. E. (Ill.) 422, 423; Hurd v. Goodrich, 59 Ill. 450, 456; Von Tobel v. Ostrander, 42 N. E. (Ill.) 152, 153. The contention that the Trust Company was estopped from seeking a correction of this error and that this court was powerless to correct it does not seem to be well founded, and this court is unwilling to affirm what it deems an unjust decree on account of the defect in the exception.

(2) It is conceded that by the transaction described in the former opinion of this court and deemed by it violative of the rights of the Trust Company, a creditor of the Belt Company, if that transaction be valid, was deprived of legal recourse to the property of the Belt Company to obtain payment of that company's debt to the Trust Company of about $360,000. At that time the Southern Company by an exchange of its stock and bonds for the stock and bonds of the Belt Company, and by a formal foreclosure by itself, as holder of about 89 per cent of its bonds, by means of its representative, the Provident Company, trustee for the bondholders, against and with the consent of itself as the holder of about 97 per cent of its stock, and by a foreclosure sale of the property of the Belt Company to itself obtained the title to the Belt Company's property to itself, the bondholders of the Belt Company secured about $1,330,000 par value of the bonds and $250,000 of the preferred stock of the Southern Company, aggregating at their par value $1,580,000 for their $1,000,000 par value of bonds of the Belt Company, and the stockholders of the Belt Company secured for their $4,750,000
1232 par value of the stock of that company about $1,187,500 par value of the perferred stock and about $3,562,500 par value of the common stock, in all about $4,750,000 par value of the stock of the Southern Company.

The following propositions of law are deemed incontestable: "A reorganization of an insolvent railroad company, by which both its mortgage bondholders and its stockholders, in exchange for their bonds and stocks, are given an interest in the new company, which purchases the property of the old company at a foreclosure sale made pursuant to such plan of reorganization and by the consent of the old company and its stockholders, is fraudulent in law as to unsecured creditors of the old company whose claims are left unpaid, and renders the new company liable for the claims of such creditors, at least to the extent of the value of the interest in the new company secured by the stockholders of the old company." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 177 Fed. 804, 101 C. C. A. 18; Luedecke v. Des Moines Cabinet Co., 118 N. W. 456, 140 Ia. 223; Hurd v. New York & Commercial Steam Laundry Co., 167 N. Y. 89, N. E. 327.

Where such a transaction is consummated without offering to the unsecured creditor a fair share of the benefits to be derived from the vesting of the title in the purchaser at the foreclosure sale, the intent or purpose to deprive him of recourse to the property to collect his debt becomes immaterial and the fact that it has that effect charges the purchaser with liability. "As against him the sale is void in equity, regardless of the motive with which it was made. For if such contract reorganization was consummated in good faith and in ignorance of the existence of the creditor, yet when he appeared and established his debt the subordinate interest of the old stockholders would still be subject to his claim in the hands of the reorganized company." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482, 502. "For, if purposely or unintentionally a single creditor was not paid or provided for by the reorganization, he could assert his superior rights against the subordinate rights of the old stockholders in the property transferred to the new company. They (the stockholders of the old company) were in the position of insolvent debtors who could not reserve an interest as against creditors. Their original contribution to the capital stock was subject to the payment of debts. The property was a trust fund charged primarily with the payment of corporate liabilities. Any device whether by private contract or judicial sale under consent decree whereby 1233 stockholders were preferred before the creditors was invalid. Being bound by the debts, the purchase of their property, by their new company, for their benefit, put the stockholders in the position of a mortgagor buying at his own sale. If they did so in good faith and in ignorance of Boyd's claim they were none the less bound to recognize his superior right in the property when years later his contingent claim was liquidated and established." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 505. "No such proceedings can be rightfully carried to consummation which recognize and preserve any interest in the stockholders without also recognizing and preserving the interests, not merely of the mortgagee but of every creditor of the corporation. * * * Any arrangement of the parties by which the subordinate rights and interests of the stockholders are attempted to be secured at the expense of prior rights of either class of creditors comes within judicial denunciation." Louisville Trust Co. v. Louisville etc. Ry. Co., 174 U. S. 674, 683, 684.

The transaction in hand, if valid, had the effect to deprive the creditors of the Belt Company of and to secure to the stockholders of that company out of its property the value of $1,187,500 par value of the preferred stock and $3,562,500 par value of the common stock of the Southern Company, and upon its face it seems to fall within the denunciation of these rules of law.

But counsel for the Southern Company argue that although the completed transaction has the effect of an illegal proceeding it is not such because it is composed of two independent and valid transactions, to-wit: (1) the organization in March, 1900, of the Southern Company and the exchange of the bonds and stock of the Belt Company for the bonds and stock of the Southern Company, so that by April 1, 1900, the latter had acquired 97 per cent of the stock and 89 per cent of the bonds of the Belt Company, and the taking possession of the property of the Belt Company by the Southern Company by virtue of its ownership of these bonds and stock on April 1, 1900, when it filled the offices of the Belt Company with its chosen agents and proceeded to control and operate it, and (2) the filing on September 6, 1900, by the Provident Trust Company, the trustee in the Belt mortgage, at the instance of the Southern Company, the owner of 89 per cent of the bonds, of the bill to foreclose the mortgage of the Belt Company, 97 per cent of whose stock was owned by the Southern Company, the appearance and consent of the 1234 Belt Company on the same day to the appointment of receivers of its property, its answer on October 19, 1901, admitting the material averments of the bill, the decree on November 6, 1901, of foreclosure and sale of the Belt property and the sale thereof on December 31, 1901, under this decree to the Southern Company the owner of nearly all its bonds and stock. The contention is that while the former transaction was the result of the scheme of reorganization, the latter was independent and free from the influence thereof, and that each of these transactions taken by itself, as counsel insist they should be, is free from any just objection by any creditor of the Belt Company.

The plan of reorganization was made November 7, 1899, and it became effective December 20, 1899. This plan was made a part of the reorganization agreement and it stated that it was expected and intended that the property of the Gulf Company would be purchased by the reorganization committee, that a successor of the company would be organized to which this property and the stocks and bonds of the Belt Company deposited under the plan would be conveyed, that all this property was to be made subject to the mortgage of the new company and that it was "intended, as soon as practicable, that the new company acquire the property of the terminal companies in fee and bring them directly under the lien of the mortgage." It was then one of the objects of the scheme of reorganization which the committee and the Southern Company, which it organized, were empowered and expected to carry into effect, that the latter company should acquire the property of the Belt Company "in fee" and bring it "directly under the lien of the mortgage," and the acquisition of the stocks and bonds of that company and their pledge under that mortgage were but the means to the accomplishment of this end which the plan contemplated.

It is conceded that the organization of the Southern Company, its purchase of the Gulf Company property, its exchange of its stocks and bonds for those of the Belt Company, and its possession and control of its property on April 1, 1900, by means of its ownership of this stock, were steps in the execution of the scheme. But the reorganization committee did not cease its work until October 1, 1900, and before that date the Southern Company by its representative, the Provident Company, had, on September 6, 1900, commenced the suit to foreclose the Belt mortgage and to put its property in the hands of receivers and had caused the Belt Company to consent to the receivership. For what purpose did the 1235 Southern Company take these steps? It had the possession and absolute control of the Belt property by its ownership of 89 per cent of its bonds and 97 per cent of its stock. A default on its bonds was in reality a default of itself to itself. Foreclosure could give it no more power over the Belt Company than it already had. For what purpose then was the foreclosure? Evidently to carry out the reorganization agreement, as it was within the power and as it was the duty of the committee and of that company, its creature, to do, to acquire the property of the Belt Company in fee and bring it directly under the lien of the mortgage. Why did the Southern Company exchange its stock for the stock of the Belt Company? Was it not for the purpose of silencing the opposition of the Belt stockholders to the coming foreclosure, and to its acquisition of the fee of the Belt Company's property, and was not the scheme of reorganization the primary cause, the vesting of the fee of the Belt property in the Southern Company by the foreclosure the object and effect of that scheme and the exchange of the stock and the foreclosure of the Belt mortgage the means contemplated and authorized by that scheme to attain that end? To the minds of the members of this court the record in this case leaves no alternative but to answer these questions in the affirmative.

Moreover, the property of the Belt Company was a trust fund. The stockholders of that company were trustees charged with the duty to apply that property to the payment of the claims of the trust company and of the other creditors of the Belt Company before they took to themselves any share in or benefit therefrom. When the Southern Company took their stock and gave them $4,750,000 par value of its stocks and bonds for their interest in the property of the Belt Company, it stepped into their shoes and became a trustee for the creditors of the Belt Company with plenary notice that the interest of those creditors in the property was at least as much as the value of the stocks and bonds it was giving for the interest of the stockholders, for the rights of the creditors in the Belt property were prior and superior to those of the stockholders. By virtue of the plan of reorganization the Southern company had become such trustee. The agreement of reorganization and its ownership of 89 per cent of the bonds and 97 per cent of the stock of the Belt Company gave the committee and the Southern Company unrestricted power to discharge its duty to the creditors of 1236 the Belt Company, as their trustee, and to accomplish the object of the agreement regarding this property, the vesting of the fee of it in the Southern Company. They had the power to attain this object in a just and lawful way, to pay, to buy or to compromise the claims of the creditors, or to offer them a just share in the benefits of the reorganization, a share at least as valuable as that given to the stockholders. They did neither, but in the face of the danger signal that "any arrangement of the parties by which the subordinate rights and interests of the stockholders are attempted to be secured at the expense of the prior rights of either class of creditors comes within judicial denunciation," the Southern Company proceeded by a foreclosure caused by itself, the owner of 89 per cent of the bonds, trustee for the creditors, really against and with the consent of itself as such trustee, owner of 97 per cent of the stock, to obtain against the protest of the Trust Company, whom the court expressly excepted in the decree from its effect, a foreclosure decree and sale of this property in effect by itself as trustee to itself as trustee, and thenceforth to insist that it had thereby secured to itself and deprived its cestuis que trust, the creditors of the Belt Company, of all interest in the property. In view of the fact that the acquisition of the fee of the Belt property by the Southern Company was stated in the reorganization plan and agreement to be one of their intended results, that this result has been obtained, that the exchange of the stocks and bonds were the means specified therein to attain it, and were the means by which the consent decree of foreclosure and sale of the Belt property to the Southern Company was effected, and that this foreclosure and sale were the means by which the intended result of the plan of acquisition of the fee of the Belt properties by the Southern Company was secured, this court is unwilling to hold that the validity of these proceedings can be sustained against the rule that "any device whether by private contract or judicial sale under consent decree whereby stockholders were preferred before the creditors was invalid." 228 U. S. 504, by contemplating or treating them as two separate and independent transactions, one consisting of that part of the proceedings conducted before and the other of that part of the proceedings conducted after April 2, 1900. They appear to this court to constitute a single transaction instituted, conducted and consummated pursuant to the preconceived plan to vest the fee of the properties of the Belt Company in the Southern Company and to bring them directly under the lien of its mortgage.

1237 (3) Counsel for the Southern Company contend that the Trust Company is entitled to no favorable decree for the payment of the liability of the Southern Company to it and to no affirmative relief because it did not obtain a judgment against the Belt Company and a return of nulla bona to an execution before it presented its claim and demanded relief. But that is an objection only to the jurisdiction of a national court in equity of an original and independent bill to charge a fraudulent trustee. A claim of the nature of that made by the Trust Company in the absence of judgment or execution may be presented by intervention in a foreclosure suit and may there, or in any other suit wherein the court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties, be adindicated. Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & Iron Co., 150 U. S. 371, 379. The objection is not tenable here because the decision of the question of the liability of the Southern Company to the Trust Company became, as conceded by counsel for the Southern Company, necessary to the disposition of this case, 201 Fed. 817, to which the Trust Company was originally made a defendant against its will. This is now a suit in equity in which the court below and this court have full jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties to the controversy regarding this liability, and under a familiar and salutary rule the power is conferred and the duty is imposed upon a court of equity, which has acquired such jurisdiction, to consider and determine all the rights and claims of the parties relating to the subject-matter and to enter a decree that will finally determine them to the end that a multiplicity of suits may be avoided and litigation may cease. Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 342, 358; Sunflower Oil Co. v. Wilson, 142 U. S. 313, 325; Ward v. Todd, 103 U. S. 327, 329; In re Blake, 150 Fed. 279, 283, 80 C. C. A. 167, 173; United States v. Standard Oil Company, 152 Fed. 290, 296; Campbell v. Golden Cycle Mining Co., 141 Fed. 610, 614, 73 C. C. A. 260, 264.

It is contended that the remedy of the Trust Company is limited to a pursuit of the stockholders of the Belt Company who exchanged their stock for the stock of the Southern Company. But the liability of those stockholders is founded on their relation as trustees for the creditors of the corporation. The Southern Company with full notice of their and its liability and duty to the creditors of the Belt Company by the exchange of stock became such a trustee, and by as much as its power over the property of the Belt Company by its ownership of nearly all its bonds, as well as stock, was 1238 greater than that of the former stockholders, by so much was its duty to protect the rights and interests of its cestuis que trust, the creditors, higher and more imperative. It owed them the duty to exercise good faith, care and diligence to secure and deliver to them their full equitable share of the property or the value of that share. Any sale or conveyance of the property to itself whereby they were deprived of and it secured that share, or its value, was a breach of duty and of trust which invokes plenary relief from a court of chancery, and as by its formal foreclosure sale to itself of the property of the Belt Company it took to itself and deprived the creditors of their equitable interest in the property and of the value of that interest it is not less liable in equity for this breach of trust than were the stockholders with whom it exchanged its stock. The duty and liability of the majority stockholders to minority stockholders is not less than this, Jones v. Missouri Edison Electric Co., 144 Fed. 765, 771, and cases there cited, and their duty to creditors whose equitable rights and interests in the property of the corporation are superior to those of stockholders cannot be less.

Moreover, where the property of a corporation is sold to a purchaser and part or all of the purchase price thereof is paid or distributed to its stockholders to the exclusion of its creditors from a collection of their debts from the property of the corporation, the letter may recover that part of its value from the purchaser with notice, on the ground that the conveyance is fraudulent in law, Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Paul, 93 Fed. 878, 882, 884; Luedecke v. Des Moines Cabinet Co., 118 N. W. 456, 457; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis & N. O. Trans. Co., 13 Fed. 516; Grenell v. Detroit Gas Co., 70 N. W. (Mich.) 413; Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482, and the fact must be constantly borne in mind in the consideration of this case, that as against the Trust Company the entire transaction was in effect that the Southern Company knowingly purchased and took to itself without even a formal foreclosure the property of the Belt Company and paid the latter's stockholders the value of $4,750,000 of its stock therefor the exclusion of the Belt Company's creditors therefrom, for by the express provision of the foreclosure decree the Trust Company was excepted from all its effects.

Another argument is that the Trust Company is entitled to no relief because the equitable interest of the creditors in the property of the Belt Company was of no value. This contention is 1239 founded on the findings of the master that there was no direct testimony of the fair value of the Belt Company's property at or before the time of the foreclosure, no proof that it was worth more than the $1,000,000 for which it was sold at the foreclosure sale, and therefore that it was sold at its fair market value. The mortgage was $1,000,000 and the deduction is that the equitable interest of the creditors was valueless. But the crucial issue here was not what the fair market value of the mortgaged property was, nor was it how much more the mortgaged property was worth than the amount of the mortgage. Although evidence upon these subjects would have been competent in the consideration of the real issue here in the absence of an estoppel, that issue was, what was the equitable interest of the creditors in the mortgaged property of the Belt Company worth during the execution of the scheme and immediately after the foreclosure sale and the appropriation of it thereby by the Southern Company, the trustee for the creditors, to itself, for a trustee who violates his trust may not profit thereby. Ervin v. Oregon Railway & Navigation Co., 27 Fed. 625, 633; Jones v. Missouri Edison Electric Co., 144 Fed. 765, 779. The creditors were entitled to the highest value their interest had during this time, either for the purpose of sale or for the purpose of preventing a foreclosure of the mortgage upon the Belt property, or for the purpose of compromising their claims or conditioning the foreclosure, or for the purpose of the present or future control of the property. "If the value of the road justified the issuance of stock in exchange for old shares, the creditors were entitled to the benefit of that value, whether it was present or prospective, for dividends or only for purposes of control. In either event it was a right of property out of which the creditors were entitled to be paid before the stockholders could retain it for any purpose whatever." Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 508.

The report of the master discloses other facts than that he received no direct evidence of the fair market value of the property except the bid at the foreclosure sale, which leave no doubt that the equitable interest of the creditors was worth much more than the amount of the Trust Company's claim, $360,000. That report shows that the Southern Company paid $1,330,000 of its bonds and $250,000 of its preferred stock, or $1,580,000 of its new bonds and stock for the $1,000,000 of the old bonds of the Belt Company.

The fact to which counsel call attention, that the new bonds 1240 drew but there per cent interest per annum while the old bonds drew five per cent, has not been over-looked. But even so, the reorganization committee and the Southern Company would not have given for these old bonds a bonus of 33 per cent in new bonds and $250,000 in the stock of the Southern Company unless the old bonds had been well secured. The master's report also shows that the Southern Company gave $1,187,500 of its preferred stock and $3,562,500 of its common stock to the stockholders of the Belt Company for their equitable interest in the property of that company, that at the same time stockholders of the Gulf Company paid, and the Southern Company received, ten dollars per share in cash and an equal number of shares of the stock of the Gulf Company for tens of thousands of shares of the Southern Company's common stock. That stock must, therefore, have been worth at least the ten dollars cash per share which was paid for it, and it was worth as much more as the value of the stock of the Gulf Company. The preferred stock of the Southern Company could not have been worth less than its common stock. The Southern Company, therefore, paid in value at least $475,000 for the equitable interest of the stockholders of the Belt Company in its property when it gave them $4,750,000 of its preferred and common stock for their stock in that company. But the equitable interest of the creditors in the property of the Belt Company was superior to that of the stockholders and its value could not have been less, and was undoubtedly greater, than the $475,000. That interest was, therefore, worth more than enough to have paid the $360,000 which the Belt Company owed to the Trust Company and the Southern Company cannot escape liability on the ground that it was worthless. The fact that at the foreclosure sale, where there was no competition, the Belt Company was bid in at $1,000,000 fails to disprove or to even render doubtful this conclusion, and the Southern Company which gave $4,750,000 of its full paid stock, which it was readily selling for ten dollars cash per share, and Gulf stock of equal amount, for the inferior stock of the Belt Company, cannot be heard to say that the superior equity of the creditors therein was worthless. Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 508; Rankin v. Gardner, 34 Atl. (N. J. Eq.) 935, 937; Garrison v. Monaghan, 33 Pa. St. 232, 234.

Deliberate consideration has been given to the earnest objection to the consideration by this court of the question of the value of this equitable interest of the creditors in the Belt property on 1241 the ground that the master found that there was no direct evidence that the property of the Belt Company was worth more than $1,000,000 and hence that this was its fair value, that no exception was taken to that finding and that the evidence is not here. But because the finding of the fair market value of the mortgaged property is not conclusive of the value of the creditors' equity therein and because other facts and findings contained in the master's report, all of which are available to this court for the determination of that issue, have convinced that the value of that equity was more than $475,000, the objection of counsel has not been thought fatal to the consideration and determination of this question.

Counsel say that because the original stockholders of the Belt Company, by the exchange of their stock for that of the Southern Company retained, as they claim, only 3½ per cent of the value of their equitable interest in the Belt property, therefore the Southern Company is liable for only 3½ per cent of that interest. But the measure of the creditors' recovery is the value of the creditors' equity which was diverted from them by their trustees, the stockholders of the Belt Company, including the Southern Company, the successory trustee, and vested in that trustee. If the Southern Company had been the owner of the bonds of the Belt Company only and knowing the condition and indebtedness of the Belt Company, as it did, had paid to the stockholders of that company $475,000 to the exclusion of the creditors for a conveyance of its property by the Belt Company to the Southern Company, it could not have escaped liability to the creditors of that company for that amount. Much less can it do so when it became owner of nearly all the Belt Company's stock, and in equity a trustee for its creditors. Story's Equity Jurisprudence, Secs. 1261, 1262; Grenell v. Detroit Gas Co., 70 N. W. (Mich.) 413; Camden Interstate Ry Co. v. Lee, 84 S. W. (Ky.) 332, 333; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Paul, 93 Fed. 883, 884; Luedecke v. Des Moines Cabinet Co., 118 N. W. 457, 458; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. St. Louis & N. O. Trans. Co., 13 Fed. 516, 519.

It is another contention of counsel for the Southern Company that the remedy of the Trust Company in this court of equity is limited to the subjection of the property of the Belt Company in the possession of the Southern Company to the payment of its claim and that it may not have a decree that the Southern Company pay it. This court does not concede the soundness of this po-1242 sition and the leading case on the subject cited by counsel for the Southern Company does not sustain it. The quotation they make from that case is in these words:

"A sale may be void for bad faith though the buyer pays the full value of the property bought. This is the consequence, where his purpose is to aid the seller in perpetrating a fraud upon his creditors, and where he buys recklessly, with guilty knowledge. When the fact of fraud is established in a suit at law, the buyer loses the property without reference to the amount or application of what he has paid, and he can have no relief either at law or in equity. When the proceeding is in chancery, the jurisdiction exercised is more flexible and tolerant. The equity appealed to—while it scans the transaction with the severest scrutiny—looks at all the facts, and giving to each one its due weight, deals with the subject before it according to its own ideas of right and justice. In some instances it visits the buyer with the same consequences which would have followed in an action at law. In others, it allows a security to stand for the amount advanced upon it. In others, it compels the buyer to account only for the difference between the under price which he paid and the value of the property. In others, although he may have paid the full value, and the property may have passed beyond the reach of the process of the court, it regards him as a trustee, and charges him accordingly. Where he has honestly applied the property to the liabilities of the seller it may hold him excused from further responsibility. The cardinal principle in all such cases is, that the property of the debtor shall not be diverted from the payment of his debts to the injury of his creditors, by means of the fraud." Clements v. Moore, 6 Wall. 299, 312.

The application of the principles there announced in that suit, which was in equity, was this: Nicholson, the debtor, had sold his property to Moore for $6,310.35 to defraud his creditors, and Moore had paid Nicholson for the goods in cash and his own notes which Nicholson had disposed of and Moore had sold the goods. But Nicholson had applied all of the $6,310.35 to the payment of his debts except $1,500.00. The Supreme Court held that Moore was liable to the creditor Clements for that amount. By the same mark the Southern Company became liable to the Trust Company to the extent of its claim for the value of the $4,750,000 of its stocks which it issued to the stockholders of the Belt Company to secure 1243 the property of the Belt Company and divert it from its creditors. Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Paul, 93 Fed. 883, 884; Camden Interstate Ry. Co. v. Lee, 84 S. W. (Ky.) 332, 333.

The question, however, is not material in the case at bar because the transaction was a conveyance of the property of the Belt Company in fraud of creditors and a breach of trust by the Southern Company, which company, with full knowledge of all the facts, actively participated in the entire transaction and thereby acquired the property of the Belt Company so that that property and the improvements the Southern Company has made thereon, free from the $1,000,000 Belt Mortgage and free from any charge for the expenses which the Southern Company has made thereon, stands in its hands charged with a trust to pay the claim of the Trust Company against the Belt Company which the court may execute by a seizure and sale by its master or receiver. Railroad Company v. Soutter, 80 U. S. 517, 522, 524; Guckenheimer v. Angevine, 81 N. Y. 394, 397; Goble v. O'Connor, 61 N. W. (Neb.) 131, 132.

And if the Southern Company has disposed of the property or destroyed it, or placed it beyond the reach of the Trust Company or the court, or given a mortgage or incumbrance upon it to a party without notice, the court has plenary power and it is its duty to require the Southern Company to account for and pay over the proceeds of the property or the value of it, or the proceeds of the mortgage, or the amount of it, to the extent of the Trust Company's claim and to so conduct its proceedings and mold its decrees that full relief may be secured by the Trust Company. And as the property of the Belt Company was worth many times the amount of the claim of the Trust Company at the time of its transfer to the Southern Company the ultimate result will be the same whether the decree be for the seizure and sale of the Belt property or for the payment of the claim of the Trust Company by the Southern Company, for it must ultimately be paid either out of the property in its hands or by the Southern Company itself. 20 Cyc. 630, 631; Doherty v. Holliday, 32 N. E. (Ind.) 315, 317, 36 N. E. 907, 908; Jones v. Reeder, 22 Ind. 111; Swinford v. Rogers, 23 Cal. 234, 237; Mason v. Pierron, 34 N. W. (Wis.) 921, 925; Blair v. Smith, 15 N. E. (Ind.) 817, 819, 820; Williamson v. Williams, 11 Lea 355; Murtha v. Curley, 90 N. Y. 372; Post v. Stiger, 29 N. J. Eq. 554, 561; Chamberlin v. Jones, 16 N. E. (Ind.) 178, 179; Muskegon Valley Furniture Co. v. Phillips, 21 So. (Ala.) 822, 823; Coale v. Moline Plow 1244 Co., 25 N. E. (Ill.) 1016, 1018; Dilworth v. Curts, 29 N. E. (Ill.) 861, 864; Hulley v. Chedic, 36 Pac. 783, 786; Morrell v. Miller, 43 Pac. (Ore.) 490, 494.

(4) Counsel argue with great force and ability that the Trust Company is estopped from enforcing against the Southern Company its claim for its breach of trust to it as a creditor of the Belt Company, (1) because it signed, and induced others to sign, the trust agreement which contained this paragraph: "No right is conferred, nor any trust, liability or obligation (except the agreements herein contained in favor of the holders of certificates of deposit hereunder), is credited by this agreement or the plan, or is assumed hereunder, or by or for any new company in favor of any bondholder or any other creditor or any holder of any claims whatsoever against the said companies, nor in favor of any company now existing or to be formed hereafter (whether such claim be based on any bonds, coupon stocks, securities, lease, guaranty or otherwise) with respect to any security deposited under this agreement or any moneys paid to or received by the Committee or by the depositor hereunder, or with respect to any property acquired by purchase at any foreclosure sale, or with respect to any new certificates to be issued hereunder, or with respect to any other matter or thing," (2) because it was one of the depositories under the agreement and on June 26, 1900, it accepted bonds and stock of the Southern Company in exchange for bonds and stock in the Gulf Company and other companies reorganized under the agreement, and especially because it accepted stock of the Southern Company in exchange for stock of the Belt Company which it held, and (3) by its laches in presenting its claim against the Southern Company.

It may be that if when the Trust Company signed the agreement that instrument had disclosed a purpose or had by its terms required the committee, or the stockholders of the Belt Company, or their successory trustee the new company, the Southern Company, to violate their trust and divert the equity of the creditors of the Belt Company in its property to its stockholders, the Trust Company's signature to it, its action as a depository of the bonds and stocks under it and its exchange of its Belt Company stock for the Southern Company stock might have wrought an estoppel against it. But the agreement must be read in the light of the law which was necessarily a part of it. It was to execute a plan, which 1245 it disclosed, to transfer the property of the Belt Company to a new company by means of the exchange of the stock of the new company for that of the Belt Company. The law was that as against creditors of the Belt Company such a plan could be lawfully executed in but one way, and that was by offering and if accepted, by paying to the creditors of the Belt Company either in cash or in stock of the new company, or in some other property at least as much in value as the stockholders should receive, and, in the absence of such an offer or payment the transfer would be fraudulent and voidable as to the creditors. Unless there was in the agreement some term or provision which required the committee or the Southern Company to violate this law and to make a transfer fraudulent and voidable as to the creditors, the legal presumption was that the agreement contemplated, and that the committee and the Southern Company would make, such an offer and payment to the creditors, and upon that presumption the Trust Company had the right to rely when it signed the agreement and thenceforth until it was clearly notified to the contrary. The legal presumption was that the committee and the new company, the Southern Company, which was to succeed to the trusteeship of the stockholders of the Belt

Company, and all others executing the agreement would obey the law, would refrain from making the transfer of the property from the Belt Company fraudulent and voidable and would make it fair, just and valid. The Trust Company had the right to calculate the natural and probable result of its signature to the agreement and of all its acts and omissions in reliance upon this presumption. Indeed, it could reckon upon no other, for it is alike impracticable and impossible to predicate and administer the rights and remedies of men upon the theory that their associates and fellowmen will either violate the laws or disregard their duties. Cole v. German Savings & Loan Co., 124 Fed. 113, 119, 59 C. C. A. 593, 599; Little Rock & M. R. Co., v. Barry, 84 Fed. 944, 950, 28 C. C. A. 644, 650; Burt v. Advertiser Newspaper Co., 154 Mass. 238, 247; American Bridge Co. v. Seeds, 144 Fed. 605, 609, 75 C. C. A. 407, 411.

The reorganization agreement has been searched in vain for any proviison which required or notified the committee or the new company that they must violate the law and make the transfer fraudulent and void as to creditors. On the other hand, that agreement declared that the results of its execution would be (a) the placing of the properties of the Belt Company, the Gulf Com-1246 pany and the Dock Company under one corporate ownership, management and control, "(b) the payment of the floating debt and the existing car trust obligations." It set apart $475,000 for the payment of floating debts; it expressly authorized the committee to acquire, hold or extinguish "any obligation in the nature of floating debt or otherwise against any company or property embraced in said plan," and under this power the committee actually expended $1,164,172.50. It declared that it was intended to confer on the committee any and all powers which they might deem necessary or expedient towards carrying out and promoting the purposes of the plan and the agreement, and that the methods to be adopted for carrying out the reorganization consolidation and unification of the properties should be entirely discretionary with the committee. The committee and the Southern Company, therefore, had ample power to realize and pay to the creditors of the Belt Company the value of their equity in the property of the Belt Company before they transferred that property to the Southern Company. Let us now turn to the paragraph in the agreement on which counsel for the Southern Company rely for their estoppel by deed. So far as material it provides that "no right is conferred, nor any trust, liability or obligation * * * is created by this agreement or the plan, or is assumed hereunder, or by or for any new company in favor of * * * any holder of any claims whatsoever against the said companies, * * * with respect to any property acquired by purchase at any foreclosure sale." There are two reasons why the Trust Company did not, by signing this paragraph, deprive itself of its equity in the property of the Belt Company, which it held as the cestui que trust of its stockholders, nor of its claim against the Southern Company, the stockholder's successory trustee. First, if that equity and trust were created or conferred by or under the agreement they were created and conferred, not by the just and lawful execution of that agreement, but by the inequitable and fraudulent appropriation of the Trust Company's equity in the property to the benefit of its stockholder or stockholders, and the paragraph in question barred the Trust Company from asserting only such rights, trusts, liabilities and obligations as arose out of the lawful and equitable execution of its contract. It did not bar it from enforcing its claims accruing from illegal or inequitable acts or omissions of those engaged in the execution of the agreement. If the committee or anyone engaged in such execution had unlawfully appropriated to their or his 1247 benefit the property, money or securities of signers of the contract which came to them or him under the agreement, the signers would not have been estopped by that paragraph from recovering the property or from enforcing the personal liability of the appropriators; second, the Trust Company's right, trust and equity in the property of the Belt Company acquired by the Southern Company "by purchase at any foreclosure sale" was neither created nor conferred by the reorganization agreement. It existed in all its force and inhered in the Belt Company's property by virtue of the relation of the Trust Company as a creditor of the Belt Company to the latter's stockholders before the agreement was made, and there it still inheres so that it did not fall within the terms of the paragraph in question and therefore was not affected thereby. Nor did the liability and obligation of the Southern Company for its breach of that trust now here in suit fall within the terms of that paragraph, for it was not created by that agreement, but by the Southern Company's subsequent transfer of the equity of the creditors of the Belt Company to itself, its stockholders and the trustee for its creditors without securing and paying to them the value of that equity. For these reasons the court is of the opinion that the Trust Company was not estopped by its signature to and activity in inducing others to sign the agreement from enforcing its claims as a creditor of the Belt Company against the Southern Company and against the property of the Belt Company in its possession or control.

Was the Trust Company equitably estopped from presenting and enforcing its claim by its promotion of the reorganization agreement, its participation in its execution and its acceptance on July 26, 1900, of stock of the Southern Company in exchange for its stock in the Belt Company and its acceptance of stock and bonds of the Southern Company in exchange for its stock and bonds in the Gulf Company and some of the other reorganized companies, or by its laches? Laches is equitable estopped under another name and these two claims of estopped will be considered together. A statement in chronological order of the salient facts material to the issue here presented will greatly aid in its disposition.

The plan of reorganization was made on November 7, 1899. It became effective on December 20, 1899. In December, 1899, or during the early part of the year 1900, the Trust Company requested a prominent member of the reorganization committee to ad-1248 just or settle and pay its claim against the Belt Company, and he answered that it was asserted that the Belt Company did not owe the Trust Company anything, that an examination of the books of the Belt Company and the books of the Trust Company was being made and that when that was completed he would take up the question of whether anything could be done towards an equitable settlement of the claim. On February 5, 1900, the decree of foreclosure and sale of the Gulf Company's property was rendered. On March 19, 1900, the Southern Company was incorporated. On March 19, 1900, the Southern Company purchased the property of the Gulf Company at its foreclosure sale. By April 1, 1900, it had acquired, by its exchange of its stocks and bonds for those of the Belt Company, 97 per cent of the Belt Company's stock and 89 per cent of its bonds. On April 1, 1900, it placed its chosen agents in the offices of the Belt Company and took possession of its books and property by virtue of its ownership of its stock. On June 6, 1900, the reorganization committee purchased of the Trust Company and paid it $35,000, which they applied in part payment of the debt of the Belt Company to it, for certain shares of the stock of the Terminal Company and of the Airline Company, which the Trust Company held in pledge to secure the payment of its claim against the Belt Company. On July 26, 1900, the Trust Company exchanged its stock and bonds in the old reorganized companies for the stocks and bonds of the Southern Company. On September 1, 1900, the Trust Company gave notice of its proposed sale on September 7, 1900, of the securities which the Belt Company had pledged to it to secure the payment of the latter's debt. On September 6, 1900, the Provident Company, the trustee in the mortgage of the Belt Company and in duty and in reality the agent of the Southern Company which held 89 per cent of the bonds of the Belt Company and 97 per cent of its stock, brought a suit to foreclose the mortgage, for the appointment of receivers of the Belt Company's property and for an injunction against its sale or disposition. On September 6, 1900, the Belt Company appeared in that suit and consented to the appointment of receivers. On September 6, 1900, the Cambria Company, with the consent of the Belt Company the agent of the Southern Company which held 97 per cent of its stock, recovered a judgment and obtained a return of nulla bona to an execution against the Belt Company. On September 6, 1900, the Cambria Company commenced the suit here in hand against the Belt Company and against the Trust Company to enjoin the 1249 latter company from selling its collaterals and applying their proceeds to the payment of the debt of the Belt Company, a suit which it founded on the averment, which has been adjudged untrue, that the Belt Company was not indebted to the Trust Company and on other allegations so baseless that it has become clear that the Cambria Company had no cause of action against the Trust Company. On September 6, 1900, the Belt Company, the hand of the Southern Company, appeared in the Cambria suit and on the same day the Trust Company was restrained by the court from selling its collaterals, and receivers of the property of the Belt Company were appointed in this suit. On November 5, 1900, the Trust Company answered and set up its claim against the Belt Company and the pledging of its collaterals. On December 3, 1900, the Cambria Company filed a replication to that answer. On that day the issue of the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company was made in this suit and that issue really existed then between the Trust Company and the Southern Company, for the Southern Company by its ownership of 97 per cent of the Belt Company's stock controlled it and in all subsequent proceedings directed its course and is as much bound by its action as though it had been the Belt Company itself. This issue was referred to the special master and it was not until May 21, 1910, after testimony had been taken for years and after a record of approximately 34,000 pages had been accumulated, that the Trust Company succeeded in obtaining an adjudication thereof, and that issue was first determined by the court below a few days later. It will be interesting to note a few of the proceedings which resulted in this delay. Before the Trust Company reached the decision of the master more than fifteen pleadings were filed in this case by other parties to this suit, and the Trust Company was compelled to file six. On October 20, 1900, the Trust Company filed a petition in the Provident Company's foreclosure suit for leave to be made a party and to plead therein, wherein its set forth its claim against the Belt Company, that the Southern Company would cause the Belt Company to waive all defenses and to consent to a foreclosure of the mortgage upon its property to the detriment of the Trust Company and the creditors of the Belt Company. On October 22, 1900, the Provident Company amended its bill and asked that the Trust Company be made a defendant, and the court so ordered. On November 5, 1900, the Trust Company answered the Provident Company's bill and in its answer set forth the debt of the Belt Company to it, the control of the Belt Company 1250 by the Southern Company and its purpose to waive all defenses to and to consent to the foreclosure of the Belt Company's mortgage and the sale of its property for the purpose and with the effect of appropriating the equity of its unsecured creditors to itself. On September 12, 1901, and again on October 14, 1901, the Trust Company applied for leave to file its amended and supplemental answer in which it set forth the debt of the Belt Company to it, the facts regarding the reorganization agreement, the organization of the Southern Company, its exchange of its stock for the stock of the Belt Company and its purpose, by the control of the Belt Company and of its bonds and stock, to appropriate to itself the equity of the creditors of the Belt Company in its property by means of the foreclosure suit, and prayed that the bill of the Provident Company be dismissed, and for such further orders and decrees as it was entitled to receive. On October 19, 1901, the court ordered the application denied on condition that the Provident Company should file a stipulation to the effect that the decree of foreclosure to be rendered in its case should not bar the right of the Trust Company to plead and insist in any future litigation that the Southern Company was legally and equitably bound by reason of the method by which it would obtain the property of the Belt Company to pay the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company. On October

19, 1901, the Provident Company filed such a stipulation and the court denied the Trust Company leave to file its amended answer. On October 19, 1901, the Trust Company presented to the court in the Provident Company suit a petition for leave to prepare and file a cross-bill setting forth the facts stated in its amended answer and praying for an adjudication of its claim against the Belt Company for the sale of its collaterals and for a provision in the decree of foreclosure that any purchaser of the Belt Company's property at the sale thereunder should take and hold it subject to the payment of the Trust Company's claim and to the payment of the claims of all the unsecured creditors of the Belt Company. On October 19, 1901, the court denied this application. On October 19, 1901, the Belt Company filed its answer whereby it admitted the averments of the Provident Company in its bill. On November 6, 1901, the court entered the decree of foreclosure and sale of the Belt Company which contained the express condition stipulated by the Provident Company that the decree should not bar the right of the Trust Company to recover of the Southern Company personally or out 1251 of the property of the Belt Company the amount of its claim against that Company. On November 20, 1901, the Trust Company and the Belt Company and its receivers stipulated in the Cambria Company's suit that the accounting between the Trust Company and the Belt Company should be expedited and that a judgment should be entered in that suit against the party found to be the debtor. On December 31, 1901, the Southern Company bid in the Belt property at the Provident Company's foreclosure sale and the master conveyed it to the Southern Company.

On February 27, 1905, the Southern Company filed an intervening petition in the Cambria Company's suit by which it sought to recover certain collaterals pledged by the Belt Company to the Trust Company to secure the Belt Company's debt and certain moneys which the Trust Company had collected. On March 7, 1905, the Trust Company filed its answer to this petition wherein it denied the validity of the claim of the Southern Company and alleged that by virtue of the proceedings which resulted in the foreclosure sale and conveyance of the Belt Company's property to the Southern Company that property remained bound and the Southern Company became bound to pay the Trust Company's claim against the Belt Company. On May 1, 1905, the Southern Company filed an amended intervening petition seeking substantially the same relief on the same grounds. On May 25, 1905, the Trust Company answered it in substantially the same way as it answered the Southern Company's former petition, and the issues thus formed were, by order of the court, referred to the special master for hearing and report. Then followed objections and arguments and testimony until on May 21, 1910, the master finally filed his report and in a few days thereafter the court rendered its decree. The Trust Company, however, was not idle during this time, nor did it limit its endeavors to enforce its claim to the prosecution of it in the court below. On March 15, 1905, and on March 28, 1905, it commenced actions at law in a state court against the Southern Company for certain parts of its claim against the Belt Company. On July 3, 1905, the Southern Company filed a supplemental bill in the Provident Company's foreclosure suit to enjoin the Trust Company from prosecuting those actions. On August 29, 1905, the Circuit Court ordered the Trust Company enjoined from prosecuting it. On May 31, 1906, this court reversed that order. In May, 1907, the Southern Company made a motion in the 1252 State court to stay the proceedings in these actions at law and in June, 1907, that motion was denied and the cases were set for trial on December 2, 1907. On November 16, 1907, the Southern Company filed another bill to enjoin the Trust Company from prosecuting those actions and the court below granted the injunction. On April 2, 1909, this court reversed that order.

Where is the evidence of any laches of the Trust Company in these proceedings? It presented to one of the membrs of the committee its claim against the Belt Company for adjustment and settlement and was told that when the examination of the books were completed he would take up the matter whether anything could be done towards an equitable settlement of its claim, and there that matter rested until the Trust Company was enjoined from selling its collaterals in September, 1900. By a sale of some of its collaterals to the committee it collected and applied the proceeds thereof to its claim against the Belt Company in June, 1900. It gave notice of its sale of its remaining collaterals on September 1, 1900, and was enjoined from proceeding in the baseless suit of the Cambria Company, a suit based on a judgment to which the Southern Company consented in the name of the Belt Company, and it is difficult to wink so hard as not to see that the Cambria suit was in reality the suit of the Southern Company. Twice in October, 1901, it set forth in answers to the Provident Company's suit its claim against the property of the Belt Company and against the Southern Company, and prayed the adjudication and payment thereof, to be met by a denial by the court doubtless secured by the objections of the Provident Company and by that Company's stipulation that the decree should not foreclose, bar or affect the Trust Company's claim against the Southern Company, or the property of the Belt Company which it should acquire thereunder. On October 19, 1901, it applied for leave to plead this claim on a cross-bill in that suit and to pray for a decree that its claim should be paid out of the property of the Belt Company, to be met by like denial. In this way the Trust Company was prevented from obtaining a hearing on the merits and an adjudication of its claim in the foreclosure suit and subjected to the objection to an original bill which it might otherwise have brought against the Southern Company that it had no judgment against the Belt Company and no execution returned unsatisfied thereon. Therefore it pressed for that judgment.
1253 November 20, 1901, it joined the Belt Company and its receivers in a stipulation to expedite the trial of that issue and the entry of such a judgment, but new pleadings, tens of thousands of pages of testimony delayed the result. When that result seemed nearer and on February 27, 1905, the Southern Company intervened and claimed some of the Trust Company's collaterals, and on March 7, 1905, the Trust Company answered the intervening petition and again pleaded and pressed its claim against the Southern Company. On March 17, 1905, and on March 28, 1905, apparently despairing of reaching an adjudication in this suit in equity, it brought actions at law against the Southern Company upon its claim, but was prevented from trying them by injunctions procured and other proceedings conducted by the Southern Company until April 2, 1909, when the last injunction against its proceeding in the state court was reversed by this court. Meanwhile the Trust Company had pressed the issues in this suit through the hearings, they had been submitted to the master, and on May 21, 1910, he found that the Belt Company was indebted to the Trust Company in 1900, and that the amount of that debt with interest to June 22, 1910, was $639,658.86. There is much evidence of promptness, diligence and persistence, and none of laches, on the part of the Trust Company in the printed record before us. Nor does it lie in the mouth of the Southern Company to make or urge a charge of laches here. By its use of 89 per cent of the bonds of the Belt Company which the Provident Company was bound to represent in the foreclosure suit, and of 97 per cent of the stock of the Belt Company, it controlled the action of each of those companies in that suit. By means of those companies it prevented the hearing and adjudication of the Trust Company's claim upon its answers and upon its application to file a cross-bill in that suit. By the Belt Company's consent to a judgment against it in favor of the Cambria Company it laid the technical foundation of the Cambria Company's unwarranted suit which prevented the Trust Company from selling its collaterals, and held the issue of the Belt Company's indebtedness to it suspended for more than eight years. It prevented the trial of that issue in the actions which the Trust Company brought in the state courts in 1905 by injunctions it procured from the court below and there is no equity in its claim that the Trust Company unduly delayed the presentation or the prosecution of its claim against it or against the property of the Belt Company.

1254 But counsel argue that the Trust Company is equitably estopped from maintaining its claim by the fact that it was one of the depositories under the reorganization agreement, that it persuaded others to sign it and that on July 26, 1900, it exchanged its $76,972.00 par value of stock in the Belt Company and the stocks and bonds it held in the Gulf Company and the other reorganized companies for $1,480,909.00 par value of stock of the Southern Company. Let us see. The indispensable elements of an estoppel in pais are (1) intentional or reckless misrepresentation of a known and material fact inconsistent with the subsequent claim of him who makes the misrepresentation, (2) ignorance of the truth and absence of equal means of knowledge of it by the party who claims the estoppel, (3) action by the latter induced by the misrepresentation and (4) injury to the latter if the truth is permitted to be proved. Bigelow on Estoppel, 4th Ed. page 679; Illinois

Trust & Sav. Bank v. City of Arkansas City, 76 Fed. 271, 293; 22 C. C. A. 171, 193; Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Farwell, 58 Fed. 633, 638, 639; 7 C. C. A. 391, 396, 397; New York Life Ins. Co. v. McMaster, 87 Fed. 63, 66, 67, 30 C. C. A. 532, 535, 536. The estoppel here probably lacks all and it certainly lacks at least three of these essential elements; (1) the requisite misrepresentation of any material fact which the Trust Company knew, (2) ignorance or absence of equal means of knowledge of that fact by the Southern Company or its stockholders and bondholders, and (3) injury to them if the truth is permitted to be proved. First, the reorganization agreement, as we have seen, disclosed a scheme whereby the property of the Belt Company might be honestly and lawfully vested in the Southern Company by offering, and if the offer was accepted by paying, to the creditors of that company at least as much in value as the scheme offered to the stockholders of the Belt Company. The Trust Company presented its claim against the Belt Company to one of committee and was told before it made its exchange that the indebtedness of the Belt Company was denied, but was under investigation, and that when that investigation was completed he would take up the claim and see if anything could be done about its settlement, and there the matter rested until after the exchange of stock was made. Meanwhile the Southern Company had the books of the Belt Company evidencing the state of the account between the Belt Company and the Trust Company in its possession. The Trust Company never made any representation that it had no claim against the Belt Company nor that it 1255 would not press it for payment by the committee, by the Belt Company and by the Southern Company, but it gave notice of its claim and requested its payment and neither the committee nor the Southern Company ever declared before the Trust Company exchanged its stock and bonds that they would not settle or pay it if the Belt Company really owed it.

The legal presumption was and the Trust Company had a right to rely thereon, that the scheme disclosed by the reorganization agreement would be executed in a just and lawful way and that its claim and the claims of all crditors of the Belt Company would be adjusted and settled by full or partial payment by the committee and neither its action as a depositor nor its activity to persuade others to accept the plan, nor its exchange of its stocks and bonds constituted any representation that the plan would not be so executed, that the transfer of the property of the Belt Company to the Southern Company would be illegal and fraudulent as to creditors nor any consent to or participation in such an execution of the agreement. That transfer had not then been made, the Southern Company held the stock of the Belt Company charged with the trust to secure for its creditors at least as much as it had paid to its stockholders and there was no notice or presumption that it would violate its trust. The Trust Company made no misrepresentation by any of its acts or omissions of any known fact on which an estoppel in favor of the Southern Company can be based. Second, the reorganization agreement showed that under it the title in fee of the property of the Belt Company was to be transferred to the new company, the Southern Company, and brought under the lien of its mortgage by means of the exchange of the stock of the Belt Company for the stock of the Southern Company and this disclosure and the law notified the Southern Company and everyone who received any stocks or bonds of that company that the acquisition of that stock in that way and its pledge under the mortgage charged the Southern Company, its bondholders and its stockholders with a trust to secure and distribute to the creditors of the Belt Company the value of their equity in the property of that company, and the answers of the Trust Company in the Provident Company's foreclosure suit, its application to file its cross-bill and the paragraph in the decree of foreclosure which exempted the Trust Company from the effect of that decree, kept that notice flaming in the record so that neither the Southern Company nor any of 1256 its bondholders, or stockholders were without equal means of knowledge nor without notice under the law that the transfer of the property of the Belt Company to the Southern Company without offering to pay or paying anything to its creditors was a breach of trust, fraudulent and voidable as to them. Moreover, although it is immaterial under the opinion in Northern Pacific Ry. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 502, whether they were notified of the Trust Company's claim or not, they all had notice of it by its presentation to one of the committee, by the Southern Company's possession of the books of the Belt Company as early as April 1, 1901, by the answers and the application to file the cross-bill in the foreclosure suit and by the terms of the decree therein. The committee, the Southern Company, its stockholders and bondholders had at least equal means of knowledge and had notice under the law of the truth regarding all material things in this transaction to which the Trust Company's acts and omissions, and its exchange of stock and bonds relate. There were no innocent stockholders or bondholders of the Southern Company in or since this transaction. Third, neither the Southern Company nor its stockholders nor bondholders will suffer any injury by proof of the truth in this transaction and the granting to the Trust Company of the equitable relief to which it was entitled in 1901. They took to themselves by a breach of trust and a transfer fraudulent as to creditors by the foreclosure sale on December 31, 1901, an equity in the property of the Belt Company of a value in excess of the amount of the Trust Company's claim, then about $360,000, which belonged to that company, and they have held and enjoyed it ever since. Each stockholder and bondholder has had and still has the benefit of his just proportion of that equity. If now the Southern Company is required to restore that equity or its value in 1901, with interest from that date, each stockholder and bondholder will lose the benefit of its just proportion of that equity which it wrongfully holds and nothing more. Nor will the Trust Company secure or retain any unjust share or advantage. While it will receive the value of that equity to which it as a creditor of the Belt Company was entitled in 1901 with interest, its stocks and bonds issued by the Southern Company will lose the benefit of that equity in the same proportion as will the stocks and bonds of others. The stocks and bonds of the Trust Company and of all the others holders of stocks and bonds in the Southern Company will be diminished in value in the exact proportion by which they were enhanced in value by the 1257 wrongful appropriation of the equity of the Trust Company in the property of the Belt Company which the Southern Company wrongfully took and holds, and the justice and equity to all which should have been done many years ago will now as nearly as practicable be administered.

This question of estoppel was ably and exhaustively argued. It has not failed to receive the study and meditation of each member of this court. But for the reasons which have now been stated, perhaps at too great length, this study and meditation have but confirmed the court in its former view and its conclusion still remains that the Trust Company was not estopped either by its promotion of the reorganization agreement, its signature to it, its exchange of stock, or its alleged laches, from prosecuting its claim against the Southern Company to adequate relief.

In the course of their argument counsel have invoked the maxims that he who seeks equity must do equity and that he who seeks equity must come into court with clean hands, and have claimed that the Trust Company is entitled to no relief because it participated in the formation and execution of a fraudulent scheme. The answer has been given. The fraud and breach of trust which made the transfer voidable as to creditors were not committed nor disclosed until after the Trust Company's acts in the formation and execution of the plan had been done. The presumption of law was, when it exchanged its stock, that the fraud and breach of trust were not being perpetrated and it did not participate in their perpetration. Its hands are not soiled and if its claim is paid by the Southern Company it, and all the parties in interest in this transaction, will have done and received equity.

(5) Counsel have argued the question whether the Trust Company or the Southern Company has the superior equity in the lands of the Central Company, but the court is not convinced that it was in error in the conclusion upon this subject which it announced in its former opinion at pages 824, 826, 827 and 828 of 201 Federal Reporter, and as, unless the court is in error on the questions which have already been discussed, that question is no longer material because the Southern Company may have no relief in that regard, unless it pays the claim of the Trust Company, the court refrains from another discussion of it.

1258 (6) Objection is made to the entry of a decree at this time in favor of the Trust Company for the payment of its claim by the Southern Company on the grounds that the Trust Company filed no cross-bill and made no specific prayer for such relief in its answer and because the Southern Company should have an opportunity to offer evidence and to be heard upon the question whether or not the Trust Company is entitled to such relief. But the issues whether or not the property of the Belt Company taken by the Southern Company, whether or not the property of the Central Company by reason of the pledge of its stock and whether or not the Southern Company itself, was liable to pay the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company, were all necessarily presented and litigated under the pleading and litigation of the controlling issue whether or not the Southern Company by its acquisition of the property of the Belt Company, its exchange of stock and its foreclosure sale deprived the Trust Company of its equity in that property and exempted itself from liability. Opportunity was offered and embraced to present evidence to consider and argue these questions. The Southern Company received ample notice of the claim of the Trust Company that it and the property of the Belt Company which it acquired were liable to pay its claim against the Belt Company. In its petition for leave to file a cross-bill in the foreclosure suit in October, 1901, the Trust Company asserted its right to be paid out of the property of the Belt Company to be superior to that of the expected purchaser at the foreclosure sale of that property and the liability of such purchaser to pay it and the right of the Trust Company to assert its claim against the property and the purchaser, were expressly reserved by the decree. In its answer to the amended intervening petition of the Southern Company in this suit filed on May 20, 1905, it made a like averment which was denied by the replication of the Southern Company. A review of the facts disclosed by the master's report and of the pleadings and proceedings printed in the record before us, has convinced that the indisputable facts and the law of this case are such that an opening of the case and the reception of further evidence would not change the result or benefit any party thereto.

The court has ample power to remand the case and permit the filing of a cross-bill or an amendment of the answer so as to pray for the specific relief to which the Trust Company is entitled. Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio & Mississippi Ry. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 1259 413-416; Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756; Clark v. Clark, 62 N. H. 267, 272; Trimble v. Bank, 71 Mo. App. 467, 484, but that would be a useless proceeding and neither the law nor the rules and practice in equity require the performance of futile acts. An answer may be treated as a cross-bill and the rights and remedies which the defendant has alleged in its answer and at the hearing has proved it is entitled to enforce may be maintained and enforced although its prayer is limited to a dismissal of the bill. Bradford v. Union Bank of Tennessee, 13 How. 56, 68, 69; Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. 156, 164; Moran v. Hagerman, 64 Fed. 499, 503, 504; Wyatt v. Sweet, 12 N. W. (Mich.) 692, 693. In Walden v. Bodley, 14 Pet. at page 164, the Supreme court said on this subject: "It would be a reproach to the administration of justice, if in this case, the parties should be left, by the decision of this court, apparently, as remote from a final determination of it as they were forty years ago. It is true, the answer prays merely for a dissolution of the injunction and that the bill may be dismissed. But the court have, by the bill, answer and evidence, the equities of the parties before them; and having jurisdiction of the main points they may settle the whole matter. A court of equity cannot act upon a case which is not fairly made by the bill and answer. But it is not necessary that these should point out in detail the means which the court should adopt in giving relief." These rules and authorities and the principle of equity that a court of chancery which once acquires jurisdiction of the subject matter and the parties to a controversy ought, if possible, to determine the entire matter and grant just relief to each party, the length of time this litigation has already been pursued and the greater danger of injustice from its continuance than from its termination, have persuaded that the ends of justice will be best served by the entry of a decree in this case upon the issue of the mandate in favor of the Trust Company for the relief to which it is entitled.

(7) Counsel for three of the stockholders of the Trust Company have been heard upon their petition that this court adjudge that certain of the litigation herein instituted by the Cambria Company, the Belt Company and the Southern Company was commenced and prosecuted in bad faith and that it direct the court below to find the amount of attorneys' fees, stenographers' fees and expert accountants' fees necessarily incurred by the Trust Company in that litigation, and, after the entry of the main decree, to render a 1260 further decree in favor of the Trust Company and against the Southern Company for the aggregate of these amounts, or that this court direct the court below to insert in its decree an adjudication that it is rendered without prejudice to the right of the Trust Company to sue the Southern Company for those sums, that this court also direct the court below to include in the costs herein the damages, cost, fees and expenses incurred by the Trust Company in the injunction suit reported in 171 Federal, 43, and also to insert in the decree an adjudication that the decree shall not prejudice the right of the Trust Company to move for such damages, costs, fees and expenses in the injunction suit reported in 146 Federal, 337. A deliberate consideration of this petition and of the exhaustive arguments of counsel have, however, persuaded that inasmuch as the questions suggested came for the first time into this suit at the rehearing in this court, as no evidence has been taken relative to them and as the evidence upon the issues tried in this case was not brought to this court it would be unwise and might be unjust to adjudicate the questions presented by the petition of these stockholders. Moreover, as this court cannot rightly determine the questions relating to the costs to be taxed at this time, as there are established rules of practice concerning them and as directions to the court below to open and try new issues might, and probably would, prolong this litigation through several years more, our conclusion is that our just course is to leave the taxation of costs to the court below under the principles, rules and practice in equity.

And the conclusion of the whole matter is that the decree below should be reversed and the District Court should render a decree which should contain the first five paragraphs of the former decree, except that the proceeds of the sale of ninety-nine first mortgage bonds and coupons of the Kansas City & Northern Connecting Railroad Company, amounting to $40,001.25, referred to in paragraph five of the former decree, together with all interest which has accrued and shall accrue, has been and shall actually be earned on said sum, shall be applied as a credit at the time when the Trust Company shall receive said sum as its own, upon the amount which the Southern Company should pay to the Trust Company, as hereinafter provided, which future decree should also adjudge that the Southern Company is indebted to and should pay to the Trust Company the amount of the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company, that is to say, the sum of $639,658.86 1261 and interest from the date of the former decree, on $473,723.59 at six per cent per annum, on $46,565.76 at seven per cent per annum and on $119,369.51 at eight per cent per annum, and the costs of this suit, that the Trust Company's right to and equity in the property of the Belt Company which was transferred to the Southern Company by means of the exchange of the stock of the Belt Company for the stock of the Southern Company and by the foreclosure proceedings, sale and conveyance and otherwise, was and is prior in time and superior in equity and right to the extent necessary to pay the debt, to the right, title and equity of the Southern Company therein, that by virtue of the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company and the pledge to it of 1,120 shares of the stock of the Central Company, the equity and right of the Trust Company in the property of the Central Company described in the sixth paragraph of the former decree is superior, to the extent necessary to pay that debt, to the right, title, claim and equity of the Southern Company therein, that in case the Southern Company shall pay its debt to the Trust Company and the costs of this suit adjudged in this suit by a day to be named in the decree, then all the collateral security described in paragraph five of the former decree which has not then been disposed of, and all the proceeds of such security which has not then been disposed of or applied, shall be surrendered and delivered to the Southern Company, that in case the Southern Company fails to pay its debt to the Trust Company and the costs of this suit by a day to be named by the court in the decree then the said property of the Central Company and the property of the Belt Company which was transferred to the Southern Company as aforesaid, and the collateral security then remaining in the possession of the Trust Company, or such part or all said property as it shall be necessary to sell in order to pay the debt and costs out of the proceeds of the sale or sales to which the Trust Company, in view of the pledge to it of only 1,120 shares of the stock of the Central Company and the possible equities of the Central Company's other stockholders and creditors, shall be equitably entitled, be sold by a master or receiver to be named by the court, and the proceeds of such sale or sales to which the Trust Company shall be equitably entitled be applied to the payment of the debt and of the costs after as well as before the decree, until they are completely paid and that the remainder of the proceeds, if any, be paid to the Southern Company or to such other party as may be equitably entitled thereto, that on the de-1262 mand of the master the Southern Company, the Trust Company, the Central Company and its receiver, surrender and deliver to him, or to the purchaser or purchasers of any of this property as the master shall dicet, such part or all of said property as he shall specifiy, and that if an amount to which the Trust Company shall be equitably entitled sufficient to pay the debt with interest and the costs before and after the decree is not realized from the sales, then that the Trust Company have judgment and execution against the Southern Company for the remainder unpaid. The decree should adjudge that the Trust Company may recover its costs down to the entry of the decree of the Cambria Company as well as of the Southern Company, and the court may apportion those costs between them, but not as against the Trust Company which should be permitted to pursue either or both of them until its costs are paid. The district court should reserve in the decree full jurisdiction to render such further decrees and take such subsequent proceedings in the suit as equity and good conscience may require.

Let the decree be reversed and let the cases be remanded to the District Court with directions to render a decree for the Trust Company in accord with the views expressed in this opinion.

Filed December 2, 1913.

1263 (Decree of U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals of December 2, 1913, as Modified by Order of January 22, 1914.)

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.
December Term, 1913.

TUESDAY, December 2, 1913.

No. 3489.

CENTRAL IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, H. H. CRITTENDEN, Receiver of Central Improvement Company, Appellants,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT Railroad Company, Edward F. Swinney, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company and Guardian Trust Company.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

No. 3490.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Appellant,
vs.
CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY, THE KANSAS CITY SUBURBAN BELT Railroad Company, Edward F. Swinney, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company; The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Central Improvement Company, H. H. Crittenden, as Receiver of Central Improvement Company.

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

These causes came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, and were argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is no where ordered, adjudged and decreed by this Court, that the decree of the said Circuit Court, in these causes, be, and the same is hereby, reversed with costs; and that the Central Improvement Company, H. H. Crittenden, Receiver of Central Improvement Company, in case No. 3489, and the Guardian Trust Company, in No. 3490, have and recover against the Cambria Steel Company, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Edward F. Swinney, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, their costs in this behalf expended in the respective cases to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

1264 It is further ordered that these causes be, and the same are hereby, remanded to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, as the successor of the Circuit Court for said District, with directions to render a decree for the Trust Company in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion of this Court.

December 2, 1913.

(Order Modifying Opinion and Decree of U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.)

December Term, 1913.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1914.

These causes having been called to the attention of the Court, upon due consideration, it is hereby ordered that the Per Curiam opinion in the above entitled causes, which was filed on December 2, 1913, in this Court, be, and the smae is hereby, modified so that it shall read as does Exhibit "A" hereto attached, and it is further ordered that the said Exhibit "A", and the modification hereby made in the opinion, and such modification of the decree in this Court as shall be necessary by reason thereof, shall take effect and be in force as of the date of December 2, 1913.

January 22, 1914.

(Attached to the foregoing order is Exhibit "A" being the opinion of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals as modified, which said opinion is omitted here for the reason that a copy thereof appears at page 1228 of this transcript.)

(Motion of Cambria Steel Company for Leave to Amend Original Bill of Complaint.)

Comes now the Cambria Steel Company and prays leave to amend its original bill filed in this cause on September 6, 1900, by adding, by way of interlineation, at page 15 of said original bill (bottom of Record, page 13), the following:

And your orator alleges that by the Act of Congress of August 1, 1888, entitled "An Act to Regulate the Liens of Judgments and Decrees of the Court- of the United States", (25 Stat. L. 357) it is provided "that judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit 1265 or district court of the United States within any state shall be liens on property throughout such state in the same manner and to the same extent and under the same conditions only as if such judgment and decree had been rendered by a court of general jurisdiction of such state"; that the laws of the State of Missouri now in force and in force and effect at the date of your orator's aforesaid judgment against the Belt Company, to-wit: Sections 3712 and 3713 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri of 1889, provide:

SECTION 3712. Judgments and decrees obtained in the Supreme Court, in any United States District or Circuit Court, held within this state, in the Kansas City Court of Appeals or the St. Louis Court of Appeals, shall, upon the filing of a transcript thereof in the office of the clerk of any such court, be a lien on the real estate of the person against whom such judgment or decree is rendered situate in the county in which such transcript is filed.

SECTION 2713. Judgments and decrees rendered by any Court of Record shall be a lien on the real estate of the person against whom they are rendered situate in the county for which the court is held.

that by virtue of said Act of Congress and the aforesaid laws of the State of Missouri all the real estate of each and every one of the said auxiliary companies is subject to the lien of your orator's aforesaid judgment against the Belt Company, and your orator therefore avers that this is a suit arising under the laws of the United States.

All the matters contained in said proposed amendment existed at the time of the filing of said original bill. The purpose of said amendment is to make express reference to the laws of the United States whose construction and application are involved in the original bill of this complaint, and to expressly assert that the cause of action made by said original bill is one arising under the laws of the United States.

CAMBRIA STEEL COMPANY,
By FRANK HAGERMAN,
Its Solicitors.

[Endorsed:] Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on January 22, 1914.

1266 (Order Denying Motion of Cambria Steel Company for Leave to Amend Original Bill of Complaint.)

December Term, 1913.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1914.

These causes having been called for further hearing, came on to be heard upon the motion of the Cambria Steel Company for leave to amend its original bill of complaint herein as stated in the motion and was argued by counsel.

On Consideration Whereof, it is now ordered by this Court, that said motion of the Cambria Steel Company for leave to amend its original bill of complaint, be, and the same is hereby denied.

January 22, 1914.

(Order Fixing Amount of Supersedeas Bond on Appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

December Term, 1913.

THURSDAY, January 22, 1914.

Upon application of counsel for the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, it is now here ordered that the amount of the bond on an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to operate as a supersedeas of the decree of this Court, in the above entitled causes, be, and the same is hereby fixed at the sum of Six Hundred Thousand Dollars ($600,000.00).

January 22, 1914.

(Petition of Kansas City Southern Railway Company for, and Order Allowing Appeal to the Supreme Court, U. S.

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company respectfully shows that the above entitled cause, in which there are separate appeals by the Guardian Trust Company and by the Central Improvement Company, is now pending in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, and that a final judgment and decree has therein been rendered on the 2nd day of December, 1913, 1267 reversing the decree of the Circuit (now District) Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Western District of Missouri, and directing said District Court to enter a specified judgment and decree in favor of the Guardian Trust Company; that the matter in controversy in said suit exceeds the sum of One Thousand Dollars ($1,000) besides costs; that this cause is one in which the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit has not final jurisdiction, and that it is a proper case to be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal.

Wherefore, the said appellant prays that an appeal be allowed it in the above entitled cause, directing the Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit to send the record and proceedings in said cause, with all things concerning the same, to the Supreme Court of the United States in order that the errors, complained of in the assignment of errors herewith filed by the said appellant may be reviewed and that if error be found, corrected according to the laws and customs of the United States.

SAMUEL UNTERMYER,
SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Solicitors for Appellant.

Appeal allowed and bond in the sum of Six Hundred Thousand Dollars ($600,000) is hereby approved to operate as a supersedeas this 24th day of January, A. D. 1914.

WALTER H. SANBORN,
Presiding Judge U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

[Endorsed:] Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on January 24, 1914.

(Assignment of Errors by Kansas City Southern Railway Company on Appeal to Supreme Court, U. S.)

Now comes the appellant, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and says that in the record and proceedings herein, there is manifest error, and that the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit erred in this, to-wit:

1. In holding and deciding that The Kansas City South-
1268 ern Railway Company was liable for and required to pay to the Guardian Trust Company the indebtedness of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the Guardian Trust Company.

2. In holding and deciding that the rights and equities of the Guardian Trust Company in the properties and capital stock of the Central Improvement Company were prior and superior to the rights and equities therein of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

3. In holding and deciding that the Guardian Trust Company was not estopped by its participation in, and the benefits received and retained by it from, and growing out of the plan of reorganization involved herein, from maintaining that The Kansas City Southern Railway Company was or is liable for the indebtedness of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company to the Guardian Trust Company.

4. In deciding and passing upon the issue of the alleged liability of the appellant for the indebtedness of the Belt Company, in the absence of any exception taken before the master, or in the lower court, challenging the correctness of the finding of the master that the appellant was not liable for such indebtedness.

Wherefore, the appellant prays that said judgment and decree of the said Circuit Court of Appeals may be reversed in all things.

SAMUEL UNTERMYER,
SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Solicitors for Appellant.

[Endorsed:] Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on January 24, 1914.

(Supersedeas Bond on Appeal to Supreme Court of the United States by Kansas City Southern Railway Company.)

Know all men by these presents: That, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, as Principal and American Surety Company of New York as Surety, acknowledge themselves to be jointly indebted unto the Guardian Trust Company in the full and just sum of Six Hundred Thousand Dollars ($600,000) for the payment of which to the Guardian Trust Company they bind themselves and each of their successors and assigns jointly and severally, 1269 firmly by these presents.

Sealed with our seals and dated the 23rd day of January, A. D. 1914.

Whereas the appellant in the above entitled suit has prosecuted an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to reverse the decree rendered and entered in said cause in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit on the 2nd day of December, 1913.

Now, therefore, the condition of this obligation is such that if the said appellant shall prosecute said appeal to effect and answer all damages and costs if it fails to make said appeal good, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise to remain in full force and virtue.

In witness whereof said The Kansas Southern Railway Company has caused this instrument to be executed by its Treasurer, he being thereunto duly authorized, and the American Surety Company of New York has caused the same to be executed by its resident Vice-President, its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and attested by its resident Assistant Secretary.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
By H. VISSCHER, Its Treasurer.
[SEAL.] AMERICAN SURETY COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
By R. E. VALENTINE, Resident Vice-President.
Attest:
ROBERT S. KING,
Resident Assistant Secretary.

The above and foregoing bond is hereby approved to operate as a supersedeas this 24th day of January, 1914.

WALTER H. SANBORN,
Presiding Judge U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

O. K.
____ ____,
____ ____,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company.

1270 Extract from the Record Book of the Board of Trustees of the American Surety Company of New York.

The first meeting of the Board of Trustees of the American Surety Company of New York, after the annual Stockholders' meeting, was held at the office of the Company, No. 100 Broadway, New York City, on Tuesday, January 21, 1913, at eleven o'clock A. M.

"The Secretary read the report of the Nominating Committee as follows:

"To the Board of Trustees of the American Surety Company of New York.

"GENTLEMEN: The Committee appointed by the Executive Committee of this Company at their meeting held Tuesday, December 10, 1912, for the purpose of nominating * * * officers of the Company, * * * for the ensuing year and until their successors are elected, beg leave to report as follows:

"We nominate for * * *

Place.

Kansas City, Mo.

Resident Vice Presidents:

A. A. Tomlinson,
E. F. Swinney,
Robert F. Porter,
R. E. Valentine.

Resident Assistant Secretaries:

Robert F. Porter,
R. E. Valentine,
C. E. Chadduck.

* * * * * * *

"Whereupon, it was

"Resolved, that the Secretary be authorized to cast one ballot on behalf of the Trustees present, for the Members of the Executive Committee, Finance Committee, Committee on Accounts, Committee on Capital Box, Officers and Counsel, as recommended by the Nominating Committee for the ensuing year and until their successors are elected; which was done, and thereupon the aforementioned persons were declared to have been unanimously elected to their respective offices for the ensuing year and until their successors are elected.

1271 * * * * * * *

"The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, that the Resident Vice President be and they hereby are, and each of them is hereby, authorized and empowered to execute and to deliver and to attach the seal of the Company to any and all obligations for or on behalf of the Company, such obligations, however, to be attested in every instance by the Resident Assistant Secretary."

* * * * * * *

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

I, H. A. Reiss, Assistant Secretary of the American Surety Company of New York, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing extracts and transcripts, from the Record Book of the Board of Trustees of the American Surety Company of New York, with the original record of said Board, and that the same are correct extracts and transcripts therefrom as they appear of record and are set forth and contained in said Record Book; and I further certify that I have compared the foregoing resolutions with the originals thereof, as recorded in the Minute Book of said Company, and do certify that the same is a correct and true transcript therefrom, and of the whole of said original resolutions; and that the said resolutions have not been revoked or rescinded.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Company, at the City of New York, this 5th day of February, 1913.

[SEAL.] H. A. REISS,
Assistant Secretary.

Extract from the Record Book of the Executive Committee of the American Surety Company of New York.

"A meeting of the Executive Committee of the American Surety Company of New York was held on the 18th day of 1272 March, 1913.

* * * * * * *

"The following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, that Robert S. King, of Kansas City, Mo., be and he is hereby constituted and appointed a Resident Assistant Secretary of this Company at the town or city aforesaid, with full power and authority to attest any and all surety bonds and undertakings, for or on behalf of this Company, in its business and in accordance with its charter; such bonds and undertakings to have in every instance, however, the seal of this Company affixed thereto, and to be executed on behalf of this Company by one of its Resident Vice Presidents."

STATE OF NEW YORK,
County of New York, ss:

I, W. H. Riley, Assistant Secretary of the American Surety Company of New York, do hereby certify that I have compared the foregoing extracts and transcripts, from the Record Book of the Executive Committee of the American Surety Company of New York, with the original record of said Executive Committee, and that the same are correct extracts and transcripts therefrom as they appear of record and are set forth and contained in said Record Book; and I further certify that I have compared the foregoing resolution with the original thereof, as recorded in the Minute Book of said Company, and do certify that the same is a correct and true transcript therefrom, and of the whole of said original resolution; and that the said resolution has not been revoked or rescinded.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Company, at the City of New York, this 20th day of Nov., 1913.

[SEAL.] W. H. RILEY,
Assistant Secretary.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 24, 1914.

1273 (Affidavit as to Notice to and Refusal of Cambria Steel Company to Join in Appeal to the Supreme Court U. S.)

STATE OF MISSOURI,
City of St. Louis, ss:

S. W. Moore, of lawful age, being duly sworn upon his oath states: On January 19th, 1914, as counsel for The Kansas City Southern Railway Company in the Guardian Trust Case pending in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, I sent to Frank Hagerman as counsel for the Cambria Steel Company, the Complainant in said action, the following telegram signed by myself and addressed to him at the Biltmore Hotel, New York City, "Please wire me acceptance of service of notice in behalf of Cambria Company to join in appeal in Guardian Trust Case and your refusal to join, unless you are willing to join in appeal, in which event please wire me to that effect."

The answering telegram from Mr. Hagerman was received by me January 21st, 1914, before 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, dated New York, January 20th, 1914, addressed to me and signed Frank Hagerman, as follows: "On behalf of Cambria Steel Company I accept notice as served but decline to join in your appeal."

S. W. MOORE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 21st day of January, 1914.

[SEAL.] JOHN D. JORDAN,
Clerk U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

(Endorsed:) Filed in U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Jan. 22, 1914.

1274 United States of America to Guardian Trust Company, Central Improvement Company, Cambria Steel Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Greeting:

You are hereby notified that, in a certain case in equity in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, wherein Central Improvement Company and Guardian Trust Company are separate appellants, and Cambria Steel Company, The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and others, are appellees, an appeal has been allowed the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, appellee therein, to the Supreme Court of the United States. You are hereby cited and admonished to be and appear in said court at Washington, D. C., thirty (30) days after the date of this citation to show cause, if any there be, why the order and decree appealed from should not be corrected and speedy justice done the parties in that behalf.

Witness the Honorable Walter H. Sanborn, Presiding Judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, this the 24th day of January, A. D. 1914.

WALTER H. SANBORN,
Presiding Judge of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Western Division of the Western District of Missouri:

We hereby acknowledge due service of the within citation this 27th day of January, 1914.

EDWARD P. GATES,
GEO. H. ENGLISH, JR.,
Solicitors for Guardian Trust Company.
FRANK HAGERMAN,
Solicitor for Cambria Steel Company.
THOMAS D. MARKS,
Solicitor for Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company.
J. A. EDSON,
President Central Improvement Company.

1275 [Endorsed:] Supreme Court of the U. S., October term, 1913. No. —. Kansas City Southern Railway Company, appellant, vs. Guardian Trust Company et al. Citation. Filed Jan. 30, 1914, John D. Jordan, Clerk.

1276 (Clerk's Certificate.)

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

I, John D. Jordan, Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, do hereby certify that the foregoing transcript composed of two volumes, Volume I consisting of pages a to 1080, inclusive, and Volume II consisting of pages 1081 to 1275, inclusive, contains the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri as prepared and printed for use on the hearing in said Circuit Court of Appeals and also full, true and complete copies of all the pleadings, record entries and proceedings, including the opinions, had and filed in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit except the full captions, titles and endorsements in the proceedings had and filed in said Circuit Court of Appeals which are omitted in pursuance of the rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, in certain causes in said Circuit Court of Appeals, wherein the Central Improvement Company, et al., are Appellants, and the Cambria Steel Company, et al., are Appellees, No. 3489, and wherein the Guardian Trust Company is Appellant, and the Cambria Steel Company, et al., are Appellees, No. 3490, as full, true and complete as the originals of the same remain on file and of record in my office.

I do further certify that the original citation with acknowledgment of service endorsed thereon, on the appeal of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company to the Supreme Court of the United States, is hereto attached and herewith returned.

In Testimony Whereof, I hereunto subscribe my name and affix the seal of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, at office in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, this thirtieth day of January, A. D. 1914.

[Seal United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.]

JOHN D. JORDAN,
Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

Endorsed on cover: File No. 24,092. U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 8th Circuit. Term No. 387. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, appellant, vs. Guardian Trust Company, Central Improvement Company, Cambria Steel Company, and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Co. Filed March 10th, 1914. File No. 24,092.

(Clerk's Certificate.)

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Eighth Circuit.

I, E. E. Koch, Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, do hereby certify that the foregoing printed record in the case of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Appellant, v. Guardian Trust Company, et al., No. 387, October Term, 1914, and File No. 24,092, filed in the Supreme Court of the United States on the appeal of appellant, is one of the copies submitted to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit for consideration in cause No. 7784, Guardian Trust Company, Henry C. Flower, Receiver, Appellant, vs. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, being referred to in the stipulation of parties at page 139 of the printed record in said cause No. 7784 and approved by said Circuit Court of Appeals in the Order appearing on Page A of the printed record in said cause No. 7784.

This copy of the printed record so filed in the Supreme Court is being transmitted with the certified transcript of the record in said cause No. 7784 pursuant to præcipe for transcript filed by counsel for appellee in said cause No. 7784.

In Testimony Whereof, I hereunto subscribe my name and affix the seal of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, at office in the City of St. Louis, Missouri, this sixteenth day of November, A. D. 1928.

[SEAL.]

E. E. KOCH,
Clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

FILE COPY

FILED
JAN 10 19
CHARLES ELMORE

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1928.

No. [redacted] 22

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

v.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
Henry C. Flower, Receiver Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

January 9, 1929.

Pandick Press, Inc., 22 Thames St., New York, U. S. A.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Petition for Writ of Certiorari	1
Principal Question Involved	2
Summary and Short Statement of the Matter Involved	3
Chronological Statement of the Proceedings	3
Reasons Relied on for Allowance of the Writ	7

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1928.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,
v.
GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
Respondent.
No.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

TO THE HONORABLE THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, the petitioner herein, respectfully presents its application for a writ of certiorari, requiring the United States circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit to certify to the Supreme Court of the United States for its review and determination the case of Guardian Trust Company, Appellant, v. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Appellee, decided May 18, 1928 (28 F. (2d) 233). Petitioner's motion for a rehearing was filed July 16, 1928 (Rec. 751-821), and was overruled October 18, 1928 (Rec. 821).

NOTE: The transcript of the record brought to this Court consists of two volumes. The first, in point of time, is a copy of the record in the original case in this Court, in Guardian Trust Co. v. The Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., reported in 240 U. S. 166. References to its pages are as follows: "(S. C. Rec.)." The second volume is a transcript of subsequent proceedings in the district court and circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. References to its pages are as follows: "(Rec.)."

Principal Question Involved.

The principal question involved in this application is the following:

Was the district court for the western district of Missouri, upon receipt of the mandate of this Court in The Kansas City Southern Railway Company v. Guardian Trust Company, 240 U. S. 166, required or authorized to tax against petitioner, in its final decree, costs "as between solicitor and client," including therein the disbursements of the Trust Company for attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred during the entire period of the litigation?

The district court held (Rec. 704-720) that only costs as between party and party should be taxed, and rendered its final decree accordingly (Rec. 128-131). Such costs have been duly taxed and paid, and are not involved herein. Our contention is that the district court was clearly right in its ruling.

The circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, upon appeal by the Trust Company, held that our federal courts possess the powers of the English Chancery Court over the taxation of costs, and, purporting to exercise those powers, it reversed the decree of the district court (Rec. 722-749) and remanded the case with instructions to tax costs "as between solicitor and client." Its decree requires the taxation, as costs against petitioner, of attorneys' fees, and other disbursements of the Trust Company, in the sum of approximately $300,000 (Rec. 59). Petitioner seeks a review by this Court of the decree of the circuit court of appeals.

It is believed that this highly important question of federal practice can be determined by the Court as a matter of law, without opening the record in this twenty-eight year old case.

Summary and Short Statement of the Matter Involved.

For a statement of the facts involved in this litigation up to the time of this Court's decision, 240 U. S. 166, we adopt the statement of facts contained in the opinion.

Chronological Statement of the Proceedings.

In order that the proceedings subsequent to this Court's decision, above referred to, may be viewed in relation to the case as a whole, we summarize the entire proceedings from beginning to end in chronological order. A somewhat fuller statement will be found in the accompanying brief.

(a) In September, 1900 (S. C. Rec. 3) the Cambria Company, a judgment creditor of the Belt Company, brought suit for an accounting, in the federal court at Kansas City, Missouri, against the Trust Company, praying for a cancellation of the alleged indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company, and that the collateral held by the Trust Company to secure said alleged debt be released and subjected to the Cambria Company's debt. The gravamen of the bill was that for a period of years the Trust Company, through a community of officers and directors, had dominated and controlled the Gulf Company and a number of affiliated companies, including the Belt Company, and that by reason of such domination and control had imposed large and unwarranted charges against those companies, including the Belt Company, and that upon a true accounting between the Belt Company and the Trust Company, it would appear that the Belt Company was in no way indebted to the Trust Company. The Trust Company answered the bill (S. C. Rec. 33), consenting to an accounting (S. C. Rec. 48).

(b) The Belt Company and its receivers intervened in the action in 1901 by ancillary bill (S. C. Rec. 97). This ancillary bill was filed pursuant to stipulation (S. C. Rec. 890), providing that "the accounting * * * sought by the said ancillary bill shall be expedited by all of the parties hereto." The receivers, in becoming parties to the action, were acting under instructions contained in the order of the court appointing them (S. C. Rec. 29). The ancillary bill made substantially the same allegations against the Trust Company as were made by the Cambria Company and prayed for a cancellation of the alleged indebtedness and a release of the collateral security. The Trust Company answered the ancillary bill (S. C. Rec. 115), affirming the alleged indebtedness and offering to make such accounting as the court might require (S. C. Rec. 148). Amended pleadings were subsequently filed.

(c) In April, 1905, petitioner, pursuant to stipulation (S. C. Rec. 164), intervened in the case (S. C. Rec. 166), upon the ground that the Gulf mortgage and the Belt mortgage covered after-acquired property, so that petitioner, as the purchaser under foreclosure sales, was entitled to the securities in the Trust Company's hands, or the properties represented by such securities.

The Trust Company answered the intervening petition (S. C. Rec. 186) alleging, among other things, that petitioner was liable for the Belt Company's debt. This liability issue, which thereafter became the dominant issue in the action, was one which the Trust Company itself injected into the case in 1905. It is largely the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the Trust Company incurred in litigating this issue which it now seeks to impose upon petitioner.

(d) Testimony was taken, the case was argued and submitted to the special master in the summer of 1906, and in June, 1910, the lower court rendered a final decree (S. C. Rec. 903). It reduced the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company by three items, and in other respects affirmed it. The properties of the Central Improvement Company, which were the most valuable part of the collateral held by the Trust Company, were awarded to petitioner; and petitioner was held to be in no way obligated for the payment of the Trust Company's debt against the Belt Company.

(e) The Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, alleging as error (201 Fed. 817) that the district court erred, first, in incorporating in the decree the finding that petitioner was not liable for the Belt Company's debt; secondly, in awarding the Central Improvement Company's properties to petitioner; and, thirdly, in taxing one-third of the costs against the Trust Company.

(f) The circuit court of appeals, on October 22, 1912, reversed the decree of the lower court, holding that petitioner was liable for the debt of the Belt Company (201 Fed. 811).

(g) A reargument was had in the circuit court of appeals and a second opinion handed down, on December 2, 1913 (210 Fed. 696), affirming, in somewhat more vigorous and emphatic language, the conclusions reached in its first opinion. The lower court was directed (pp. 723, 724) to enter a specific decree, complete in all its details, including the taxation of "costs". The Trust Company was awarded a money judgment against petitioner for the amount of the Belt Company's debt, with a sale of the collateral in the event of a failure to pay the judgment.

The court also (pp. 722, 723) denied the petition of three intervening stockholders of the Trust Company, asking that the lower court be directed, after the entry of the amount of the decree, to render a further decree in favor of the Trust Company and against petitioner for the aggregate amount of the attorney's fees, stenographers' fees and expert accountants' fees incurred by the Trust Company, or, in the alternative, that the Trust Company be permitted to bring an independent suit for such sums.

(h) Petitioner appealed to this Court (S. C. Rec. 1057), and, in response to a motion to dismiss, filed its application for certiorari, which this Court, by order entered May 11, 1914, held should be granted on account of the nature of the questions involved, in the event that an appeal did not lie.

(i) The decree of the circuit court of appeals was affirmed by this Court on February 21, 1916, the Chief Justice and one of the Associate Justices dissenting (240 U. S. 166). In April, 1916, petitioner paid the Trust Company in full the debt and interest, amounting to $821,623.28 (Rec. 129).

(j) Six years later, in 1922, upon notice for a settlement of the decree in the district court under the mandate of this Court, application was made by the Trust Company (Rec. 16) for the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. The motion was at first sustained by the district court in June, 1923 (Rec. 691-704), upon the existing record and without new issues or additional evidence, and a master was appointed to take and state the account of disbursements made by the Trust Company. This was done; the report of the master showing that approximately $300,000 should be taxed against petitioner on account of the Trust Company's attorneys' fees and other disbursements from beginning to end (Rec. 59). The ordinary costs as between party and party were small, and have been paid in full.

Later, the district court granted a reargument of the entire question, and after further and exhaustive consideration, reached the conclusion, in March, 1926, that only costs as between party and party were taxable against petitioner (Rec. 704-720). A final decree (Rec. 128) was thereupon entered in accordance therewith.

(k) The Trust Company appealed from the final decree to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, and the latter, on May 18, 1928 (Rec. 722), reversed the decree of the lower court, and remanded the case with instructions to tax costs "as between solicitor and client." Petitioner filed a motion for a rehearing (Rec. 751-821), which was overruled on October 18, 1928 (Rec. 821).

(l) It is to review this last-named judgment that this application for certiorari is made.

Reasons Relied On for Allowance of the Writ.

I.

It is the practice of this Court (St. L., K. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 217 U. S. 247, 251) to issue its writ of certiorari to review the action of the circuit court of appeals in passing upon the proper execution of this Court's mandate, where, as here, controversies have arisen in reference thereto.

This Court (240 U. S. 166) affirmed the decree of the circuit court of appeals (210 Fed. 696), which (pp. 723, 724) directed the entry, in the district court, of a specific decree, complete in all its details, awarding a money judgment in favor of the Trust Company, with "costs," and left the "taxation of costs" to the court below "under the principles, rules and practice in equity."

The circuit court of appeals has construed the opinion and mandate of this Court to mean the taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client." We confidently contend that this was error, and that the opinion and mandate of this Court contemplated and required only the taxation of costs in the usual manner, between party and party.

II.

The opinion and judgment of the circuit court of appeals are directly in conflict with the Act of Congress of 1853 (28 U. S. C. A., sec. 571, 572), providing that certain specified fees "and no other" shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the courts of the United States. Its provisions are as follows:

> The following fees and no other shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the courts of the United States, and to district attorneys, except in cases otherwise expressly provided by law. But nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit attorneys, solicitors, and proctors from charging to and receiving from their clients, other than the Government, such reasonable compensation for their services, in addition to the taxable costs, as may be in accordance with general usage in their respective States, or may be agreed upon between the parties.

> On a trial before a jury, in civil or criminal causes or before referees, or on a final hearing in equity or admiralty, a docket fee of $20: Provided, That in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where the libelant recovers less than $50, the docket fee of his proctor shall be but $10.

Since the date of that enactment, it has been the uniform and accepted practice in federal courts to refuse to tax as costs attorney's fees and other expenses incurred by the successful party in excess of the amount fixed by that statute. This rule was authoritatively established in Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211, and has since been followed and accepted as the settled rule of practice and procedure. The only exception to the rule, aside from statutes imposing attorneys' fees as costs or as a part of the judgment, is in the case of allowances made in the administration of trust funds or trust estates, which is a feature wholly absent in this case, as is pointed out in the brief.

III.

The opinion and judgment of the circuit court of appeals are in conflict with the following applicable decisions of this Court:

The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377;
Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211;
Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497;
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530;
Missouri Pacific R. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459;
Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238.

IV.

The decision of the circuit court of appeals is in conflict with the following decisions of the court of appeals for the seventh circuit: McIntosh v. Ward, 158 Fed. 66; Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556; and also in conflict with the following decisions of the court of appeals for the fourth circuit; Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245; Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246; and with the following decisions of the court of appeals for the second circuit: Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63; Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 F. (2d) 460.

V.

The opinion and judgment of the circuit court of appeals, authorizing the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, under or by analogy to the English system of taxation of costs, where attorneys' fees, fixed by law, are included as costs in all cases, constitute a radical and revolutionary departure from the usual, accepted and established course of judicial proceedings in this country from its beginning until the present time.

If the courts of this country are to incorporate into its jurisprudence the English doctrine of the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, it is a matter of such great importance to all citizens, as well as to bench and bar, as to invoke the deliberate consideration and judgment of this Court.

The opinion and judgment of the circuit court of appeals operate to deny one of the fundamental principles of our government, that every one is entitled to free access to our courts. This essential right of every citizen would cease to exist if an intending litigant were threatened and menaced with punishment of this character for his failure, perhaps through no fault of his own, to anticipate the conclusion which some court or jury may ultimately reach as to the merits of his case.

VI.

The extraordinary character of the judgment of the court of appeals is plainly apparent when we consider the conceded fact that it requires petitioner to pay the attorneys' fees and other disbursements of the Trust Company during the entire period of this litigation, from beginning to end. This period includes the Trust Company's appeal to the circuit court of appeals, where the questions involved were regarded by that court as of such difficulty that it permitted a reargument of the case (201 Fed. 811, 210 Fed. 696), and of such grave importance by this Court that it held (May 11, 1914) that if an appeal did not lie, certiorari should be granted because of the nature of the case, and where, upon the final decision of this Court (240 U. S. 166), the Chief Justice and one of the Associate Justices dissented. These proceedings followed the rendition of the final decree in the lower court in June, 1910 (S. C. Rec. 903), and involved only questions of law.

A judicial decision that petitioner should be penalized by the payment of the Trust Company's expenses for attorney's fees and other disbursements, for resisting the Trust Company's appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and for appealing from that court to this Court, where exceedingly difficult and complicated questions of law were involved, is obviously of a radical and revolutionary character. The duty of this Court to review a decision of that character would appear to be beyond question.

VII.

The circuit court of appeals has, we respectfully submit, committed a grave error of a most prejudicial character by incorporating in its opinion (Rec. 735) the astounding statement concerning what it is pleased to call "the vexatious character of the whole litigation." It does this not only in a case where, as pointed out in the preceding paragraph, exceedingly difficult and complicated questions of law were involved, but in face of the fact that the evidence in the case was not brought to that court and was not before it (201 Fed. 816); in face of the fact that no issue of that character was made, or evidence taken, or opportunity afforded for the production of testimony; and, furthermore, in face of the fact that when demand was being made in the district court by the Trust Company for the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, petitioner filed its application for leave to adduce testimony to prove the entire good faith of the litigation from beginning to end, setting forth in detail the facts sought to be proved (Rec. 33); and this application was denied (Rec. 45).

This imputation of bad faith not only has no support whatsoever in the record, but is coupled with a denial of any and all opportunity to enjoy the fundamental right of a day in court, guaranteed to every citizen.

VIII

The circuit court of appeals decided certain important questions of general law in a way probably untenable and in conflict with the weight of authority, as follows:

(1) It held that the Trust Company, a pledgee of securities as collateral to the debt of the Belt Company, was compelled to litigate not only the validity and amount of its debt, but the title of the pledgor to the pledged property; and that it, under these circumstances, was entitled to a taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. But it appeared without contradiction that the Trust Company litigated the amount of its claim and the title to the pledged property, not in caring for or preserving the pledged property, nor for the benefit of the Belt Company, which was the pledgor, but to protect its own individual and personal interest as a creditor of the Belt Company. In these circumstances, the great weight of authority is against the right of the Trust Company either to a taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, or to an allowance out of a fund.

(2) It held that the complainants brought suit to charge the Trust Company as an express or constructive trustee, or to charge it with the obligations resting upon trustees, and that the Trust Company is therefore entitled to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. But the conceded fact is that the Trust Company in its answer disclaimed any trust relationship in the matter complained of, and denied that it had assumed any of the obligations resting upon trustees, and the finding and decree of the court upon this issue was in favor of the Trust Company. It thus appeared that there was no trusteeship, and that none of the obligations of trustees had been assumed. In these circumstances, the great weight of authority is against the right of the Trust Company either to a taxation of costs as between solicitor, or to an allowance out of a fund.

(3) It held that the Trust Company, in fastening a liability upon petitioner for its debt against the Belt Company, had brought a fund into the constructive possession of the court, and that it, therefore, was entitled to an allowance of costs as between solicitor and client, by analogy to a creditor who sues in behalf of himself and others and succeeds in bringing a fund into court for distribution. But the conceded fact is that the Trust Company recovered a personal judgment against petitioner, without segregating a fund in kind and bringing its corpus into a court of equity for distribution. This judgment was promptly paid in full, with interest. The Trust Company is not, therefore, entitled to costs as between solicitor and client, or to any further allowance, either from the fund or from petitioner. This proposition is sustained by the great weight of authority.

WHEREFORE, petitioner respectfully prays that its application for a writ of certiorari may be granted.

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
COUNTY OF NEW YORK, } ss.:

G. C. HAND, being duly sworn, says:

I am Vice-President of The Kansas City Southern Railway Company and make this affidavit in its behalf. I have read the foregoing petition, and the same is true of my own knowledge, information and belief.

G. C. HAND.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 9th day of January, 1929.

BARBARA STOIBER
Notary Public,
New York County
County Clerk's No. 436, Reg. No. 0-75
Term expires March 30, 1930

I hereby certify that I have examined the foregoing petition, and in my opinion the petition is well founded, and the case is one in which the prayer of the petitioner should be granted by this Court.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel for Petitioner.

FILE COPY

Office Supreme Court
FILED
JAN 10 192
CHARLES ELMORE C

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1928.

No. ~~21~~ 22

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,

Petitioner,

v.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
Henry C. Flower, Receiver Respondent.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER'S APPLICATION FOR CERTIORARI.

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

January 7, 1929.

Pandick Press, Inc., 22 Thames St., New York, U. S. A.

INDEX.

	PAGE
The opinions delivered in the courts below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Statement	2
The bill of the Cambria Company	2
The Trust Company's answer to the bill of the Cambria Company	4
The ancillary bill	6
The Trust Company's answer to the ancillary bill	6
The intervening petition and the Trust Company's answer	7
The charge of fraud	9
The accounting before the master	12
The decree of June, 1910, and subsequent proceedings	13
The decree of May, 1926, and subsequent proceedings	13
Specification of errors	15

Argument:

I. The proper execution of the mandate of this Court required the taxation of costs only as between party and party, and did not require or authorize the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client 17

II. We earnestly contend that the lower court committed a grave error (1) in holding "that the Federal Courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow in proper cases costs 'as between solicitor and client,'" as such jurisdiction is exercised by the English Court of Chancery, and (2) in applying that erroneous principle to the facts in this case 22

PAGE

Early statutes and rules of court..... 23
Early decisions of this Court..... 25
The Act of 1853, and its construction by this Court..... 26
Decisions of Circuit Courts of Appeal 33
Counsel fees incurred after the decree of June, 1910..... 35

III. The fact that complainants sought unsuccessfully to charge the Trust Company with the duties and obligations of a trustee, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client..... 38

IV. The litigation conducted by the Trust Company for its own benefit with respect to the collateral security, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client..... 41

V. It is contrary to both reason and authority to base an allowance of counsel fees in this case upon the assumption that the Trust Company uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid..... 44
The lower court's ruling is in direct conflict with the applicable authorities 46

VI. The statement in the opinion that the entire litigation was vexatious, is entirely unwarranted for the reasons: First, it is wholly unsupported by the record; secondly, it is in conflict with the opinion and mandate of this Court in this case (240 U. S. 166); thirdly, the record, as it stands, shows affirmatively the complete good faith of petitioner and the others associated with it during the entire litigation; and, fourthly, petitioner was wrongfully denied the right to introduce evidence in its own behalf upon that issue 52

Cases and Authorities Cited.

	PAGE
Act of 1853, 28 U. S. C. A. Secs. 571, 573	22, 26
Apollon, The, 9 Wheat. 362	25, 27
Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306	25, 29, 31
Attorney General v. North Am. Life Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 57	52
Baltimore, The, 8 Wall. 377	19, 27, 31
Boothe v. Coal Co., 72 Wash. 679	52
Bray v. West, 9 Simons, 429	40
Buell v. Kanawha Lumber Corp., 201 Fed. 762, 768	46
Bulkeley v. The Earl of Eglington, 1 Jur. 994	40
Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307	25, 27
Constitution of Missouri, Art. II, Sec. 10	37
26 Corpus Juris, 1061	9
20 Cyc. 825	50
Daniell's Chancery Practice, Vol. 1, p. 1011	40
Daniell's Chancery Pleading & Practice, Vol. 2, p. 1376	23
Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363	25
Doddridge County Oil & Gas Co. v. Smith, 173 Fed. 386	21
Equity Rules 33, 90	24
Ex Parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317	17
Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 275 U. S. 70, 73	22
Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556	34
Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Co., 254 U. S. 590	9
Giles v. Randall, 1 K. B. D. 290, 296	23
Godefroi's Law of Trusts, p. 28	40
Groves v. Sentell, 153 U. S. 465, 486	52
Guardian Trust Co. v. K. C. Southern Ry. Co., 201 Fed. 811, 211 Fed. 696	13, 17

PAGE

Guardian Trust Co. v. K. C. Southern Ry. Co., 28 F. (2d) 233 ..... 1, 15, 22

Hauerstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 490 52
Heap v. Jones, 5 W. R. 106 40
Huff v. Bidwell, 195 Fed. 430 49

Johnson v. United Rys. Co., 247 Mo. 326, 152 S. W. 362 47
Judicial Code, Sec. 240, 28 U. S. C. A., Sec. 347 2

Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co., 240 U. S. 166 ..... 13, 17, 52
Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245 21

Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246 34
Lewin, Law of Trusts, p. 1267 39

McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66 33
Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 F. (2d) 460 35
Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340 51
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530 31
Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459 ..... 19, 31, 37
Missouri, Rev. St. 1919, Sec. 1398 45
Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanston 201 40
Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63 .. 34

Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482 36
Norway v. Norway, 2 M. & K. 278 40

Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211 ..... 19, 20, 28, 30, 31

Perry on Trusts, 6th Ed., Sec. 896 39
Pickel v. Pickel, 147 S. W. 1059 50
Pike v. Cincinnati R. Co., 179 Fed. 97, 103 52

Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247 17
Re Washington R. Co., 140 U. S. 91 17
Report of Mr. Justice Nelson, 1 Blatch. C. C. 652 24
Riddle v. Hudgins, 58 Fed. 490, 494 52
Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court, 2 L. Ed. 23

PAGE

St. Louis, K. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 217 U. S. 247, 251 17
Savage v. Sherman, 87 N. Y. 285 52
Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238 16 F. (2d) 288 19
Smith v. Equitable Trust Co., 215 Pa. 413 44
Straus v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 297 Fed. 791, 798 37

Tiffany and Bullard on Trusts and Trustees, p. 714 39
Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527 ..... 32, 46, 47
Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497 ..... 19, 20, 30

United States v. Smith, 240 Fed. 756 21
United States v. Terminal R. R. Assoc., 236 U. S. 194 17
United States v. Wilson, 193 Fed. 1007 21

Wagener v. Mars, 27 S. C. 97, 2 S. E. 844, 846 51
Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64 Iowa 741 37
Willard v. White, 56 Hun 581 44
Wolf v. Am. Tr. & Sav. Bank, 214 Fed. 761 44
Work v. Tibbits, 87 Hun 352 44

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1928.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Petitioner, v. GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Respondent.	No. .....

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER'S APPLICATION FOR CERTIORARI.

The opinions delivered in the courts below.

The official report of the opinion of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, sought to be reviewed herein, will be found in 28 F. (2d) 233. There were two opinions rendered in the district court, not yet officially reported. The first opinion, delivered in June, 1923, will be found in the record (Rec. 691); and the second opinion,

---

NOTE:—The transcript of the record brought to this Court consists of two volumes. The first, in point of time, is a copy of the record in the original case in this Court, in Guardian Trust Co. v. The Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., reported in 240 U. S. 166. References to its pages are as follows: "(S. C. Rec. .....)." The second volume is a transcript of subsequent proceedings in the district court and circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. References to its pages are as follows: "(Rec. .....)."

rendered in March, 1926, will be found in the record (Rec. 704). The Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit from the decree (Rec. 128) following the second opinion.

Jurisdiction.

This application for a writ of certiorari to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit is made under section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (28 U. S. C. A. sec. 347). The decision of that court was handed down on May 18, 1928 (Rec. 722-749). A motion for a rehearing was filed by petitioner on July 16, 1928 (Rec. 751-821), and was overruled on October 18, 1928 (Rec. 821). This application is made within three months after the overruling of said motion for a rehearing and after the entry of the decree sought to be reviewed by this Court.

Statement.

We desire to supplement the brief outline of the facts and proceedings contained in our Application, by a statement of the case so far as deemed material to a consideration of the questions presented, with appropriate page references to the printed record.

The bill of the Cambria Company.

This litigation had its inception in September, 1900, when the Cambria Steel Company, a judgment creditor of the Belt Company, filed a creditor's bill (S. C. Rec. 3) in the federal court at Kansas City, Mo., against the Trust Company, the Belt Company, and others.

The complaint alleged, in substance, that the Trust Company, prior to the year 1887, conceived and entered upon the plan and purpose to cause to be constructed a number of railroads, including that of the Belt Company, by various corporations, all to be organized by the Trust Company, and to be officered with officers and directors of the Trust Company, and thereby completely to dominate and control the actions of such railroad and other companies, and their several officers and directors; that it was the plan and purpose of the Trust Company to gather unto itself all the profits and other advantages accruing in the premises, and to foist upon such railroads, including the Belt Company, any losses that might be sustained or liabilities that might result in the premises.

It was further alleged that in carrying out its said plan and purpose, the Trust Company assumed the position and duty of trustee and agent in managing and disposing of the bonds, stocks, funds and other assets of such railroad and other companies, in trust for the use and benefit of the parties who might become concerned or interested therein; and that, consequently, the relation of the Trust Company to each and all of such railroad and auxiliary companies was that of principal, bound and charged with the duty to indemnify and protect the railroad and other companies, so employed and utilized in any particular transaction, against any and all losses, burdens and liabilities arising in the premises.

Then followed allegations as to the various companies organized and officered by the officers and directors of the Trust Company, and the various transactions whereby it was alleged losses had been sustained and, through the domination and control of the Trust Company, unlawfully charged to the Belt Company, and unlawful profits and charges made at the expense of the Belt Company, resulting, on March 31, 1899, in an apparent, but not a real, indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company in the sum of approximately $360,000; that on said date promissory notes were caused to be given by the Belt Company to the Trust Company to evidence its alleged indebtedness, and the Belt Comuany was caused to pledge with the Trust Company all its available securities as collateral to secure the same; that the giving of the notes and collateral was done fraudulently, through such domination and control, in anticipation of the insolvency and receivership of the Gulf Company, which occurred the following day, April 1, 1899; and the prayer was for an accounting, for a cancellation of the alleged indebtedness from the Belt Company to the Trust Company, the subjection of the collateral to the payment of complainant's debt, and for an injunction to restrain a threatened sale by the Trust Company of said collateral.

The Trust Company's answer to the bill of the Cambria Company.

The answer of the Trust Company (S. C. Rec. 33) denied the allegations of the bill, and particularly denied the existence of any trust relations in the following language (S. C. Rec. 42):

> Denies that in carrying out any of its plans and purposes as alleged in the bill of complaint the defendant assumed the position and duty of trustee and agent in managing and disposing of the bonds, stocks, funds and other assets of said railroad companies and auxiliary companies in trust, and for the use and benefit of the parties who might become interested therein, as alleged in the bill of complaint; and denies > that as a consequence of any such alleged position the relation of this defendant to any of such railroad companies and auxiliary companies in any wise became or was as principal bound and charged with the duty to indemnify or protect any such railroad or auxiliary company in any transaction against any loss, burden or liability, as alleged in the bill of complaint. Denies that it became the duty of the defendant, as to persons becoming interested in any of said railroad companies or auxiliary companies as creditors, to dispose of the stock, bonds, funds or other assets of any such railroad companies or auxiliary companies for the use and benefit of the persons interested therein, or who might become interested therein as creditors or otherwise, as alleged in the bill of complaint.

The Trust Company expressed a willingness to render a full and true account to the Belt Company, and to furnish all such information whenever thereunto lawfully and properly requested. It said (S. C. Rec. 48):

> . . . Notwithstanding the fact that the said Belt Company has at all times had full and true accounts and knowledge of all the transactions between it and this defendant as aforesaid; yet, if, for any reason, it desires further accounting or information as to any of the said matters or things, this defendant is ready and willing and hereby offers again to render a full and true account and to furnish all such information, whenever thereunto lawfully and properly requested.

Under the bill of the Cambria Company, the issue was one of debt or no debt between the Belt Company and the Trust Company.

The ancillary bill.

The ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers, under which the accounting was carried on, was filed in November, 1901 (S. C. Rec. 97), pursuant to stipulation (S. C. Rec. 890) which consented that the accounting sought should be expedited, and also required that the Belt Company should be a co-complainant with the receivers. This ancillary bill, as appears from the stipulation, superseded a so-called cross-bill, previously filed by the receivers as sole cross-complainants. The receivers became parties complainant pursuant to the instructions contained in the order appointing them (S. C. Rec. 29). The ancillary bill was substantially the same as the bill of the Cambria Company. It sought an accounting and a cancellation of the alleged indebtedness. An amended and supplemental ancillary bill was filed in March, 1905 (S. C. Rec. 202), in the nature of a surcharging and falsifying of the accounts brought in by the Trust Company (Rec. 15). A further amended ancillary bill was filed (S. C. Rec. 392), by stipulation (S. C. Rec. 391), in July, 1906, at the close of the taking of testimony, to conform the pleading to the proof. Its allegations are summarized by the master (S. C. Rec. 584, et seq.).

The Trust Company's answer to the ancillary bill.

The Trust Company answered the ancillary bill, in December, 1901 (S. C. Rec. 115), admitting the community of officers (S. C. Rec. 148), but denying that it had dominated and controlled the railroad companies, including the Belt Company. It also sought to justify its action in the various matters complained of, and offered to make such further accounting as might be desired. It said (S. C. Rec. 148): "The Trust Company has at all times stood ready, and is still ready and willing, to make such further accounting thereof as may by the court be required."

And, again, it said (S. C. Rec. 155):

> These defendants further state and show that they are ready and willing, if in the judgment of this court, they ought and should do so, to render a fuller accounting of any and all of the transactions of the Trust Company with any and all of said companies, in such manner and at such times as the Court may direct.

A similar answer, but pleading laches and the state statutes of limitation (S. C. Rec. 370), was filed (S. C. Rec. 312) to the first amended ancillary bill of complaint, and also (S. C. Rec. 461) to the second ancillary bill of complaint.

Under the ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers, the issue was one of debt or no debt between the Belt Company and the Trust Company.

The intervening petition and the Trust Company's answer.

Petitioner became a party to the litigation by intervening petition (S. C. Rec. 166), filed by stipulation (S. C. Rec. 164). It charged that the Gulf Company, the Belt Company and the Air Line had executed mortgages covering after-acquired property, the lien of which attached to certain of the collateral held by the Trust Company, or to the properties represented thereby; that petitioner, as purchaser at foreclosure sales of the properties of those companies, had become the owner thereof, and demand was made for the securities or the properties which they represented.

The answer of the Trust Company (S. C. Rec. 186) contained a denial of the allegations of the intervening petition, pleaded laches and the state statutes of limitation (S. C. Rec. 198), and further alleged (S. C. Rec. 199-201) that by reason of the reorganization of the Belt Company, petitioner had become liable for its debt to the Trust Company.

This liability issue, which thereafter became the dominant issue in the action, was one which the Trust Company itself injected into the case in 1905. It is largely the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the Trust Company incurred in litigating this issue which it now seeks to impose upon petitioner.

By stipulation (S. C. Rec. 267), petitioner was permitted to file an amended intervening petition, and to include therein its claim against the Trust Company for alleged breach of trust as trustee in the mortgage made by the Union Terminal Railroad Company; and the Trust Company consented that the issues so made should be referred to the special master, and waived any objection it might make to said intervening petition on the ground of multifariousness or other formal matters.

The amended intervening petition (S. C. Rec. 269) was substantially the same as the original pleading, except that (S. C. Rec. 288) it alleged that it was the duty of the Trust Company, under the mortgage of the Terminal Company, to see that as the bonds of the Union Terminal Railroad Company were sold, the proceeds thereof were used in the construction, completion and equipment of the railroad of the Union Terminal Railroad Company, and alleged a failure to perform this duty.

The answer of the Trust Company (S. C. Rec. 293) in the main followed its answer to the original intervening petition, but denied the alleged trusteeship in the matter complained of, asserting that no duty was imposed upon it, either by law or by the express terms of the mortgage, to see that the bonds as sold were used in the construction of the railroad, saying (S. C. Rec. 307):

> Respondent denies that either by law or by the express terms of said mortgage it was the duty of respondent to see that as said bonds were sold, proceeds thereof should be used in the construction, completion and equipment of said railroad. On the contrary respondent says that there was no such duty imposed either by the terms of said mortgage or by law.

Under the intervening petition of petitioner, the issue was two-fold; first, was petitioner the owner of the collateral security, or the properties represented thereby? Secondly, did petitioner assume the debt of the Belt Company?

The charge of fraud.

Much is said in the opinion of the lower court about the charge of fraud. It is true that fraud was charged on both sides; but the fraud charged against the Trust Company was in the nature of constructive fraud (26 C. J. 1061), arising from the relation of the parties, the common officers and directors controlling the corporations in question, and the alleged misuse by the Trust Company of the power derived from this community of interest, within the rule of the Geddes case, 254 U. S. 590.

The master did not feel that charges of actual fraud were involved in complainants' bills, except in the one instance of the transfer of collateral security by the Belt Company to the Trust Company on March 31, 1899, on the eve of the insolvency of the Gulf Company and the prospective loss of control by the Trust Company over the affairs of the Belt Company. The ancillary bill is summarized by the master (S. C. Rec. 584-592). The word "fraud" does not occur. The word "fraudulent" occurs but once (S. C. Rec. 592), and is there used to characterize the said transfer of the collateral security. In this connection, the master finds (S. C. Rec. 754) that when this transfer was made, the officers of the Trust Company knew that the Gulf Company would default in its interest and that receivers would be appointed for it, and that that would likely mean that the Trust Company would not thereafter have a controlling influence in Belt Company matters. These facts fairly justified the charge that the transfer was fraudulent.

The allegations of the intervening petition of petitioner are summarized by the master (S. C. Rec. 735-742). Neither the word "fraud" nor "fraudulent" appears.

The master's conception of complainants' bill was not that it abounded in charges of fraud, as suggested by the lower court, but that it was based upon the alleged domination and control by the Trust Company of the Belt Company. In this respect he says (S. C. Rec. 641):

> The underlying theory, upon which complainants' bill is grounded, is that the Trust Company dominated and controlled the Suburban Company, afterwards the Belt Company, and its constituent companies, and also, the subsidiary companies named in the bill, by virtue of causing the employees, officers and directors of the Trust Company to be elected officers and directors of the Suburban Company, and other corporations, and thereby placing the agents, employees and officers of the Trust Company in charge of such companies, respectively, so that these companies might be dominated and controlled at the behest and in the interest of the Trust Company, and, which complainants allege was done, continuously, through the period of years intervening between the incorporation of these companies and April, 1900, > when what was known as the Stilwell management of the Belt and allied companies, lost control, and the Southern Company, and those associated with it, acquired control thereof through the receivership and foreclosure proceedings, mentioned in the bill.

The Trust Company itself did not feel that charges of gross fraud or misconduct had been made against it. It deliberately took the position that the charges made were of constructive fraud, and not "actual fraud." This is a matter of record. The intervening stockholders of the Trust Company characterized the bill as "a mere cry of domination and constructive fraud" (S. C. Rec. 963). In the "Answer of Guardian Trust Company on rule to show cause," filed in the lower court on December 16, 1907, it is said, in paragraph 13 (S. C. Rec. 558):

> There is no valid cause of action against this defendant set up in the said ancillary bill of complaint; no actual fraud is charged therein and said bill presents a legally meaningless theory and an impossible case.

The foregoing statement is signed by Mr. Rosenberger and Mr. Mecartney, both counsel for the Trust Company at that time, and is sworn to by the former.

It thus appears that it was the deliberate opinion of the Trust Company in 1907, about a year after this case had been argued for two weeks before the special master, when the whole matter was fresh in the minds of counsel, that no "actual fraud" had been charged against it.

The accounting before the master.

As before stated, the Trust Company in its answer (S. C. Rec. 48, 148, 155) consented to an accounting, and by its stipulation (S. C. Rec. 891) agreed that the accounting should be had and expedited. The lower court, in March, 1908, in an unreported decision in this case, held that this stipulation evidenced the full consent of the Trust Company to an accounting. It said: "It (the Trust Company) has consented that the master take an accounting, finding and report as to the respective rights and claims of the parties to the property, notes, bonds and claims involved." Judge Trimble, counsel for the Trust Company when its answer was filed consenting to an accounting, consulted with his partners before that course was determined upon (Rec. 278).

New counsel for the Trust Company having come into the case, they raised before the master, in February, 1905, the right of complainants to an accounting, and the master ruled "that, under the circumstances, there shall be an accounting in this case"; and the Trust Company then demanded that complainants in the ancillary bill "specify the items of this long and complicated account which are in dispute here." Whereupon counsel for complainants in the ancillary bill, at the request of the Trust Company and in response to its motion, announced his intention to file, and afterwards filed, an amended bill surcharging and falsifying. This appears from a fragment of the proceedings before the master, found in the record, pages 14-15.

A large amount of testimony was taken before the master. It appears from an affidavit filed in the lower court that there were 6950 pages of oral evidence and 27,592 pages of documentary evidence, principally copies of vouchers and records. The case was argued for two weeks before the master in July, 1906 (S. C. Rec. 1023). The master's report was filed in May, 1910 (S. C. Rec. 575). It recommended (a) that the Trust Company's claim against the Belt Company be reduced by three items, aggregating $21,850 and interest, and sustained as to all other items; (b) that the lands of Central Improvement Company, which cost $169,349.60 (S. C. Rec. 280) and which were referred to in argument as having a value of $300,000 to $400,000 (S. C. Rec. 952), be conveyed to petitioner; and (c) that petitioner was not liable in any way for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company (S. C. Rec. 887).

The decree of June, 1910, and subsequent proceedings.

The lower court overruled all exceptions to the master's report and entered a final decree (S. C. Rec. 903), carrying out the recommendations of the master. The Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, which reversed the decree of the lower court (201 Fed. 811; 211 Fed. 696). Petititioner thereupon appealed to this Court, which affirmed the decree of the circuit court of appeals (240 U. S. 166). Petitioner, in April, 1916, paid the Trust Company $821,623.28 (Rec. 129), as the full amount of its claim, with interest. This proved to be an overpayment, which was adjusted in the final decree of May, 1926 (Rec. 130).

The decree of May, 1926, and subsequent proceedings.

Six years later, in October, 1922, the Trust Company moved in the district court for a final decree in accordance with the mandate of this Court (Rec. 15). The lower court in its first opinion, in June, 1923 (Rec. 691), reached the conclusion that costs should be taxed as between solicitor and client, and appointed a master (Rec. 20) to ascertain and state all items of costs and expenses paid or incurred by the Trust Company, "including among other expenses those for attorneys' fees, counsel or solicitor fees, stenographers' fees, expert accountants' fees, printing fees, traveling expenses, and other expenses incurred in the premises."

The lower court having intimated in its first opinion that the circuit court of appeals had found that the litigation was vexatious, petitioner, in December, 1923 (Rec. 33), filed a motion and application for leave to file a duly verified petition "to introduce testimony proving that this litigation was instituted and conducted on the part of each of the complainants in entire good faith," and setting out in detail the oral and documentary evidence which it desired to introduce (Rec. 34-44). This motion was overruled, and permission to introduce testimony was refused (Rec. 45).

The master filed his report on September 15, 1924 (Rec. 46), finding that the costs as between party and party amounted to $11,499.32 (Rec. 49), and that the costs as between solicitor and client amounted to $296,520.37 (Rec. 59). Of this latter sum, $280,867.98 was for attorneys' fees which were incurred in the litigation from beginning to end, including services in the circuit court of appeals and in this Court. Exceptions to the master's report were filed by both parties (Rec. 94, 106).

At the argument of the exceptions, the court permitted a reargument of the entire matter, and in an opinion dated March, 1926 (Rec. 704), the court reversed its former ruling, and held that the law did not permit the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client in this case, but only as between party and party. A final decree in accordance therewith was accordingly entered in May, 1926 (Rec. 128).

From this decree the Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, and that court, in May, 1928, reversed the said decree of May, 1926 (28 F. (2d) 233), to review which action of the circuit court of appeals petitioner, after an unsuccessful motion for a rehearing, now presents its application to this Court for a writ of certiorari.

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.

For its specification of such assigned errors as are intended to be urged, petitioner alleges that the circuit court of appeals committeed error in the following respects:

1. In holding that the opinion and mandate of this Court required or authorized the taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client."

2. In holding that "the United States courts of equity at the time of their creation became endowed with the powers, including that over costs, possessed by the English chancery courts."

3. In holding that "the federal courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow, in proper cases, costs 'as between solicitor and client'."

4. In holding that the respondent is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client" in this case.

5. In holding that the Trust Company, as a pledgee, is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client," although it litigated its right to the pledged property, not in the interest of the pledgor, and not for the care, preservation or protection of the property, but in its own individual interest, and for its own personal protection.

6. In holding that the Trust Company, when sought to be charged as trustee, or with the obligations resting upon trustees, is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client," notwithstanding the fact that the Trust Company disclaimed any trusteeship, and any and all fiduciary obligations, and was successful in maintaining this defense.

7. In holding that after the Trust Company succeeded in holding petitioner liable for the debt of the Belt Company, and in collecting from petitioner its entire debt and interest, it is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client," upon the theory that it occupied the position of a creditor, who, in behalf of himself and others, has brought a fund into court for distribtuion, and is awarded an allowance from the fund.

8. In holding that "the whole litigation" was of a "vexatious character."

ARGUMENT.

I.

The proper execution of the mandate of this Court required the taxation of costs only as between party and party, and did not require or authorize the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

It is familiar law that it was the duty of the district court to which the mandate in this case was addressed by this Court, to carry it into execution according to its terms, in the light of the opinion of this Court. It could not vary it, or examine it for any other purpose than execution; or give any other or further relief, or review it, even for apparent error; nor intermeddle with it in any manner (Ex Parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317; Re Washington R. Co., 140 U. S. 91; Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247).

So well established is this rule that this Court will grant certiorari to the court of appeals where, as here, the question "involves the construction of a prior decree of the United States circuit court affirmed by this Court" (St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 217 U. S. 247, 251). This Court will inquire into the proper execution of its own decree "either by original proceeding or in any other appropriate form" (United States v. Terminal R. Assoc., 236 U. S. 194, 199).

This Court (240 U. S. 166) affirmed the decree of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit (210 Fed. 696), which directed (pp. 723, 724) the entry by the district court of a specific decree, complete in all details, disposing of the entire controversy, including the matter of costs. The mandate of this Court (Rec. 467) adjudged that said decree be "affirmed with costs," and that the Trust Company et al. recover against petitioner "twenty dollars for their costs herein expended and have execution therefor."

There are numerous references in the directions for the entry of a specific decree (210 Fed. 723, 724), to "the costs of this suit"; "the costs after as well as before the decree"; "its costs down to the entry of the decree"; with a further provision that the Trust Company shall be permitted to pursue either the Cambria Company or the Southern Company, or both of them, "until its costs are paid". After refusing to entertain, and, in effect, denying, the petition of the three stockholders for a taxation against petitioner of the amount of the Trust Company's attorneys' fees, etc., the court said: "Our conclusion is that our just course is to leave the taxation of costs to the court below, under the principles, rules and practice in equity."

When this Court affirmed the decree of the lower court, directing the entry of a specific decree, complete in all details, and awarding "costs", without further designation or qualification, against the unsuccessful party, and leaving the "taxation of costs" to the lower court, we submit that it could only mean taxable costs, in the ordinary acceptation of the term; that is, costs as between party and party, as the word "costs" has been used in judgments and decrees from time immemorial, in accordance with the practice of taxing costs which has prevailed in this country from the beginning; in other words, it meant taxable costs, as distinguished from an "allowance" out of a fund, or as distinguished from attorneys' fees fixed by statute and allowed in certain designated cases.

It is not to be assumed that this Court acted inadvertently, and that what it really intended was to import into our jurisprudence the English system of taxation of costs, by which the losing party is to be burdened and penalized with the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the successful litigant. Nor is it to be assumed that this Court, merely by affirming a decree carrying "costs", intended thereby to overrule its long line of decisions, such as The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377; Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211; Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, and Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, which, we contend, authoritatively established a rule in this country exactly to the contrary.

It seems too plain to require extended argument that if this Court had intended any departure from the ordinary practice in the taxation of costs, it would have said so in plain language. If it had intended to import the English system into our jurisprudence, it would have manifested its intention in unambiguous words, which would have sounded a warning to all future litigants that litigation thereafter was to be at the peril of paying all counsel fees in case of failure. If it had intended that the word "costs" should include "allowances", under the guise of a taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, or otherwise, it seems certain that language would have been employed which would have left no room for doubt as to its purpose.

That the word "costs" does not include attorneys' fees was authoritatively decided in this Court in Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238. There, the action was on a surety bond, under a statute of Nebraska which provided that in such actions "a reasonable sum as an attorney's fee in addition to the amount of his recovery" may be taxed as a part of the "costs". The circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit held (16 F. (2d) 688) that attorneys' fees were not a part of the "costs" provided for in R. S. sec. 823, 824, and, therefore, could not be allowed as costs in a federal court. This Court, upon appeal, agreed with the lower court that such attorneys' fees are not and cannot be a part of the taxable costs prescribed by the federal statute. This Court did, however, give effect to the Nebraska statute by holding that the amount of the attorney's fee could be included in the judgment. It said (p. 243):

> That the statute directs the allowance, which is made to plaintiff, to be added to the judgment as costs are added does not make it costs in the ordinary sense of the traditional, arbitrary and small fees of court officers, attorneys' docket fees and the like, allowed to counsel by Rev. Stat. sec. 823, 824.
>
> The present allowance, since it is not costs in the ordinary sense, is not within the field of costs legislation covered by Rev. Stat. sec. 823, 824. That the particular mode of enforcing the right provided by the state statute—i. e., by taxing the allowance as costs—is not available to the federal courts under Rev. Stat. sec. 823, 824 does not preclude the recovery. Since the right exists, the federal courts may follow their own appropriate procedure for its enforcement by including the amount of the fee in the judgment.

In two other decisions of this Court, hereafter referred to (Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211, and Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497), it was held that "costs" did not include attorneys' fees. Those actions were upon injunction bonds which were conditioned to pay to defendants "all costs and damages". In both cases it was held that counsel fees, incurred in securing a dissolution of the injunction, did not come within the scope of either "costs" or "damages".

In several instances the lower courts have held that the word "costs" in a decree or in a statute is to be construed as including only taxable costs, as distinguished from allowances.

In Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245 (circuit court of appeals, fourth circuit), the mandate of the court of appeals provided that the "costs" of the case in both the appellate and the lower court should be borne equally by the appellant and the appellees. In a taxation of costs pursuant to this direction, the lower court included an allowance to the receiver as a part of the costs properly to be divided. The action of the lower court in including the allowance to the receiver was appealed from, and reversed on appeal, the appellate court saying (p. 247):

> In decreeing the devision of costs in this court and the court below was meant only the ordinary taxable costs of the litigation, and not such charges and expenses as the costs of the receivership and payments and allowances to receivers; those being costs properly appertaining to the receivership, and chargeable against the property in the receiver's hands. Ferguson v. Dent (C. C.), 46 Fed. 88; Elkhorn Oil & Gas Co. v. Foster, 99 Fed. 495, 39 C. C. A. 615.

To the same effect are:

> Doddridge County Oil & Gas Co. v. Smith, 173 Fed. 386;
> United States v. Wilson, 193 Fed. 1007;
> United States v. Smith, 240 Fed. 756.

If the Trust Company felt that it was entitled to have the opinion and mandate of this Court broadened so as to include allowances in the nature of costs as between solicitor and client, it should have made an appropriate application to the Court for that purpose, and before the expiration of the term. After the lapse of the term, the provision relative to costs could not be altered (Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 275 U. S. 70, 73).

II.

We earnestly contend that the lower court committed a grave error (1) in holding "that the Federal Courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow in proper cases costs 'as between solicitor and client,'" as such jurisdiction is exercised by the English Court of Chancery, and (2) in applying that erroneous principle to the facts in this case.

The lower court reached the conclusion, which is quoted in the above heading, and which, we contend, is wholly erroneous, by two successive steps; first, it asserts (28 F. (2d) 240) that the English courts of chancery have for several centuries possessed jurisdiction to award costs as between solicitor and client; and, secondly (p. 241), that the United States courts of equity at the time of their creation became endowed with, and now possess, the powers, including that over costs, possessed by the English chancery court.

We confidently contend that the English system of taxation of costs as between solicitor and client has never been adopted in this country; and, furthermore, that if it has ever been the law here, which we do not admit, it has been expressly repudiated, by the substitution therefor of the Act of Congress of 1853, providing for the taxation of an attorney's fee of $20 "and no other" as costs on final hearing in equity. This Court and the lower courts, have uniformly applied this statute as the settled rule in federal jurisdiction.

Space does not permit an extended discussion of the English system of taxation of costs. It is fundamentally different from our own. Under it, attorneys' fees or solicitors' fees, which are fixed by law, are taxed against the losing party in every case, whether at law or in equity. Costs as between party and party include attorneys' fees of the adversary. Costs as between solicitor and client include a somewhat large proportion of the actual expenditures of the successful party than is allowed in taxation as between party and party.

In modern practice, however, the English system of taxation as between solicitor and client "gives little more than a taxation as between party and party" (Giles v. Randall, 1 K. B. D. 290, 296; Daniell's Chancery Pleading & Practice, Vol. 2, 6th Am. Ed., star page 1376, note 1).

For the purpose of showing that the English system has not only never been established in this country, but that it has been definitely and finally repudiated by our courts, we will briefly trace the historical development of the subject of taxation of attorneys' fees as costs from the beginning of our government down to date.

Early statutes and rules of court.

On August 8, 1791, "the Chief Justice, in answer to the motion of the Attorney General, made yesterday, informs him and the bar, that this court consider the practice of the courts of king's bench, and of chancery, in England, as affording outlines for the practice of this court; and that they will, from time to time, make such alterations therein as circumstances may render necessary" (Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court of the United States, 2 L. Ed.). This in 1822 was expanded into Equity Rule 33, and in 1842, into Equity Rule 90, which latter was dropped from the equity rules February 1, 1913.

The lower court, in its opinion, apparently takes the view that the effect of these equity rules was to import into our practice the English doctrine of taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. We contend that this cannot be so, and proceed to state our reasons.

Congress, by Act of September 29, 1789, provided that the rates of fees in the circuit and district courts of the United States, in equity cases, should be in accordance with those allowed by the chancery court of the state. The Act of May 26, 1790, continued the Act of 1789 until the end of the succeeding session, and it was again continued by the Act of February 18, 1791, until the end of the next session. The Act of March 1, 1793, provided for the taxation in the circuit courts of the United States of such attorneys' fees and counsel fees "as are allowed in the Supreme or Superior Courts of the respective states." The Act was continued another year by the Act of February 25, 1795, and was again continued by the Act of March 31, 1796, for the term of two years, and from thence until the end of the next session of Congress thereafter (Report of Mr. Justice Nelson, 1 Blatchford C. C. 652).

Is it not entirely clear that Congress, in these enactments, was declaring its own policy with respect to the taxation of attorneys' fees as costs? It deliberately adopted the policy of applying the rules of the state court where the federal court was sitting, as the rules in its own court. If it had desired to adopt the English practice, in that behalf, it seems certain that it would have said so. At that period in the development of our judicial system, the extent to which the forms, precedents and practice of the mother country should be followed, was receiving the earnest attention of Congress. Its failure to adopt the English practice can only be regarded as an intentional repudiation of it in favor of its own rules.

Early decisions of this Court.

The first case in which there was presented to this Court the question of whether or not attorneys' fees might be taxed as costs, was Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306, 1 L. Ed. 613, decided in 1796. In that case an allowance of $1,600 as counsel fees had been included as a part of the damages allowed by the circuit court, but this Court ordered the disallowance of this item, saying:

> We do not think that this charge ought to be allowed. The general practice of the United States is in opposition to it; and even if that practice were not strictly correct in principle, it is entitled to the respect of the court, until it is changed, or modified, by statute.

Then followed The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, decided in 1824, and Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307, decided in 1830, in both of which the decision was rendered by Mr. Justice Storey, and in both counsel fees were allowed. Both cases, however, were explained, as we shall see later, as having been decided as they were because the Act of 1853 was not then in force. In Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, decided in 1851, the court held that attorneys' fees could not be included in an award of exemplary damages.

Prior to the statute of 1853, the practice with respect to the taxation of attorneys' fees as costs may be said to have lacked uniformity; the general rule being that such costs were to be taxed in accordance with the varying practice in the state where the court was sitting. But this lack of uniformity is in itself conclusive evidence that the English system had not been adopted, for had that system been adopted, we would find uniformity, instead of uncertainty. The report of Mr. Justice Nelson, above referred to, was published in 1842, and disclosed not only the lack of uniformity in federal court practice, but the necessity for some uniform rule applicable to federal courts wherever sitting.

The Act of 1853, and its construction by this Court.

The Act of 1853 (28 U. S. C. A. sec. 571, 572) was intended to meet this demand for uniformity. It provided that certain specified fees "and no other" shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the courts of the United States, and that on a final hearing in equity or admiralty, a docket fee of twenty dollars shall be taxed. It is as follows:

> Sec. 571. The following fees and no other shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the courts of the United States, and to district attorneys, except in cases otherwise expressly provided by law. But nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit attorneys, solicitors, and proctors from charging to and receiving from their clients, other than the Government, such reasonable compensation for their services, in addition to the taxable costs, as may be in accordance with general usage in their respective States, or may be agreed upon between the parties.
>
> Sec. 572. On a trial before a jury, in civil or criminal causes or before referees, or on a final hearing in equity or admiralty, a docket fee of $20:

> Provided, That in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where the libelant recovers less than $50, the docket fee of his proctor shall be but $10.

This statute is in itself conclusive evidence of the complete repudiation of the English practice, if it ever existed in this country. Our courts thereafter recognized it as once and for all settling the question of the taxation of costs, and limiting the taxation of attorneys' fees in the stipulated manner.

The effect of the statute was before this Court in 1869, in The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377. The court there reviewed not only the prior legislation, referred to above, but the practice which had prevailed prior to the Act of 1853, pointing out the lack of uniformity. It held, in effect, that the Act was intended to standardize the practice in federal courts; that while attorneys might charge their clients reasonably for their services, nothing could be taxed as costs against the opposite party, as an incident to the judgment, except the costs and fees prescribed and enumerated. It also held that The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, and Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307, which were cited in the brief of the appellees, were inapplicable because decided before the Act of 1853. The Court said (p. 392):

> Fees and costs, allowed to the officers therein named, are now regulated by the Act of the 26th of February, 1853, which provides, in its 1st section, that in lieu of the compensation now allowed by law to attorneys, solicitors, proctors, district attorneys, clerks, marshals, witnesses, jurors, commissioners and printers, the following and no other compensation shall be allowed.
>
> Attorneys, solicitors and proctors may charge their clients reasonably for their services, in addi> tion to the taxable costs, but nothing can be taxed as cost against the opposite party, as an incident to the judgment, for their services, except the cost and fees therein described and enumerated. 10 Stat. at L. 161. They may tax a docket fee of $20 on a final hearing in admiralty, if the libelant recovers $50, but if he recovers less than $50, the docket fee of the proctor shall be but $10. The Canton, 21 Law. Rep. 473; The Liverpool Packet, 2 Sprague 37; The Connestoga, 2 Wall. Jr. 116.

>
> Reference is made to two cases where counsel fees were allowed, but it is a sufficient answer to those cases to say, that they were decided before the Act of Congress under consideration was passed. They do not, therefore, furnish the rule of decision in the case before us.

This decision would seem definitely to settle any question of the taxation of attorneys' fees as costs in excess of the amounts named in the statute. It is difficult to imagine the English doctrine as surviving after this decision.

But if there was any lingering doubt upon this subject, it was completely dispelled by the decision of this Court in Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211. This was an action on an injunction bond. The condition of the bond was that the obligor "should pay and satisfy all costs and damages that may accrue to the obligees, or either of them, by reason of said injunction, in case the same shall be denied." The question was squarely presented, therefore, as to whether counsel fees were included in the words "costs and damages." The injunction was in effect for a period of four years, eight months, sixteen days. Doubtless, it presented circumstances of great hardship. Both the master and the lower court allowed counsel fees, paid in securing a dissolution of the injunction, as a part of the costs and damages covered by the bond. This was reversed. The Court, after referring to Arcambel v. Wiseman, supra, and other cases, said (p. 231):

> The point here in question has never been expressly decided by this court, but it is clearly within the reasoning of the case last referred to, and we think is substantially determined by that adjudication. In debt, covenant, and assumpsit, damages are recovered, but counsel fees are never included. So in equity cases, where there is no injunction bond, only the taxable costs are allowed to the complainants. The same rule is applied to the defendant, however unjust the litigation on the other side, and however large the expensa litis to which he may have been subjected. The parties in this respect are upon a footing of equality. There is no fixed standard by which the honorarium can be measured Some counsel demand much more than others. More counsel may be employed than are necessary. When both client and counsel know that the fees are to be paid by the other party there is danger of abuse. A reference to a master, or an issue to a jury, might be necessary to ascertain the proper amount, and this grafted litigation might possibly be more animated and protracted than that in the original cause. It would be an office of some delicacy on the part of the court to scale down the charges, as might sometimes be necessary.
>
> We think the principle of disallowance rests on a solid foundation, and that the opposite rule is forbidden by the analogies of the law and sound public policy.

This comprehensive ruling should be accepted, we respectfully submit, as completely settling and disposing of the question of the taxation of counsel fees, as costs, in this country. Such costs may not be taxed in equity cases, even where the litigation is unjust, on one side or the other, and however large the expense may be. The reasons are given. The parties stand upon a footing of equality. There is no fixed standard, in this country, by which counsel fees can be determined, as there is in England. Some counsel demand much more than others, and more counsel may be employed than are necessary. There is great danger of abuse if it be known in advance that fees, unregulated by law, are to be paid by the other party. Additional litigation would be necessary to determine the fees to be taxed. Counsel fees do not come within the designation of "costs," nor of "damages." Their disallowance rests on a solid foundation, and the opposite rule is forbidden by sound public policy as well as by the analogies of the law.

This Court, in subsequent cases, has assumed, without further re-examination of the question, that this decision has settled the law in this country. In Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, the action was upon an injunction bond, which, as before, was conditioned to pay to defendant "all costs and damages." It was again insisted that attorneys' fees were properly allowed as an item of cost or damage upon the bond, and again denied. The Court said (p. 511):

> . . . it remains only to consider whether the attorneys' fees were properly allowed by the court below as an element of damages on the bond. That they were not is settled.

The Court then refers to Oelrichs v. Williams, supra, and concludes with the statement:

> It follows from what we have stated that there was error committed in allowing the recovery of attorneys' fees as an element of damage upon the bond in question.

The question next came before this Court in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530, and was disposed of briefly in the following statement:

> Having thus disposed of the question of jurisdiction, we come to the merits of the case. It suffices to say, for the reasons given in the opinion in Tullock v. Mulvane, before referred to, 184 U. S. 497, that there was error committed by the Kansas City court of appeals in affirming the action of the trial court in allowing, in the judgment by it rendered, attorneys' fees as an element of damage upon the injunction bond contrary to the controlling rule on this subject enunciated by this court, by which the courts of the United States are governed in requiring the execution of such instruments.

The lower court, in its opinion in this case, after referring to some of the cases above cited, among them, Arcambel v. Wiseman, The Baltimore, Oelrichs v. Williams, states that "such refusals (to tax attorneys' fees as costs) were not based upon any lack of power in the court, but because it was not deemed wise policy to allow attorneys' fees to be taxed as costs in ordinary equity cases."

We respectfully submit, however, that it was a lack of "power" to impose attorneys' fees as costs which impelled this Court to decide as it did. This is made entirely plain in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, where the question arose over the imposition of attorneys' fees by a state court in respect of an appeal prosecuted to this Court. The question is there stated by the Court (p. 468):

> First. The question of the power of the court to make the allowance for professional services rendered in this court on the former writ of error.

It will be noted that the Court was here discussing the power to make the allowance, and not the equitable principles which control some allowance which it has the power to make. The Court held against the existence of the power, as follows:

> There can be not doubt that, tested by the general principles of law controlling in this court, by the statutes of the United States relating to the subject, or the rules of this court concerning the same, the award for the attorneys' fees in question was absolutely unwarranted. We do not stop to review and expound the settled line of authority demonstrating this result because it would be wholly superfluous to do so, as the principles have been so long the settled rule of conduct in this court, and are so elementary as to require not even a reference to the cases. Some of the cases, nevertheless, we cite: Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 372; Oelrichs v. Spain (Oelrichs v. Williams), 15 Wall. 211, 230, 231; Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, 511 et seq.

It will be noted that the cases cited above are the same cases to which we have referred heretofore. They are referred to in the opinion of this Court as establishing a settled line of authority demonstrating the lack of power to tax counsel fees as costs. The prior interpretation of the Act of 1853 is reaffirmed.

The right and duty of the chancellor in proper cases to make "allowances" for expenses and counsel fees within the rule of Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, is well recognized, and is not at all in conflict with the views above expressed with respect to the taxation of attorneys' fees and other expenses, as costs, in cases like the one under consideration. It is a general principle that the trust estate must bear the expenses of its administration. It is also a general principle that where one of many parties having a common interest in the trust fund, at his own expense takes proper proceedings to save it from destruction and to restore it to the purposes of the trust, he is entitled to reimbursement, either out of the fund itself or by a proportionate contribution from those who accept the benefit of his efforts. This rule, however, has, we contend, no application whatsoever to the present case. Its inapplicability to the facts in this record is discussed under subsequent headings.

Decisions of Circuit Courts of Appeal.

The federal courts of appeals have, without exception, followed the statute of 1853, and the rule established by this Court in the foregoing cases, that, in the absence of authorizing statute, attorneys' fees in excess of $20 may not be taxed as costs as between solicitor and client, to be paid by one of the parties to the suit. The decision of the lower court is in conflict with the decisions of circuit courts of appeal of other circuits, now to be referred to.

In McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66, the court of appeals of the Seventh Circuit held that attorneys' fees could not be taxed as costs in a partnership accounting case. In its opinion the court said, in reference to the allowable items of expense:

> Such allowances were of statutory origin. Our statute of 1853 . . . provides what shall, as costs, "be included in and form a portion of a judgment or decree against the losing party." . . . In our opinion the discretion of a court of equity does not authorize it to require one party . . . to pay to the other, > under the name of costs, items paid from the fund for services and expenses in administering a suit properly in court, nor any other items not within a fee bill act.

Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556, was a suit by a legatee to enforce his claim against an executor and reach real estate fraudulently conveyed by her. The district court added to the decree an allowance of $1,000 solicitor's fees. The court of appeals for the seventh circuit said:

> No law of Illinois warranted the increase of Grace Fraser's indebtedness by such an addition. . . . Nor can equity in a suit upon a creditor's bill or a vendor's lien bill enlarge the defendant's debt in that way.

Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246, was a fraud case in which the successful party sought to have his attorneys' fees taxed against the losing party. The court of appeals for the fourth circuit said:

> The costs that can be taxed against the losing party . . . are little more than nominal, and the winner is therefore out of pocket for the fees of his counsel. If this be unjust to the one found to be in the right, it is because the law gives him only the amount of his recovery and the scanty sum allowed as taxable costs.

In Motion Picture Patents Company v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63, the district court allowed an attorney's fee of $150.00 in each of two cases because of the vexatious conduct of plaintiff's counsel in the litigation. The court of appeals for the second circuit held that an attorney might be compelled to pay certain costs for vexatious conduct by virtue of Section 982 of the statutes, but that the costs could not be taxed against the client.

In Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 Fed. (2d) 460, attorneys' fees were taxed as costs in a copyright case. The court of appeals for the second circuit held that while such fees were taxable under the copyright law:

> The general rule, which is subject to some exceptions, of course, is that each party to a litigation must pay his own counsel fees, no matter how unjust the litigation may have been, or how great may have been the expensa litis (citing the Arcambel and Oelrichs cases).

We respectfully contend that the decision of the lower court is contrary to the statute, contrary to the decisions of this Court, and contrary to the decisions of federal courts of appeal in other circuits.

Counsel fees incurred after the decree of June, 1910.

We earnestly contend that, for the reasons above stated, the law does not authorize or permit the taxation against petitioner of any of the attorneys' fees or other expenses of the Trust Company during the entire period of this litigation. For the purpose, however, of bringing into impressive relief what we regard as one of the glaring errors of the lower court, we desire, for the moment, to lay to one side all other controverted matters, and to direct the attention of the Court to the proceedings in this case following the final decree of June, 1910—the period during which a considerable portion of the Trust Company's liability for attorneys' fees were incurred. The grave injustice of imposing these expenses upon petitioner appears to us to be so plain and obvious that a brief reference to the uncontradicted facts should suffice.

The decree of the lower court, in June, 1910, was against the Trust Company, and, accordingly, it appealed to the circuit court of appeals. As has been heretofore pointed out, the issue—the personal liability of petitioner for the debt of the Belt Company—was an exceedingly difficult one, and involved in much doubt and uncertainty. The Boyd Case (228 U. S. 482, April, 1913) had not then been decided. Finite minds could not tell what the decision in our case would be. The circuit court of appeals recognized the serious and difficult nature of the controversy when it permitted two arguments and handed down two elaborate opinions. This Court held, May 11, 1914, that the nature of the case was such as to warrant the grant of its writ of certiorari, in case an appeal did not lie. The decree of the circuit court of appeals was affirmed by this Court; the Chief Justice and one Associate Justice dissenting.

Upon what conceivable principle can petitioner be condemned to pay the Trust Company's attorneys' fees and other expenses, involved in its appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and involved in petitioner's appeal to this Court, to determine this liability issue, which the Trust Company itself injected into the litigation in 1905, in its answer to the intervening petition of petitioner? What warning was there in the books of text writers or in the decisions of the courts, saying to petitioner, in effect: "If you resist the Trust Company's appeal to the circuit court of appeals, or if you appeal from that court to the Supreme Court, you do so at your peril of being mulcted for the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the Trust Company, in the event that you are unsuccessful"?

What becomes of the guaranty, declaratory of the public policy in the jurisdiction where the litigation was carried on, that "The courts of justice shall be open to every person, and certain remedy afforded for every injury to person, property or character, and that right and justice should be administered without sale, denial or delay" (Const. Mo., Art. II, Sec. 10).

The right of free access to the courts is fundamental in our theory of Government. In Straus v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 297 Fed. 791, 798 (circuit court of appeals, second circuit), it is said: "Free access to the courts must neither be denied nor penalized."

In Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, the right of a state to impose attorneys' fees upon the losing party in an appeal to this Court was denied on the ground that if that were permitted, "the right to freely seek access to the Supreme Court of the United States would cease to exist."

In Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64 Iowa, 741, it is said:

> The courts are open and free to all who have grievances and seek remedies therefor, and there should be no restraint upon a suitor, through fear of liability resulting from failure in his action, which would keep him from the courts.

The imposition of the Trust Company's expenses incurred following the final decree of June, 1910, can only be justified upon the assumption that petitioner, instead of resisting the Trust Company's appeal to the circuit court of appeals, should have filed a confession of error, and permitted a perfunctory reversal of the decree; and, further, upon the assumption that petitioner should have refrained from prosecuting an appeal from the circuit court of appeals to this Court, although this Court stood ready to issue its writ of certiorari if the appeal did not lie. Such an assumption passes the limits of reason. Petitioner would have betrayed its stockholders if it had taken any other course than the one it pursued. Upon what theory should it now be penalized?

III.

The fact that complainants sought unsuccessfully to charge the Trust Company with the duties and obligations of a trustee, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

The complainants charged that the Trust Company at all times dominated and controlled the Belt Company and the other corporations officered by it, and that by reason of such domination and control, the Trust Company assumed towards them the position and obligations of a trustee. In the Cambria bill, it is alleged that the Trust Company did "assume the position of trustee and agent in managing and disposing of the bonds, stocks, funds, and other assets of said railroad companies, and auxiliary companies, in trust and for the use and benefit of the parties who might become concerned or interested therein; . . . including particularly creditors thereof and your orator" (S. C. Rec. 6). The Trust Company in its answer to the Cambria bill denied, as above stated, that it assumed the position or the obligations of a trustee (S. C. Rec. 42).

The issue was thus made by the pleadings. On the one hand, it was alleged that the Trust Company has assumed the position and relation of a constructive trustee, and, on the other hand, this was emphatically denied. The master found that the Trust Company did not thus assume the position and obligation of a trustee, and his finding was approved by the lower court.

In these circumstances, the lower court held, erroneously, we contend, that the Trust Company was entitled to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, or that an allowance should be made in its favor by analogy to the law giving trustees their disbursements in the execution of their trusts.

The law is plain, we respectfully submit, that the rule imposing attorneys' fees as costs in favor of a trustee has no application. The reason is that there is no trustee, no cestui que trust, and no fund that is being handled or administered. The parties therefore occupy the position of ordinary litigants.

The applicable rule was thus stated in Perry on Trusts, 6th Ed., 1911, sec. 896:

> But where plaintiffs bring a bill against defendants for the purpose of creating a trust fund—as if they bring a bill to convert defendants into trustees under a constructive trust, or to compel the defendants to hold certain property in their hands for plaintiffs—the defendants can have costs only as between party and party, if the plaintiffs fail; for the suit in such case turns out to be between strangers.

In Lewin on Law of Trusts, 12th Ed., p. 1267, it is said:

> But if plaintiffs take proceedings for the purpose of creating a fund, of which the defendants would be trustees for the plaintiffs, if the plaintiffs succeeded, but the plaintiffs fail, the defendants are entitled as against the plaintiffs to costs only as between party and party.

In Tiffany & Bullard on Trusts and Trustees, p. 714, it is said:

> As those costs taxed between solicitor and client are termed trustee's costs, it follows that they will not be taxed in a case where that relation or character does not exist.

It is likewise the rule that where a trustee disclaims his trust, he is entitled only to his costs as between party and party. (Godefroi's Law of Trusts, Third Ed. (London, 1907), p. 28; Daniell's Chancery Practice, Ed. 7 (1901), Vol. 1, p. 1011; Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanston's Reports (1818), 201; Bulkeley v. The Earl of Eglington, 1 Jur. (1855) 994; Norway v. Norway, 2 Mylne & Keen's Rep. (1834), 278; Heap v. Jones, 5 W. R. (1856), 106; Bray v. West, 9 Simons Rep., 429.)

The same considerations apply to so much of the intervening petition of petitioner as complains of the Trust Company's action with respect to the Union Terminal bonds. A complete answer to the Trust Company's claim for indemnity is found in the fact that the intervenor sought to impose upon the Trust Company the duties and obligations of a trustee with respect to the use of the Union Terminal bonds and their proceeds. It invoked the provisions of the mortgage itself, and the implications thought to arise from the terms of the mortgage, to establish this relationship, and so to make the Trust Company a trustee with respect thereto.

The Trust Company, although a trustee in the mortgage of the Union Company, in its answer denied the existence of any such trust relations, either by law or the express terms of the mortgage, and specifically denied that any duty rested upon it to see that, as said bonds were sold, the proceeds were used in the construction, completion and equipment of the railroad. This defense was sustained by the master (S. C. Rec. 876).

We have, therefore, on the part of the intervenor, an assertion of a trust relation with respect to the disposition of the bonds and their proceeds, and, on the part of the Trust Company, a denial that any such trust relationship existed. The master found this issue in favor of the Trust Company, and thereby it was established that no such trust relation existed, or ever had existed.

In other words, the intervenor sought to hold the Trust Company to the duties and obligations of a trustee, in respect of the disposition of the bonds, or their proceeds, and failed to establish its claim in that behalf. The trustee relationship not being established, the authorities, referred to above, hold that there is no ground for a claim of indemnity.

IV.

The litigation conducted by the Trust Company for its own benefit with respect to the collateral security, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

The Trust Company, on March 31, 1899, the day before the receivership of the Gulf Company, took from the Belt Company, or received from it, the collateral security in question, consisting of stocks, etc.—everything, in fact, which the Belt Company had at the time, which could be used as collateral. All of this the Trust Company proceeded to hold as security for the debt which it alleged the Belt Company owed to it. When this litigation came on, on September 6, 1900, receivers were appointed of all the assets of the Belt Company (S. C. Rec. 29), of every kind and nature. Later a receiver was appointed for the Northern Townsite Company (S. C. Rec. 914), whose stock was a part of the collateral in question; and a receiver was also appointed for the Central Improvement Company (S. C. Rec. 162, 163), whose stock was also a part of the same collateral. A receiver was also appointed for the Elevator Company (S. C. Rec. 162).

The litigation between the Cambria Company, the Belt Company and its receivers, on the one hand, and the Trust Company, on the other, concerned solely the question of debt or no debt as between the Belt Company and the Trust Company. As this should be determined, the collateral automatically would remain with the Trust Company or return to the Belt Company or its creditor, the Cambria Company.

It cannot be contended that the Trust Company, in litigating the issue of debt or no debt, was acting in the interest of the Belt Company, which was the pledgor of the collateral. It was acting adversely to the Belt Company, as well as to petitioner, which was the owner of the stock of the Belt Company. It was acting solely in its own interest, to protect its own individual claim.

Nor was it seeking to protect the collateral security itself, for it needed no protection. It simply remained throughout the litigation as the pawn or pledge to be awarded to the successful party when the litigation should end. The only dealing with the collateral during the entire litigation was the sale by the Trust Company, under orders of the court, of certain Northern Connecting bonds and coupons, for which $40,001.25 was realized and held by the Trust Company in special deposit until the final decree, in which it was ordered to be applied upon the Trust Company's debt (S. C. Rec. 907). That part of the collateral which possessed value, consisting of the property of the Central Improvement Company and, in lesser degree, of the Northern Townsite Company, was being administered by the receivers of those properties, under the direction of the court (S. C. Rec. 914).

The Trust Company performed no services whatsoever for the benefit of the pledgor, or for the benefit of the collateral itself. It was performing no duties as pledgee or trustee. Its services were rendered, and its efforts expended, in protecting its own interest. In these circumstances, there is, we respectfully submit, no rule of law which permits the Trust Company, as trustee or pledgee, to impose its disbursements for counsel fees upon its adversary.

It is, of course, the ordinary rule that a pledgee has a lien on the property for any expenses, including attorneys' fees reasonably incurred by him in keeping and caring for the property pledged, protecting it against liens, taxes, assessments, etc. But our contention is that it has no application whatsoever to the facts in this case.

When we examine the reason of the rule which allows a pledgee attorneys' fees for the protection of pledged property, it becomes clear that the Trust Company does not come within it. The foundation of the rule is that the pledgee, after a sale of the pledged property, must credit the pledgor with the net amount realized by him from the proceeds. If he has been put to expense in order to protect the property pledged, for illustration, if he has been compelled to pay an incumbrance to prevent a foreclosure, or forced to defend the pledgor's title, the gross proceeds must be reduced to the extent of the expense incurred in the doing of one or all these things, because done on behalf of the pledgor and for his benefit. The pledgee has the property in his possession; the pledgor is not in position to defend it against adverse claims or to protect it generally. The pledgee, therefore, is authorized, in law, to act for the benefit of the pledgor, as his quasi-agent, in doing what the pledgor would have done had he been in possession of his property and in position to defend it.

Where, as here, suits are undertaken by the pledgee which are of no benefit to the pledgor, the reason for the rule ceases, and the rule itself has no application.

The rule and the reason for it are recognized and set forth in Work v. Tibbits, 87 Hun 352, 34 N. Y. Supp. 308.

Other decisions to the same effect are:

Wolf v. Am. Trust & Savings Bank, 214 Fed. 761 (7th Circ.);

Smith v. Equitable Trust Company, 215 Pa. 413, 62 Atl. 591;

Willard v. White, 56 Hun 581, 10 N. Y. Supp. 170.

V.

It is contrary to both reason and authority to base an allowance of counsel fees in this case upon the assumption that the Trust Company uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid.

The lower court sought to justify the imposition of costs as between solicitor and client upon the assumption that "the Trust Company in the course of litigation uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid." This, we contend, is clearly erroneous, and the error is susceptible of plain demonstration.

We insist, in the first place, that no fund was uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court, within the meaning of the rule relied upon; and, furthermore, we insist that the case is governed by established principles which prohibit the allowance of counsel fees in the circumstances shown in this case. Before coming to a discussion of these questions, we call attention to the following considerations:

The decree of the lower court, which this Court affirmed, did not order the distribution of any fund to creditors. It merely awarded a personal judgment against petitioner, for the amount of the Belt Company's debt, with the return of the collateral upon payment of the debt, and with a sale of the collateral upon a failure to pay the debt. It was a personal judgment, which has long since been paid in full, in favor of the Trust Company, and this judgment did not inure to the benefit of any one else.

At no time did the Trust Company assert any claim except its own. There can be no pretense that it was acting for the benefit of any creditor. Its claim that petitioner was liable for the debt of the Belt Company is stated in its answer to the amended intervening petition of petitioner (S. C. Rec. 311), and is asserted solely in its own behalf. It is in the nature of a legal claim, as distinguished from an action in equity. The suits in state courts upon the same cause of action (S. C. Rec. 502) were actions at law, triable by jury (R. S. Mo. 1919, sec. 1398).

Not only was the property of the Belt Company not a trust fund, in any substantial sense, but it was not in the possession of any court at the time the Trust Company asserted its claim in 1905, nor has it been in the possession of any court since that time. The property of the Belt Company, as appears from the Trust Company's answer (S. C.

Rec. 295) was sold in November, 1901, at foreclosure sale, and was purchased by petitioner, which ever since that time has had exclusive possession thereof. Manifestly, the stock of petitioner, which was issued in exchange for the stock of the Belt Company in the reorganization (if that be regarded as a "fund"), has never been in the possession of any court.

The lower court conceives that its decision with respect to the discovery and administration of a fund is supported by Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, and decisions of that character. Those cases hold, in general, that where one litigant, at his own expense, has either created, preserved or protected a fund, and others were entitled to claim, and did claim, the results of his labors, it was not fair that the persons who have taken the risk and cost and expense of the litigation should bear all the costs, but those who share in the fruits should bear their pro rata share of the expense. The rule goes no further than where meritorious results have actually been achieved, those who, by inaction, seek to await the result and escape all expense if the case be lost, but if successful, to share the actual benefits by receiving their portion of this success, should not be allowed to do so without contributing their share of the expense (Buell Case, 201 Fed. 762, 768).

The lower court's ruling is in direct conflict with the applicable authorities.

The total inapplicability of this rule to the case at bar is manifest, for several reasons, which we now point out:

(a) In this case, the court did not take charge of, administer, preserve or distribute any fund. It awarded a money judgment, in favor of the Trust Company and against petitioner, which has long since been paid in full. The rule of the Greenough case, which permits the making of an allowance to counsel, does not apply. This, because the result of the litigation was "a general personal judgment, without segregating a fund in kind, and bringing its corpus into a court of equity for distribution."

This rule is stated clearly and emphatically by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Johnson v. United Rys. Co., 247 Mo. 326, 350, 152 S. W. 362, the jurisdiction where this litigation was carried on. There, an action in equity was brought in behalf of complainant and other creditors to subject to the payment of their debts certain property which the debtor had transferred in fraud of creditors. There was a money judgment for complainant, and his motion for an allowance of attorney's fees was denied. The court held that the rule of the Greenough case had no application, saying:

> With cases of that ilk eliminated, there is left to consider a doctrine of equity, viz., that a trust fund of right should bear the expenses of its own administration. According to that rule, it has been held that where a transaction has been ripped up or a conveyance set aside for fraud and an estate has been uncovered and recovered, which, in equity, belongs to creditors, and that estate is held in the hollow of the chancellor's hand to be administered and distributed, attorney's fees may be allowed as part of the trust administration. White v. University Land Company, 49 Mo. App. 450; Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157; Central Railroad, etc. v. Pettus et al., 113 U. S. 116, 28 L. Ed. 915; Woodward v. Mastin, 106 Mo. loc. cit. 364, 365, 17 S. W. 308. Agreeably thereto are an array of other cases industriously collated in Mr. Gilliam's brief pro se. But it seems to us their doctrine does not apply here. This be> cause the power of a court of equity is flexible enough to measure out relief in cases of this kind by a general personal judgment, without segregating a fund in kind, and bringing its corpus into a court of equity for administration. Accordingly, here the judgment was a general money judgment against Railways Company. It stopped short at that point. It administered no fund. It took this form apparently by consent of the parties; at least, no one took exception to that feature. In such fix, the case falls within the doctrine of the general rule, viz., that in Missouri one litigant cannot be compelled to pay the attorneys' fees of another, either in equity or at law. Pickel v. Pickel, 147 S. W. 1059, not yet officially reported. It appears that Johnson contracted that Mr. Gilliam on top of a named percentage might have all attorney's fees the court allowed. That friendly turn added no virtue to movent's position. In that aspect it dealt with a bird (not in hand, but) in bush. We hold the motion well ruled.

This rule applies squarely to the case under consideration. Here, there was a general money judgment against petitioner. The decree stopped short at that point. It administered no fund. The case therefore falls within the doctrine of the general rule, in federal courts as well as in the state courts of Missouri, that one litigant cannot be compelled to pay the attorney's fees of another, either in equity or at law.

(b) Even where a creditor sues in equity for the benefit of himself and all intervening creditors, and obtains a decree for complainant and such creditors, and the complainant and such creditors receive the full amount of their debts, with interest and taxable costs, the complainant is not entitled to an allowance for solicitor's fees out of the surplus otherwise payable to the debtor.

In this case, the only creditor was the Trust Company. It did not sue for the benefit of other creditors who might come in and assert their claims. The Trust Company's debt became merged in a personal judgment, and that judgment, with interest, has been paid, and the taxable costs have been paid. Upon what theory of law is the Trust Company entitled to impose the burden of its counsel fees upon the surplus of the trust fund (assuming there was a trust fund), belonging to petitioner?

The authorities deny the validity of a claim of this nature. One such authority is Huff v. Bidwell, from the fifth circuit, 195 Fed. 430, where it is held:

> Where a judgment lien creditor sues in equity for the benefit of himself and all intervening creditors, and obtains decree for complainant and such creditors, and the defendant's property condemned and sold to satisfy debts exceeds the amount of debts and interest and costs, the complainant is not entitled to an allowance for his solicitor's fees out of the surplus otherwise payable to the debtor after full payment of all the debts and costs.

The court said (p. 431):

> In creditors' suits, the underlying principle upon which those who do not appear as plaintiffs are charged with a proportionate part of the solicitors' fees is that the plaintiffs represented, and were suing for, the others; and this agency is generally shown by the appearance of the other creditors in court propounding their claims and claiming to share in the result of the suit. Lamar v. Hall & Wilberly, 129 Fed. 79, 83, 63 C. C. A. 521; Farmers' Loan & Trust Company v. Green, 79 Fed. 222, 24 C. C. A. 506; Hand v. Railroad Company, 21 S. C. 162. But the plaintiff in this case in no sense represented

> Huff, the defendant. The suit was not brought for his benefit. There was no just reason for seizing more of his property than would pay his debts, principal and interest, and the costs of suit. The property having been sold for a sum in excess, the proceeds necessarily came into court; but it was never the purpose of the suit to accomplish more than the collection of the debts and costs. If no creditors had intervened, if the suit had been brought by the plaintiffs to enforce and collect their judgments only, is there any known principle upon which Huff could have been made responsible for the plaintiffs' solicitor's fees? The intervening of the creditors may in such cases oblige them to contribute to the payment of the fee; but such interventions impose no obligation on the defendant who is sued. On principle, it seems to us that this fee cannot be added to Huff's indebtedness.

The sentence which we have italicized has accurate and precise application to this case. Here, no other creditors did intervene. The Trust Company sought to enforce and collect its claim only. Is there, therefore, any known principle upon which petitioner can be made responsible for the Trust Company's solicitors' fees?

In 20 Cyc. 825, the rule is thus stated:

> Upon a conveyance by a debtor being set aside as fraudulent, at the suit of a creditor, and a sale of the property being ordered, the creditor's attorney may be allowed a fee out of the proceeds; but such fee should be paid out of that part applicable to the demands of creditors, and not out of such balance as may come to the debtor after the liquidation of the debts proven and passed.

The foregoing quotation is cited and followed in Pickel v. Pickel, 243 Mo. 641, 665, in a case where, at the suit of a wife, a conveyance by a husband was set aside as fraudulent as to her rights of maintenance.

To the same effect are: Waggener v. Mars, 27 S. C. 97, 2 S. E. 844, 846; Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340.

If there had been in this case a fund in the possession of the court for administration and distribution (we insist there was not), the utmost limit of recovery by the Trust Company and other creditors (assuming there were others, although, in fact, there were not) would be the full amount of their respective claims, with interest, diminished by their proper proportion of any allowance made for counsel fees. The amount distributable to the Trust Company, plus its pro rata share of the allowance of counsel fees, might equal, but could not exceed, the amount of its claim, with interest. In other words, the Trust Company would pay its proportion of counsel fees out of its own distributive share; and the same would be true of other participating creditors.

The result is the same, in principle, where, as here, the Trust Company was the only creditor. The amount awarded it in this case was the full amount of its claim, with interest, and, accordingly, on both principle and authority, the Trust Company should pay its own counsel fees out of the proceeds of its judgment.

Certainly, there is no equity in requiring petitioner to pay out of its share of the true fund (assuming, as before, that there was one), the expenses of the Trust Company's counsel, who rendered no service whatsoever for petitioner, and whose activities were wholly in conflict with its interest.

(c) Not only was the Trust Company awarded a money judgment, which has been paid, and not only does the Trust Company seek to impose its claim for counsel fees upon the part of the trust fund (if there was one) remaining after the only creditor in the action has been paid in full, but the fact remains that the Trust Company's effort in this litigation was solely made in its own behalf, and in an endeavor to protect its own selfish interest; and the rule applies that in such cases there can be now allowance of counsel fees (Groves v. Sentell, 153 U. S. 465, 486; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 490; Pike v. Cincinnati R. Co., 179 Fed. 97, 103; Riddle v. Hudgins, 58 Fed. 490, 494; Boothe v. Coal Co., 72 Wash. 679; Attorney General v. Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 57; Savage v. Sherman, 87 N. Y. 285).

VI.

The statement in the opinion that the entire litigation was vexatious, is entirely unwarranted for the reasons: First, it is wholly unsupported by the record; secondly, it is in conflict with the opinion and mandate of this Court in this case (240 U. S. 166); thirdly, the record, as it stands, shows affirmatively the complete good faith of petitioner and the others associated with it during the entire litigation; and, fourthly, petitioner was wrongfully denied the right to introduce evidence in its own behalf upon that issue.

We feel strongly that the lower court's characterization of the entire litigation as vexatious is highly prejudicial and grossly unfair to petitioner and to counsel who instituted the litigation in the beginning and who have conducted it since that time. We feel, however, that the limits of a brief in support of an application for a writ of certiorari have been reached, and perhaps passed. We are constrained, therefore, to ask the indulgence of the Court by referring it to what has been said upon this topic in our motion for a rehearing (Rec. 754-775). What is there said represents our views upon the subject, and most effectively, we respectfully submit, meets and refutes the lower court's charge that the litigation was vexatious. To repeat here what is there said would, we fear, prolong this brief beyond reasonable bounds.

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

FILE COPY

OCT 5 1929

CHARLES ELMORE CROPL
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1929.

No. 22.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,

Petitioner.

v.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
Henry C. Flower, Receiver,

Respondent.

BRIEF FOR PETITIONER.

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

October 3, 1929.

Pandick Press, Inc., 22 Thames St., New York, U. S. A.

INDEX.

	PAGE
The opinions delivered in the courts below	1
Jurisdiction	2
Statement	2
The principal question in the case	3
The bill of the Cambria Company	4
The Trust Company's answer to the bill of the Cambria Company	6
The ancillary bill	7
The Trust Company's answer to the ancillary bill	8
The intervening petition and the Trust Company's answer	9
The charge of fraud	11
The accounting before the master	14
The decree of June, 1910, and subsequent proceedings	16
The decree of May, 1926, and subsequent proceedings	16
"The character of the litigation"	18
Specification of errors	22
Argument:
I. The proper execution of the mandate of this Court required the taxation of costs only as between party and party, and did not require or authorize the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client	24
II. We earnestly contend that the lower court committed a grave error (1) in holding "that the federal courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow in proper cases costs

PAGE

'as between solicitor and client,' " as such jurisdiction is exercised by the English Court of Chancery, and (2) in applying that erroneous principle to the facts in this case 29

Early statutes and rules of court..... 30

Early decisions of this Court..... 32

The Act of 1853, and its construction by this Court 33

Decisions of Circuit Courts of Appeals.. 40

Counsel fees incurred after the decree of June, 1910..... 42

III. The fact that complainants sought unsuccessfully to charge the Trust Company with the duties and obligations of a trustee, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client..... 45

IV. The litigation conducted by the Trust Company, for its own benefit with respect to the collateral security, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client..... 48

V. It is contrary to both reason and authority to base an allowance of counsel fees in this case upon the assumption that the Trust Company uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid..... 51

The lower court's ruling is in direct conflict with the applicable authorities 53

VI. The statement in the opinion of the court of appeals that the entire litigation was vexatious, is entirely unwarranted for the reasons, first, it finds absolutely no support in the record; secondly, it finds no support in the opinion and mandate of this Court (240 U. S. 166); thirdly, the record, as it stands, shows affirmatively the complete good faith of petitioner and the others associated with it during the entire litigation; and, fourthly, petitioner was wrongfully denied the right to introduce evidence in its own behalf upon that issue 59

PAGE

There was ample justification for the filing of the Cambria bill and the ancillary bills 62

Petitioner was fully justified in filing its intervening petition 65

The evidence fully warranted the demand made for an accounting..... 66

The Trust Company's domination and control of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries 67

The DeGoeijen item..... 70

The Stilwell contract..... 73

The litigation which occurred after the final decree of June, 1910..... 77

The two injunction suits..... 80

No court has found that any part of this litigation was baseless and unwarranted 82

The opinion of this Court is controlling, and it contains no intimation that the litigation was vexatious..... 85

Cases and Authorities Cited.

	PAGE
Act of 1853, 28 U. S. C. A. Secs. 571, 573	33
Apollon, The, 9 Wheat. 362	32, 34
Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306	32, 36, 38
Attorney General v. North Am. Life Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 57	59
Baltimore, The, 8 Wall. 377	26, 34, 38
Boothe v. Coal Co., 72 Wash. 679	59
Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Vol. 3, p. 3399	62
Bray v. West, 9 Simons, 429	47
Buell v. Kanawha Lumber Corp., 201 Fed. 762, 768	53
Bulkeley v. The Earl of Eglington, 1 Jur. 994	47
Burke Const. Co. v. Kline, 271 Fed. 605, 260 U. S. 226	81
Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307	32, 34
Constitution of Missouri, Art. II, Sec. 10	44
26 Corpus Juris, 1061	11
20 Cyc. 825	57
Crescent City v. Butchers' Union, 120 U. S. 141	78, 81
Daniell's Chancery Practice, Vol. 1, p. 1011	47
Daniell's Chancery Pleading & Practice, Vol. 2, p. 1376	30
Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363	32
Doddridge County Oil & Gas Co. v. Smith, 173 Fed. 386	28
Equity Rules 33, 90	31
Ex Parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317	24
Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 275 U. S. 70, 73	29
First National Bank v. Chicago Trust Co., 207 U. S. 61, 66	60
Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556	41
Geddes v. Anaconda Copper Co., 254 U. S. 590	11, 63
Giles v. Randall, 1 K. B. D. 290, 296	30
Godefroi's Law of Trusts, p. 28	47

PAGE

Groves v. Sentell, 153 U. S. 465, 486 59
Guardian Trust Co. v. K. C. Southern Ry. Co., 146 Fed. 337; 171 Fed. 43 80
201 Fed. 811, 211 Fed. 696 ..... 2, 16, 25, 63, 78, 82
28 F. (2d) 233 ..... 1, 3, 17, 29, 80, 82

Hauerstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 490 59
Heap v. Jones, 5 W. R. 106 47
Huff v. Bidwell, 195 Fed. 430 56

Johnson v. United Rys. Co., 247 Mo. 326, 152 S. W. 362 54
Judicial Code, Sec. 240, 28 U. S. C. A., Sec. 347 2

Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co., 240 U. S. 166 ..... 1, 2, 3, 25, 59, 80
279 U. S. 827 ..... 2, 18
Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245 28

Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246 41
Lewin, Law of Trusts, p. 1267 46

McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66 40
Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 F. (2d) 460 42
Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340 58
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530 38
Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459 ..... 26, 38, 44
Missouri, Rev. St. 1919, Sec. 1398 52
Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanston 201 47
Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63 41

Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482 43
Norway v. Norway, 2 M. & K. 278 47

Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211 ..... 26, 27, 35, 37, 38

Perry on Trusts, 6th Ed., Sec. 896 46
Pickel v. Pickel, 147 S. W. 1059 57
Pike v. Cincinnati R. Co., 179 Fed. 97, 103 59

Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247 24
Re Washington R. Co., 140 U. S. 91 24

PAGE

Report of Mr. Justice Nelson, 1 Blatch. C. C. 652..... 31
Revised Statutes, Secs. 823, 824..... 27
Riddle v. Hudgins, 58 Fed. 490, 494..... 59
Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court, 2 L. Ed..... 31

St. Louis, K. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 217 U. S. 247, 251 24
Savage v. Sherman, 87 N. Y. 285..... 59
Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238, 16 F. (2d) 288..... 26
Smith v. Equitable Trust Co., 215 Pa. 413..... 51
Straus v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 297 Fed. 791, 798 44

Tiffany and Bullard on Trusts and Trustees, p. 714..... 46
Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527.....39, 53, 54
Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497.....26, 27, 37

U. S. C. A. 28, 571, 572..... 33
United States v. Smith, 240 Fed. 756..... 28
United States v. Terminal R. R. Assoc., 236 U. S. 194 24
United States v. Wilson, 193 Fed. 1007..... 28

Wagener v. Mars, 27 S. C. 97, 2 S. E. 844, 846..... 58
Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64 Iowa 741..... 44
Willard v. White, 56 Hun 581..... 51
Wolf v. Am. Tr. & Sav. Bank, 214 Fed. 761..... 51
Work v. Tibbits, 87 Hun 352..... 51

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1929.

No. 22.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

v.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Henry C. Flower, Receiver,
Respondent.

BRIEF FOR PETITIONER.

The opinions delivered in the courts below.

The official report of the opinion of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, sought to be reviewed herein, will be found in 28 F. (2d) 233. There were two opinions rendered in the district court, not yet officially reported. The first opinion, delivered in June, 1923, will be found in the record (Rec. I, 691); and the second opinion, rendered in March, 1926, will be found in the record (Rec. I, 704).

NOTE.—The transcript of the record brought to this Court consists of two volumes. Volume II, which is first, in point of time, is a copy of the record in the original case in this Court, in Guardian Trust Co. v. The Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., reported in 240 U. S. 166. References to its pages are as follows: "Rec. II, ...)." Volume I is a transcript of subsequent proceedings in the district court and circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. References to its pages are as follows: "(Rec. I, ...)."

The Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit from the decree (Rec. I, 128) following the second opinion.

Jurisdiction.

An application for a writ of certiorari to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit was made by petitioner under section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (28 U. S. C. A. sec. 347). The decision of that court was handed down on May 18, 1928 (Rec. I, 722-749). A motion for a rehearing was filed by petitioner on July 16, 1928 (Rec. I, 751-821), and was overruled on October 18, 1928 (Rec. I, 821). The application was made within three months after the overruling of said motion for a rehearing and after the entry of the decree sought to be reviewed by this Court. The application was granted by this Court February 25, 1929 (279 U. S. 827).

Statement.

Volume II is the precise record before this Court when it decided this case on its merits in February, 1916 (240 U. S. 166), and it is also the record that was before the circuit court of appeals when it handed down its two opinions (201 Fed. 811; 210 Fed. 696) which that decision affirmed. It will be noted that Volume II contains the pleadings, master's report, decree, and certain other formal matters, but does not contain the evidence on the merits of the case. This evidence has not at any time been brought to this Court or to the court of appeals.

Volume I contains the proceedings in the district court touching the taxation of costs following the decision of this Court in 1916. The record before the court of appeals when it rendered its third opinion (28 F. (2d) 233), now under review, consisted of Volumes I and II.

The principal question in the case.

The principal question in the case, quoting from our application for certiorari, is as follows:

Was the district court for the western district of Missouri, upon receipt of the mandate of this Court in The Kansas City Southern Railway Company v. Guardian Trust Company, 240 U. S. 166, required or authorized to tax against petitioner, in its final decree, costs "as between solicitor and client", including therein the disbursements of the Trust Company for attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred during the entire period of the litigation?

The district court held (Rec. I, 704-720) that only costs as between party and party should be taxed, and rendered its final decree accordingly (Rec. I, 128-131). Such costs have been duly taxed and paid, and are not involved herein. Our contention is that the district court was clearly right in its ruling.

The circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, upon appeal by the Trust Company, held that our federal courts possess the powers of the English Chancery Court over the taxation of costs, and, purporting to exercise those powers, it reversed the decree of the district court (Rec. I, 722-749) and remanded the case with instructions to tax costs "as between solicitor and client". Its decree requires the taxation, as costs against petitioner, of attorneys' fees, and other disbursements of the Trust Company, in the sum of approximately $300,000 (Rec. I, 59). Petitioner seeks a review by this Court of the decree of the circuit court of appeals. It is believed that this highly important question of federal practice can be determined by the Court as a matter of law, without opening the record in this twenty-nine year old case.

The bill of the Cambria Company.

This litigation had its inception in September, 1900, when the Cambria Steel Company, a judgment creditor of the Belt Company, filed a creditor's bill in behalf of itself and other creditors (Rec. II, 3) in the federal court at Kansas City, Mo., against the Trust Company, the Belt Company, and others.

The complaint alleged, in substance (Rec. II, 5-6) that the Trust Company, prior to the year 1887, conceived and entered upon the plan and purpose to cause to be constructed a number of railroads, including that of the Belt Company, by various corporations, all to be organized by the Trust Company, and to be officered with officers and directors of the Trust Company, and thereby completely to dominate and control the actions of such railroad and other companies, and their several officers and directors; that it was the plan and purpose of the Trust Company to gather unto itself all the profits and other advantages accruing in the premises, and to foist upon such railroads, including the Belt Company, any losses that might be sustained or liabilities that might result in the premises.

It was further alleged that in carrying out its said plan and purpose, the Trust Company assumed the position and duty of trustee and agent in managing and disposing of the bonds, stocks, funds and other assets of such railroad and other companies, in trust for the use and benefit of the parties who might become concerned or interested therein; and that, consequently, the relation of the Trust Company to each and all of such railroad and auxiliary companies was that of principal, bound and charged with the duty to indemnify and protect the railroad and other companies, so employed and utilized in any particular transaction, against any and all losses, burdens and liabilities arising in the premises.

Then followed allegations (Rec. II, 6-12) as to the various companies organized and officered by the officers and directors of the Trust Company, and the various transactions whereby it was alleged losses had been sustained and, through the domination and control of the Trust Company, unlawfully charged to the Belt Company, and unlawful profits and charges made at the expense of the Belt Company, resulting, on March 31, 1899, in an apparent, but not a real, indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company in the sum of approximately $360,000; that on said date promissory notes were caused to be given by the Belt Company to the Trust Company to evidence its alleged indebtedness, and the Belt Company was caused to pledge with the Trust Company all its available securities (listed (Rec. II, 14) and disposed of in final decree (Rec. II, 906)) as collateral to secure the same; that the giving of the notes and collateral was done fraudulently, through such domination and control, in anticipation of the insolvency and receivership of the Gulf Company, which occurred the following day, April 1, 1899 (Rec. II, 12-15); and the prayer (Rec. II, 18) was for an accounting, for a cancellation of the alleged indebtedness from the Belt Company to the Trust Company, the subjection of the collateral to the payment of complainant's debt, and for an injunction to restrain a threatened sale by the Trust Company of said collateral.

The Trust Company's answer to the bill of the Cambria Company.

The answer of the Trust Company (Rec. II, 33) denied the allegations of the bill, and particularly denied the existence of any trust relations in the following language (Rec. II, 42):

> Denies that in carrying out any of its plans and purposes as alleged in the bill of complaint the defendant assumed the position and duty of trustee and agent in managing and disposing of the bonds, stocks, funds and other assets of said railroad companies and auxiliary companies in trust, and for the use and benefit of the parties who might become interested therein, as alleged in the bill of complaint; and denies that as a consequence of any such alleged position the relation of this defendant to any of such railroad companies and auxiliary companies in any wise became or was as principal bound and charged with the duty to indemnify or protect any such railroad or auxiliary company in any transaction against any loss, burden or liability, as alleged in the bill of complaint. Denies that it became the duty of the defendant, as to persons becoming interested in any of said railroad companies or auxiliary companies as creditors, to dispose of the stock, bonds, funds or other assets of any such railroad companies or auxiliary companies for the use and benefit of the persons interested therein, or who might become interested therein as creditors or otherwise, as alleged in the bill of complaint.

The Trust Company expressed a willingness to render a full and true account to the Belt Company, and to furnish all such information whenever thereunto lawfully and properly requested. It said (Rec. II, 48):

> . . . Notwithstanding the fact that the said Belt Company has at all times had full and true accounts and knowledge of all the transactions between it and this defendant as aforesaid; yet, if, for any reason, it desires further accounting or information as to any of the said matters or things, this defendant is ready and willing and hereby offers again to render a full and true account and to furnish all such information, whenever thereunto lawfully and properly requested.

Under the bill of the Cambria Company, the issue was one of debt or no debt between the Belt Company and the Trust Company. With this determined the collateral would go to the party entitled to it.

The ancillary bill.

The ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers, under which the accounting, in the main, was carried on, was filed in November, 1901 (Rec. II, 97), pursuant to stipulation (Rec. II, 890) which consented that the accounting sought should be expedited, and also required that the Belt Company should be co-complainant with the receivers. This ancillary bill, as appears from the stipulation, superseded a so-called cross-bill, previously filed by the receivers as sole cross-complainants. The receivers became parties complainant pursuant to the authorization contained in the order appointing them (Rec. II, 29). They were expressly authorized and empowered "to bring suits for an accounting . . . against any and all persons whatsoever, based upon or arising out of past dealings or relations." This could only apply to an action for an accounting against the Trust Company. There was no one else with whom the Trust Company had had "past dealings or relations" of any consequence. The ancillary bill was substantially the same as the bill of the Cambria Company. It sought an accounting and a cancellation of the alleged indebtedness. An amended and supplemental ancillary bill was filed in March, 1905 (Rec. II, 202), at the request of the Trust Company and in response to its motion for a surcharging and falsifying of the accounts brought in by the Trust Company (Rec. I, 15). A further amended ancillary bill and also the Trust Company's answer thereto were filed together on July 2, 1906 (Rec. I, 392), by stipulation (Rec. II, 391), at the close of the taking of testimony, to conform the pleadings of both parties to the proof. The allegations of this amended ancillary bill are summarized by the master (Rec. II, 584 et seq.).

The Trust Company's answer to the ancillary bill.

The Trust Company answered the ancillary bill, in December, 1901 (Rec. II, 115), admitting the community of officers (Rec. II, 148), but denying that it had dominated and controlled the railroad companies, including the Belt Company. It also sought to justify its action in the various matters complained of, and offered to make such further accounting as might be desired. It said (Rec. II, 148). "The Trust Company has at all times stood ready, and is still ready and willing, to make such further accounting thereof as may by the court be required."

And, again, it said (Rec. II, 155):

> These defendants further state and show that they are ready and willing, if in the judgment of this court, they ought and should do so, to render a fuller accounting of any and all of the transactions of the Trust Company with any and all of said companies, in such manner and at such times as the Court may direct.

(In this connection, it seems proper to state that the master subsequently ruled that an accounting should be had (Rec. I, 14).)

A similar answer, but pleading laches and the state statutes of limitation (Rec. II, 370), was filed (Rec. II, 312) to the first amended ancillary bill of complaint, and also (Rec. II, 461) to the second ancillary bill of complaint.

Under the ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers, the issue was one of debt or no debt between the Belt Company and the Trust Company. The fate of the collateral would depend upon the determination of this issue.

The intervening petition and the Trust Company answer.

Petitioner became a party to the litigation in 1905 by intervening petition (Rec. II, 166), filed by stipulation (Rec. II, 164). It charged that the Gulf Company, the Belt Company and the Air Line had executed mortgages covering after-acquired property, the lien of which attached to certain of the collateral held by the Trust Company, or to the properties represented thereby; that petitioner, as purchaser at foreclosure sales of the properties of those companies, had become the owner thereof, and demand was made for the securities or the properties which they represented.

The answer of the Trust Company (Rec. II, 186) contained a denial of the allegations of the intervening petition, pleaded laches and the state statutes of limitation (Rec. II, 198), and further alleged (Rec. II, 199-201) that by reason of the reorganization of the Belt Company, petitioner had become liable for its debt to the Trust Company.

Thus it appears that this liability issue, which thereafter became the dominant issue in the action, was one which the Trust Company itself injected into the case in 1905. It is largely the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the Trust Company incurred in litigating this issue which it now seeks to impose upon petitioner.

By stipulation (Rec. II, 267), petitioner was permitted to file an amended intervening petition, and to include therein its claim against the Trust Company for alleged breach of trust as trustee in the mortgage made by the Union Terminal Railway Company; and the Trust Company consented that the issues so made should be referred to the special master, and waived any objection it might make to said intervening petition on the ground of multifariousness or other formal matters.

The amended intervening petition (Rec. II, 269) was substantially the same as the original pleading, except that (Rec. II, 288) it alleged that it was the duty of the Trust Company, under the mortgage of the Terminal Company, to see that as the bonds of the Union Terminal Railroad Company were sold, the proceeds thereof were used in the construction, completion and equipment of the railroad of the Union Terminal Railroad Company, and alleged a failure to perform this duty.

The answer of the Trust Company (Rec. II, 293) in the main followed its answer to the original intervening petition, but denied the alleged trusteeship in the matter complained of, asserting that no duty was imposed upon it, either by law or by the express terms of the mortgage, to see that the bonds as sold were used in the construction of the railroad, saying (Rec. II, 307):

Respondent denies that either by law or by the express terms of said mortgage it was the duty of respondent to see that as said bonds were sold, proceeds thereof should be used in the construction, completion and equipment of said railroad. On the contrary respondent says that there was no such duty imposed either by the terms of said mortgage or by law.

Under the intervening petition of petitioner, the issue was three-fold: first, was petitioner the owner of the collateral security, or the properties represented thereby? Secondly, did the Trust Company assume a relation of trust with respect to the use of the proceeds of the Union Terminal bonds; and if so, was that trust violated? Thirdly, did petitioner assume the debt of the Belt Company?

The charge of fraud.

Much is said in the opinion of the lower court about the charge of fraud. It is true that fraud was charged on both sides; but the fraud charged against the Trust Company was in the nature of constructive fraud (26 C. J. 1061), arising from the relation of the parties, the common officers and directors controlling the corporations in question, and the alleged misuse by the Trust Company of the power derived from this community of interest, within the rule of the Geddes case, 254 U. S. 590. This will be referred to later.

The master did not feel that charges of actual fraud were involved in complainant's bills, except in the one instance of the transfer of collateral security by the Belt Company to the Trust Company on March 31, 1899, on the eve of the insolvency of the Gulf Company and the prospective loss of control by the Trust Company over the affairs of the Belt Company. The ancillary bill is summarized by the master (Rec. II, 584-592). The word "fraud" does not occur. The word "fraudulent" occurs but once (Rec. II, 592), and is there used to characterize the said transfer of the collateral security. In this connection, the master finds (Rec. II, 754) that when this transfer was made, the officers of the Trust Company knew that the Gulf Company would default in its interest and that receivers would be appointed for it, and that that would likely mean that the Trust Company would not thereafter have a controlling influence in Belt Company matters. These facts, we feel, fairly justified the charge that the transfer was fraudulent.

The allegations of the intervening petition of petitioner are summarized by the master (Rec. II, 735-742). Neither the word "fraud" nor "fraudulent" appears.

The master's conception of complainants' bill was not that it abounded in wholesale charges of fraud, as suggested by the court of appeals, but that it was based upon the alleged domination and control by the Trust Company of the Belt Company. In this respect he says (Rec. II, 583):

> Before, taking up, for consideration, the various "items", or complaints, contained in the second ancillary bill, the master has thought best to make a somewhat extended reference to the controlling question in this cause, that is, the alleged domination and control by the Trust Company of, and over, the Belt Company, and its constituent companies, which complainants contend to have existed throughout the whole period, covered by the transactions, complained of in said bill.
>
> It will be manifest to the Court, from a careful reading of this second ancillary bill, that it is grounded upon the proposition that the Trust Company so dominated and controlled these other com> panies, that their directors and officers were merely agents of the Trust Company to execute the wishes of A. E. Stilwell and others dominant in the control of Trust Company affairs.

And, again (Rec. II, 641):

> The underlying theory, upon which complainants' bill is grounded, is that the Trust Company dominated and controlled the Suburban Company, afterwards the Belt Company, and its constituent companies, and also, the subsidiary companies named in the bill, by virtue of causing the employees, officers and directors of the Trust Company to be elected officers and directors of the Suburban Company, and other corporations, and thereby placing the agents, employees and officers of the Trust Company in charge of such companies, respectively, so that these companies might be dominated and controlled at the behest and in the interest of the Trust Company, and, which complainants allege was done, continuously, through the period of years intervening between the incorporation of these companies and April, 1900, when what was known as the Stilwell management of the Belt and allied companies, lost control, and the Southern Company, and those associated with it, acquired control thereof through the receivership and foreclosure proceedings, mentioned in the bill.

The Trust Company itself did not feel that charges of gross fraud or misconduct had been made against it. It deliberately took the position that the charges made were of constructive fraud, and not "actual fraud." This is a matter of record. The intervening stockholders of the Trust Company characterized the bill as "a mere cry of domination and constructive fraud" (Rec. II, 963). In the "Answer of Guardian Trust Company on rule to show cause," filed in the lower court on December 16, 1907, it is said, in paragraph 13 (Rec. II, 558):

> There is no valid cause of action against this defendant set up in the said ancillary bill of complaint; no actual fraud is charged therein and said bill presents a legally meaningless theory and an impossible case.

The foregoing statement is signed by Mr. Rosenberger and Mr. Mecartney, both counsel for the Trust Company at that time, and is sworn to by the former.

It thus appears that it was the deliberate opinion of the Trust Company in 1907, about a year after this case had been argued for two weeks before the special master, when the whole matter was fresh in the minds of counsel, that no "actual fraud" had been charged against it.

The accounting before the master.

As before stated, the Trust Company in its answer (Rec. II, 48, 148, 155) consented to an accounting, and by its stipulation (Rec. II, 891) agreed that the accounting should be had and expedited. The district court, in March, 1908, in an unreported opinion in this case, held that this stipulation evidenced the full consent of the Trust Company to an accounting. It said: "It (the Trust Company) has consented that the master take an accounting, finding and report as to the respective rights and claims of the parties to the property, notes, bonds and claims involved." Judge Trimble, counsel for the Trust Company when its answer was filed consenting to an accounting, consulted with his partners before that course was determined upon (Rec. I, 278).

New counsel for the Trust Company having come into the case, they raised before the master, in February, 1905, the right of complainants to an accounting, and the master ruled "that, under the circumstances, there shall be an accounting in this case"; and the Trust Company then demanded that complainants in the ancillary bill "specify the items of this long and complicated account which are in dispute here." Whereupon counsel for complainants in the ancillary bill, at the request of the Trust Company and in response to its motion, announced his intention to file, and afterwards filed, an amended bill surcharging and falsifying. This appears from a fragment of the proceedings before the master, found in Rec. I, pages 14-15.

A large amount of testimony was taken before the master. It appears from an affidavit filed in the lower court that there were 6,950 pages of oral evidence and 27,592 pages of documentary evidence, principally copies of vouchers and records. The case was argued for two weeks before the master in July, 1906 (Rec. II, 1023). The master's report was filed in May, 1910 (Rec. II, 575). It recommended (a) that the Trust Company's claim against the Belt Company be reduced by three items, aggregating $21,850 and interest, and sustained as to all other items; (b) that the lands of Central Improvement Company, which cost $169,349.60 (Rec. II, 280) and which were referred to in argument as having a value of $300,000 to $400,000 (Rec. II, 952), be conveyed to petitioner; and (c) that petitioner be held not liable in any way for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company (Rec. II, 887).

The decree of June, 1910, and subsequent proceedings.

The district court overruled all exceptions to the master's report and entered a final decree, in June, 1910 (Rec. II, 903), carrying out the recommendations of the master. The Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, which (1912-1913) reversed the decree of the lower court (201 Fed. 811; 211 Fed. 696). Petitioner thereupon appealed to this Court, which, in February, 1916, affirmed the decree of the circuit court of appeals (240 U. S. 166). Petitioner, in April, 1916, paid the Trust Company $821,623.28 (Rec. I, 129), as the full amount of its claim, with interest. This proved to be an overpayment, which was adjusted in the final decree of May, 1926 (Rec. I, 130).

The decree of May, 1926, and subsequent proceedings.

Six years later, in October, 1922, the Trust Company moved in the district court for a final decree in accordance with the mandate of this Court (Rec. I, 15). The lower court in its first opinion, in June, 1923 (Rec. I, 691), reached the conclusion that costs should be taxed as between solicitor and client, and appointed a master (Rec. I, 20) to ascertain and state all items of costs and expenses paid or incurred by the Trust Company, "including among other expenses those for attorneys' fees, counsel or solicitor fees, stenographers' fees, expert accountants' fees, printing fees, traveling expenses, and other expenses incurred in the premises".

The district court having intimated in its first opinion (Rec. I, 698) that the circuit court of appeals had found that the litigation was vexatious, but expressly stating that it expressed no independent judgment of its own thereon, petitioner, in December, 1923 (Rec. I, 33), filed a motion and application for leave to file a duly verified petition "to introduce testimony proving that this litigation was instituted and conducted on the part of each of the complainants in entire good faith", and setting out in detail the oral and documentary evidence which it desired to introduce (Rec. I, 34-44). This motion was overruled, and permission to introduce testimony was refused (Rec. I, 45).

The master filed his report on September 15, 1924 (Rec. I, 46), finding that the costs as between party and party amounted to $11,499.32 (Rec. I, 49), and that the costs as between solicitor and client amounted to $296,520.37 (Rec. I, 59). Of this latter sum, $280,867.98 was for attorneys' fees which were incurred in the litigation from beginning to end, including services in the circuit court of appeals and in this Court. Exceptions to the master's report were filed by both parties (Rec. I, 94, 106).

At the argument of the exceptions, the court permitted a reargument of the entire matter, and in an opinion dated March, 1926 (Rec. I, 704), the court reversed its former ruling, and held that the law did not permit the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client in this case, but only as between party and party. A final decree in accordance therewith was accordingly entered in May, 1926 (Rec. I, 128).

From this decree the Trust Company appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, and that court, in May, 1928, reversed the said decree of May, 1926 (28 F. (2d) 233), to review which action of the circuit court of appeals petitioner, after an unsuccessful motion for a rehearing, presented its application to this Court for a writ of certiorari, which was granted February 25, 1929 (279 U. S. 827).

Some additional facts are stated under the following heading, and also in that part of the brief, beginning at page 59 dealing with the lower court's intimation that this entire litigation was vexatious.

"The character of the litigation."

Under this heading (28 F. (2d) 234), the court of appeals, in its decision now under review, seeks to differentiate this case from the usual and ordinary equity proceeding and to place it in a special category, and to apply to it special and unusual rules. We desire to point out several matters which, we feel, have been misunderstood or misconstrued by the court.

1. The court of appeals regarded this case as essentially one of fraud, where wholesale and indiscriminate charges of fraud have been made against the Trust Company and adjudged to be unfounded. With all due respect to the lower court, we feel that this is entirely erroneous, and have no hesitation in saying that the parties who conducted the litigation in the lower court, and the master, as well as the lower court itself, took a different view. Complainants' theory throughout the litigation was, as above stated, that the Trust Company, through a community of officers and directors, had dominated and controlled the Belt Company and imposed unjust charges upon it. The community of officers and directors was one of the established facts in the case (Rec. II, 148, 597). It was conceded that over a period of years the same officers representing both companies dealt with themselves in a dual capacity. This, and not actual fraud, was the gravamen of the action.

It is entirely plain that the master did not for a moment, during the nine and one-half years that the case was before him, imagine that he was trying a case where actual fraud was the dominant and controlling element, or even a substantial element. This is clear from his statements in his report (Rec. II, 641, and Rec. II, 583, quoted above).

2. It is said by the court of appeals (p. 239) that "the charge that the Trust Company had violated fiduciary relations with the Belt Company and its subsidiary companies was adjudged not true." We feel that this statement, while true enough in a general sense, is nevertheless quite misleading in this case. It assumes that the Trust Company, having assumed admitted or established fiduciary relations towards the Belt Company and its subsidiary companies, was charged in the bill with the violation of its duties and obligations thereunder. The charge in this case was that the Trust Company had assumed fiduciary relations of this character, which, if established, would create certain obligations. The Trust Company vigorously denied that it had assumed any such relations. The finding of the master and the district court supported the Trust Company's contention. Hence, there were no fiduciary relations to be violated. The parties, therefore, sustained the relation of ordinary litigants toward each other. It is apparent, therefore, that the case is quite fundamentally different, as hereafter pointed out, from one where, fiduciary relations having been established or admitted, the issue is whether or not they have been violated.

3. Again, the court of appeals says (p. 239): "the charge that the Trust Company had violated its duty as trustee under mortgages of the Belt Company and its subsidiary companies was adjudged not true." But what was actually adjudged was that no trusteeship in the matter in question actually existed, or ever had existed. Hence, no such duty or obligation as rests on trustees ever came into existence. It is one thing to charge the existence of a trusteeship and fail to establish it, as was the case here, and quite another thing to charge a violation of a trusteeship which has been actually established or admitted. There were two instances where complainants sought an adjudication that the Trust Company had assumed the duties of trustee in the particular matter specified: First, with respect to the Union Terminal bonds, where it was charged that the Trust Company had assumed certain duties and obligations as trustee with respect to the use of Union Terminal bonds and their proceeds. The Trust Company denied the existence of any such trust relations, and this defense was sustained (Rec. II, 872 et seq.). No trust relation therefore ever existed.

In the other instance, it was charged that the Trust Company, being a trustee in the Belt Company mortgage, thereby assumed such a trust relation to the Belt properties and the Belt bondholders as to disable it from taking or receiving any of the Belt assets or properties as security for its own indebtedness (Rec. II, 757). The master held that no such trust relation existed, saying (Rec. II, 760): "the Trust Company was under no such duty to the Belt bondholders as would prohibit it from taking collateral security to secure an indebtedness to it from the Belt Company." It was the non-existence of the trust relation which was adjudicated.

4. It was said by the court of appeals (p. 238): "The master recommended, further, that the amended petition of intervention of the Southern Company be dismissed as being without either law or equity, except as to one paragraph in regard to certain lands standing in the name of the Central Improvement Company, one of the subsidiary companies, and that the Trust Company was entitled to hold and subject to the payment of the debt to it from the Belt Company all of the collateral mentioned." One would naturally infer from this statement that the Trust Company had been completely successful in its contest over the collateral, except in one matter of minor importance, touching the Central Improvement Company lands. Such, however, was not the case. The Central Improvement Company lands, or the Central Improvement Company stock (which had no value outside of the lands) was the most important of the items in controversy, and these were awarded to petitioner. The master (Rec. II, 781) refers to the stock as "one of the most valuable collateral securities." The value of the lands, as pointed out above, ran into several hundred thousand dollars.

On the other hand, the stocks and bonds adjudicated to the Trust Company in the final decree (Rec. II, 906) were either of small value, or had disappeared from the case as items of collateral before the litigation began (Sept. 7, 1900), or was fairly under way. Thus, the 15,000 shares of Union Company stock and the 5,000 shares of Air Line stock were sold by the Trust Company in June, 1900, for $35,000, and that amount was credited upon its debt against the Belt Company (Rec. II, 769). The 1120 shares of capital stock of Central Improvement Company, for which a separate receiver had been appointed, had no value outside of the lands, which, as above stated, were awarded to petitioner. The 439 shares of stock of Northern Townsite Company, which also had its own receiver, were of small value, as appears from the decree (Rec. II, 914). The 425 shares of stock of Missouri Elevator & Terminal Company, also in receivership, were worthless, the property of that company having been turned over to the mortgagee by order of the court. The 25 shares of Fairmount Amusement Company were of no value. The 13,920 shares of stock of Northern Connecting Railroad Company were sold by the Trust Company on September 30, 1899, for $19,885.71 and credited upon the Belt debt (Rec. II, 773). The 315 First Mortgage Bonds were sold by the Trust Company on October 23, 1900, for $110,250, and applied on the Belt debt (Rec. II, 772). The 99 First Mortgage Bonds of the Northern Connecting Railroad Company were sold November 1, 1901, under order of court, and the proceeds, $40,001.25, credited on the decree (Rec. II, 903, 907). The steel rails and fastenings were sold by the Trust Company for $11,133.06, on September 26, 1900, and the proceeds credited upon its claim against the Belt Company (Rec. II, 780). There is no record of the disposition of the claim of the Belt Company against the Gulf Company for switching charges and terminal services, amounting to about $133,000.00. This completes the list.

It thus appears that petitioner was awarded the only item of collateral security of substantial value held by the Trust Company during the years of the litigation.

Specification of Errors.

For its specification of such assigned errors as are intended to be urged, petitioner alleges that the circuit court of appeals committed error in the following respects:

1. In holding that the opinion of this Court required or authorized the taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client".

2. In holding that "the United States courts of equity at the time of their creation became endowed with the powers, including that over costs, possessed by the English chancery courts".

3. In holding that "the federal courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow, in proper cases, costs 'as between solicitor and client'."

4. In holding that the respondent is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client" in this case.

5. In holding that the Trust Company, as a pledgee, is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client", although it litigated its right to the pledged property, not in the interest of the pledgor, and not for the care, preservation or protection of the property, but in its own individual interest, and for its own personal protection.

6. In holding that the Trust Company, when sought to be charged as trustee, or with the obligations resting upon trustees, is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client", notwithstanding the fact that the Trust Company disclaimed any trusteeship and any and all fiduciary obligations, and was successful in maintaining this defense.

7. In holding that after the Trust Company succeeded in holding petitioner liable for the debt of the Belt Company, and in collecting from petitioner its entire debt and interest, it is entitled to taxation of costs "as between solicitor and client", upon the theory that it occupied the position of a creditor, who, in behalf of itself and others, has brought a fund into court for distribution, and is awarded an allowance from the fund.

8. In holding that "the whole litigation" was of a "vexatious character", particularly after denying petitioner an opportunity to offer evidence in its own behalf on that issue.

ARGUMENT.

I.

The proper execution of the mandate of this Court required the taxation of costs only as between party and party, and did not require or authorize the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

It is familiar law that it was the duty of the district court to which the mandate in this case was addressed by this Court, to carry it into execution according to its terms, in the light of the opinion of this Court. It could not vary it, or examine it for any other purpose than execution; or give any other or further relief, or review it, even for apparent error; nor intermeddle with it in any manner (Ex Parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317; Re Washington R. Co., 140 U. S. 91; Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247).

So well established is this rule that this Court will grant certiorari to the court of appeals where, as here, the question "involves the construction of a prior decree of the United States circuit court affirmed by this Court" (St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. Wabash R. Co., 217 U. S. 247, 251). This Court will inquire into the proper execution of its own decree "either by original proceeding or in any other appropriate form" (United States v. Terminal R. Assoc., 236 U. S. 194, 199).

This Court (240 U. S. 166) affirmed the decree of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit (210 Fed. 696), which directed (pp. 723, 724) the entry by the district court of a specific decree, complete in all details, disposing of the entire controversy, including the matter of costs. The mandate of this Court (Rec. I, 467) adjudged that said decree be "affirmed with costs," and that the Trust Company et al. recover against petitioner "twenty dollars for their costs herein expended and have execution therefor."

There are numerous references in the directions for the entry of a specific decree (210 Fed. 723, 724), to "the costs of this suit"; "the costs after as well as before the decree"; "its costs down to the entry of the decree"; with a further provision that the Trust Company shall be permitted to pursue either the Cambria Company or the Southern Company, or both of them, "until its costs are paid". After refusing to entertain, and, in effect, denying, the petition of the three stockholders for a taxation against petitioner of the amount of the Trust Company's attorneys' fees, etc., the court said: "Our conclusion is that our just course is to leave the taxation of costs to the court below, under the principles, rules and practice in equity."

When this Court affirmed the decree of the lower court, directing the entry of a specific decree, complete in all details, and awarding "costs", without further designation or qualification, against the unsuccesssful party, and leaving the "taxation costs" to the lower court, we submit that it could only mean taxable costs, in the ordinary acceptation of the term; that is, costs as between party and party, as the word "costs" has been used in judgments and decrees from time immemorial, in accordance with the practice of taxing costs which has prevailed in this country from the beginning; in other words, it meant taxable costs, as distinguished from an "allowance" out of a fund, or as distinguished from attorneys' fees fixed by statute and allowed in certain designated cases.

It is not to be assumed that this Court acted inadvertently, and that what it really intended was to import into our jurisprudence the English system of taxation of costs, by which the losing party is to be burdened and penalized with the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the successful litigant. Nor is it to be assumed that this Court, merely by affirming a decree carrying "costs", intended thereby to overrule its long line of decisions, such as The Baltimore, 8 Wall, 377; Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211; Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, and Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, which, we contend, authoritatively established a rule in this country exactly to the contrary.

It seems too plain to require extended argument that if this Court had intended any departure from the ordinary practice in the taxation of costs, it would have said so in plain language. If it had intended to import the English system into our jurisprudence, it would have manifested its intention in unambiguous words, which would have sounded a warning to all future litigants that litigation thereafter was to be at the peril of paying all counsel fees in case of failure. If it had intended that the word "costs" should include "allowances", under the guise of a taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, or otherwise, it seems certain that language would have been employed which would have left no room for doubt as to its purpose.

That the word "costs" does not include attorneys' fees was authoritatively decided by this Court in Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238. There, the action was on a surety bond, under a statute of Nebraska which provided that in such actions "a reasonable sum as an attorney's fee in addition to the amount of his recovery" may be taxed as a part of the "costs". The circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit held (16 F. (2d) 688) that attorneys' fees were not a part of the "costs" provided for in R. S. sec. 823, 824, and, therefore, could not be allowed as costs in a federal court. This Court, upon appeal, agreed with the lower court that such attorneys' fees are not and cannot be a part of the taxable costs prescribed by the federal statute. This Court did, however, give effect to the Nebraska statute by holding that the amount of the attorney's fee could be included in the judgment. It said (p. 243):

> That the statute directs the allowance, which is made to plaintiff, to be added to the judgment as costs are added does not make it costs in the ordinary sense of the traditional, arbitrary and small fees of court officers, attorneys' docket fees and the like, allowed to counsel by Rev. Stat. sec. 823, 824.
>
> The present allowance, since it is not costs in the ordinary sense, is not within the field of costs legislation covered by Rev. Stat. sec. 823, 824. That the particular mode of enforcing the right provided by the state statute—i. e., by taxing the allowance as costs—is not available to the federal courts under Rev. Stat. sec. 823, 824 does not preclude the recovery. Since the right exists, the federal courts may follow their own appropriate procedure for its enforcement by including the amount of the fee in the judgment.

In two other decisions of this Court, hereafter referred to (Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall, 211, and Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497), it was held that "costs" did not include attorneys' fees. Those actions were upon injunction bonds which were conditioned to pay to defendants "all costs and damages". In both cases it was held that counsel fees, incurred in securing a dissolution of the injunction, did not come within the scope of either "costs" or "damages".

In several instances the lower courts have held that the word "costs" in a decree or in a statute is to be construed as including only taxable costs, as distinguished from allowances.

In Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245 (circuit court of appeals, fourth circuit), the mandate of the court of appeals provided that the "costs" of the case in both the appellate and the lower court should be borne equally by the appellant and the appellees. In a taxation of costs pursuant to this direction, the lower court included an allowance to the receiver as a part of the costs properly to be divided. The action of the lower court in including the allowance to the receiver was appealed from, and reversed on appeal, the appellate court saying (p. 247):

> In decreeing the division of costs in this court and the court below was meant only the ordinary taxable costs of the litigation, and not such charges and expenses as the costs of the receivership and payments and allowances to receivers; those being costs properly appertaining to the receivership, and chargeable against the property in the receiver's hands. Ferguson v. Dent (C. C.), 46 Fed. 88; Elkhorn Oil & Gas Co. v. Foster, 99 Fed. 495, 39 C. C. A 615.

To the same effect are:

Doddridge County Oil & Gas Co. v. Smith, 173 Fed. 386;
United States v. Wilson, 193 Fed. 1007;
United States v. Smith, 240 Fed. 756.

If the Trust Company felt that it was entitled to have the opinion and mandate of this Court broadened so as to include allowances in the nature of costs as between solicitor and client, it should have made an appropriate application to the Court for that purpose, and before the expiration of the term. After the lapse of the term, the provision relative to costs could not be altered (Fairmount Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 275 U. S. 70, 73).

II.

We earnestly contend that the lower court committed a grave error (1) in holding "that the federal courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow in proper cases costs 'as between solicitor and client,' " as such jurisdiction is exercised by the English Court of Chancery, and (2) in applying that erroneous principle to the facts in this case.

The lower court reached the conclusion, which is quoted in the above heading, and which, we contend, is wholly erroneous, by two successive steps; first, it asserts (28 F. (2d) 240) that the English courts of chancery have for several centuries possessed jurisdiction to award costs as between solicitor and client; and, secondly (p. 241), that the United States courts of equity at the time of their creation became endowed with, and now possess, the powers, including that over costs, possessed by the English chancery court.

We confidently contend that the English system of taxation of costs as between solicitor and client has never been adopted in this country; and, furthermore, that if it has ever been the law here, which we do not admit, it has been expressly repudiated, by the substitution therefor of the Act of Congress of 1853, providing for the taxation of an attorney's fee of $20 "and no other" as costs on final hearing in equity. This Court and the lower courts have uniformly applied this statute as the settled rule in federal jurisdiction.

Space does not permit an extended discussion of the English system of taxation of costs. It is fundamentally different from our own. Under it, attorneys' fees or solicitors' fees, which are fixed by law, are taxed against the losing party in every case, whether at law or in equity. Costs as between party and party include attorneys' fees of the adversary. Costs as between solicitor and client include a somewhat larger proportion of the actual expenditures of the successful party than is allowed in taxation as between party and party.

In modern practice, however, the English system of taxation as between solicitor and client "gives little more than a taxation as between party and party" (Giles v. Randall, 1 K. B. D. 290, 296; Daniell's Chancery Pleading & Practice, Vol. 2, 6th Am. Ed., star page 1376, note 1).

For the purpose of showing that the English system has not only never been established in this country, but that it has been definitely and finally repudiated by our courts, we will briefly trace the historical development of the subject of taxation of attorneys' fees as costs from the beginning of our government down to date.

Early statutes and rules of court.

On August 8, 1791, "the Chief Justice, in answer to the motion of the Attorney General, made yesterday, informs him and the bar, that this court consider the practice of the courts of king's bench, and of chancery, in England, as affording outlines for the practice of this court; and that they will, from time to time, make such alterations therein as circumstances may render necessary'' (Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court of the United States, 2 L. Ed.). This in 1822 was expanded into Equity Rule 33, and in 1842, into Equity Rule 90, which latter was dropped from the equity rules February 1, 1913.

The lower court, in its opinion, apparently takes the view that the effect of these equity rules was to import into our practice the English doctrine of taxation of costs as between solicitor and client. We contend that this cannot be so, and proceed to state our reasons.

Congress, by Act of September 29, 1789, provided that the rates of fees in the circuit and district courts of the United States, in equity cases, should be in accordance with those allowed by the chancery court of the state. The Act of May 26, 1790, continued the Act of 1789 until the end of the succeeding session, and it was again continued by the Act of February 18, 1791, until the end of the next session. The Act of March 1, 1793, provided for the taxation in the circuit courts of the United States of such attorneys' fees and counsel fees ''as are allowed in the Supreme or Superior Courts of the respective states''. The Act was continued another year by the Act of February 25, 1795, and was again continued by the Act of March 31, 1796, for the term of two years, and from thence until the end of the next session of Congress thereafter (Report of Mr. Justice Nelson, 1 Blatchford C. C. 652).

Is it not entirely clear that Congress, in these enactments, was declaring its own policy with respect to the taxation of attorneys' fees as costs? It deliberately adopted the policy of applying the rules of the state court where the federal court was sitting, as the rules in its own court.

If it had desired to adopt the English practice, in that behalf, it seems certain that it would have said so. At that period in the development of our judicial system, the extent to which the forms, precedents and practice of the mother country should be followed, was receiving the earnest attention of Congress. Its failure to adopt the English practice can only be regarded as an intentional repudiation of it in favor of its own rules.

Early decisions of this Court.

The first case in which there was presented to this Court the question of whether or not attorneys' fees might be taxed as costs, was Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306, 1 L. Ed. 613, decided in 1796. In that case an allowance of $1,600 as counsel fees had been included as a part of the damages allowed by the circuit court, but this Court ordered the disallowance of this item, saying:

> We do not think that this charge ought to be allowed. The general practice of the United States is in opposition to it; and even if that practice were not strictly correct in principle, it is entitled to the respect of the court, until it is changed, or modified, by statute.

Then followed The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, decided in 1824, and Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307, decided in 1830, in both of which the decision was rendered by Mr. Justice Story, and in both counsel fees were allowed. Both cases, however, were explained, as we shall see later, as having been decided as they were because the Act of 1853 was not then in force. In Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, decided in 1851, the court held that attorneys' fees could not be included in an award of exemplary damages.

Prior to the statute of 1853, the practice with respect to the taxation of attorneys' fees as costs may be said to have lacked uniformity; the general rule being that such costs were to be taxed in accordance with the varying practice in the state where the court was sitting. But this lack of uniformity is in itself conclusive evidence that the English system had not been adopted, for had that system been adopted, we would find uniformity, instead of uncertainty. The report of Mr. Justice Nelson, above referred to, was published in 1842, and disclosed not only the lack of uniformity in federal court practice, but the necessity for some uniform rule applicable to federal courts wherever sitting.

The Act of 1853, and its construction by this Court.

The Act of 1853 (28 U. S. C. A. sec. 571, 572) was intended to meet this demand for uniformity. It provided that certain specified fees "and no other" shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the courts of the United States, and that on a final hearing in equity or admiralty, a docket fee of twenty dollars shall be taxed. It is as follows:

> Sec. 571. The following fees and no other shall be taxed and allowed to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the courts of the United States, and to district attorneys, except in cases otherwise expressly provided by law. But nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit attorneys, solicitors, and proctors from charging to and receiving from their clients, other than the Government, such reasonable compensation for their services, in addition to the taxable costs, as may be in accordance with general usage in their respective States, or may be agreed upon between the parties.
>
> Sec. 572. On a trial before a jury, in civil or criminal causes or before referees, or on a final hear> ing in equity or admiralty, a docket fee of $20: Provided, That in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, where the libelant recovers less than $50, the docket fee of his proctor shall be but $10.

This statute is in itself conclusive evidence of the complete repudiation of the English practice, if it ever existed in this country. Our courts thereafter recognized it as once and for all settling the question of the taxation of costs, and limiting the taxation of attorneys' fees in the stipulated manner.

The effect of the statute was before this Court in 1869, in The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377. The court there reviewed not only the prior legislation, referred to above, but the practice which had prevailed prior to the Act of 1853, pointing out the lack of uniformity. It held, in effect, that the Act was intended to standardize the practice in federal courts; that while attorneys might charge their clients reasonably for their services, nothing could be taxed as costs against the opposite party, as an incident to the judgment, except the costs and fees prescribed and enumerated. It also held that The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362, and Canter v. Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307, which were cited in the brief of the appellees, were inapplicable because decided before the Act of 1853. The Court said (p. 392):

> Fees and costs, allowed to the officers therein named, are now regulated by the Act of the 26th of February, 1853, which provides, in its 1st section, that in lieu of the compensation now allowed by law to attorneys, solicitors, proctors, district attorneys, clerks, marshals, witnesses, jurors, commissioners and printers, the following and no other compensation shall be allowed.
>
> Attorneys, solicitors and proctors may charge their clients reasonably for their services, in addition to the taxable costs, but nothing can be taxed as cost against the opposite party, as an incident to the judgment, for their services, except the cost and fees therein described and enumerated. 10 Stat. at L. 161. They may tax a docket fee of $20 on a final hearing in admiralty, if the libelant recovers $50, but if he recovers less than $50, the docket fee of the proctor shall be but $10. The Canton, 21 Law, Rep. 473; The Liverpool Packet, 2 Sprague 37; The Connestoga, 2 Wall. Jr. 116.

Reference is made to two cases where counsel fees were allowed, but it is a sufficient answer to those cases to say, that they were decided before the Act of Congress under consideration was passed. They do not, therefore, furnish the rule of decision in the case before us.

This decision would seem definitely to settle any question of the taxation of attorneys' fees as costs in excess of the amounts named in the statute. It is difficult to imagine the English doctrine as surviving after this decision.

But if there was any lingering doubt upon this subject, it was completely dispelled by the decision of this Court in Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211. This was an action on an injunction bond. The condition of the bond was that the obligor "should pay and satisfy all costs and damages that may accrue to the obligees, or either of them, by reason of said injunction, in case the same shall be denied". The question was squarely presented, therefore, as to whether counsel fees were included in the words "costs and damages". The injunction was in effect for a period of four years, eight months, sixteen days. Doubtless, it presented circumstances of great hardship. Both the master and the lower court allowed counsel fees, paid in securing a dissolution of the injunction, as a part of the costs and damages covered by the bond. This was reversed. The Court, after referring to Arcambel v. Wiseman, supra, and other cases, said (p. 231):

> The point here in question has never been expressly decided by this court, but it is clearly within the reasoning of the case last referred to, and we think is substantially determined by that adjudication. In debt, covenant, and assumpsit, damages are recovered, but counsel fees are never included. So in equity cases, where there is no injunction bond, only the taxable costs are allowed to the complainants. The same rule is applied to the defendant, however unjust the litigation on the other side, and however large the expensa litis to which he may have been subjected. The parties in this respect are upon a footing of equality. There is no fixed standard by which the honorarium can be measured. Some counsel demand much more than others. More counsel may be employed than are necessary. When both client and counsel know that the fees are to be paid by the other party there is danger of abuse. A reference to a master, or an issue to a jury, might be necessary to ascertain the proper amount, and this grafted litigation might possibly be more animated and protracted than that in the original cause. It would be an office of some delicacy on the part of the court to scale down the charges, as might sometimes be necessary.
>
> We think the principle of disallowance rests on a solid foundation, and that the opposite rule is forbidden by the analogies of the law and sound public policy.

This comprehensive ruling should be accepted, we respectfully submit, as completely settling and disposing of the question of the taxation of counsel fees, as costs, in this country. Such costs may not be taxed in equity cases, even where the litigation is unjust, on one side or the other, and however large the expense may be. The reasons are given. The parties stand upon a footing of equality. There is no fixed standard, in this country, by which counsel fees can be determined, as there is in England. Some counsel demand much more than others, and more counsel may be employed than are necessary. There is great danger of abuse if it be known in advance that fees, unregulated by law, are to be paid by the other party. Additional litigation would be necessary to determine the fees to be taxed. Counsel fees do not come within the designation of "costs," nor of "damages." Their disallowance rests on a solid foundation, and the opposite rule is forbidden by sound public policy as well as by the analogies of the law.

This Court, in subsequent cases, has assumed, without further re-examination of the question, that this decision has settled the law in this country. In Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, the action was upon an injunction bond, which, as before, was conditioned to pay to defendant "all costs and damages." It was again insisted that attorneys' fees were properly allowed as an item of cost or damage upon the bond, and again denied. The Court said (p. 511):

> ... it remains only to consider whether the attorneys' fees were properly allowed by the court below as an element of damages on the bond. That they were not is settled.

The Court then refers to Oelrichs v. Williams, supra, and concludes with the statement:

> It follows from what we have stated that there was error committed in allowing the recovery of attorney's fees as an element of damage upon the bond in question.

The question next came before this Court in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530, and was disposed of briefly in the following statement:

> Having thus disposed of the question of jurisdiction, we come to the merits of the case. It suffices to say, for the reasons given in the opinion in Tullock v. Mulvane, before referred to, 184 U. S. 497, that there was error committed by the Kansas City court of appeals in affirming the action of the trial court in allowing, in the judgment by it rendered, attorneys' fees as an element of damage upon the injunction bond contrary to the controlling rule on this subject enunciated by this court, by which the courts of the United States are governed in requiring the execution of such instruments.

The lower court, in its opinion in this case, after referring to some of the cases above cited, among them, Arcambel v. Wiseman, The Baltimore, Oelrichs v. Williams, states that "such refusals (to tax attorneys' fees as costs) were not based upon any lack of power in the court, but because it was not deemed wise policy to allow attorneys' fees to be taxed as costs in ordinary equity cases".

We respectfully submit, however, that it was a lack of "power" to impose attorneys' fees as costs which impelled this Court to decide as it did. This is made entirely plain in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, where the question arose over the imposition of attorneys' fees by a state court in respect of an appeal prosecuted to this Court. The question is there stated by the Court (p. 468):

> First. The question of the power of the court to make the allowance for professional services rendered in this court on the former writ of error.

It will be noted that the Court was here discussing the power to make the allowance, and not the equitable principles which control some allowance which it has the power to make. The Court held against the existence of the power, as follows:

> There can be no doubt that, tested by the general principles of law controlling in this court, by the statutes of the United States relating to the subject, or the rules of this court concerning the same, the award for the attorneys' fees in question was absolutely unwarranted. We do not stop to review and expound the settled line of authority demonstrating this result because it would be wholly superfluous to do so, as the principles have been so long the settled rule of conduct in this court, and are so elementary as to require not even a reference to the cases. Some of the cases, nevertheless, we cite: Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306; Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363, 372; Oelrichs v. Spain (Oelrichs v. Williams), 15 Wall. 211, 230, 231; Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497, 511 et seq.

It will be noted that the cases cited above are the same cases to which we have referred heretofore. They are referred to in the opinion of this Court as establishing a settled line of authority demonstrating the lack of power to tax counsel fees as costs. The prior interpretation of the Act of 1853 is reaffirmed.

The right and duty of the chancellor in proper cases to make "allowances" for expenses and counsel fees within the rule of Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, is well recognized, and is not at all in conflict with the views above expressed with respect to the taxation of attorneys' fees and other expenses, as costs, in cases like the one under consideration. It is a general principle that the trust estate must bear the expenses of its administration. It is also a general principle that where one of many parties having a common interest in the trust fund, at his own expense takes proper proceedings to save it from destruction and to restore it to the purposes of the trust, he is entitled to reimbursement, either out of the fund itself or by a proportionate contribution from those who accept the benefit of his efforts. This rule, however, has, we contend, no application whatsoever to the present case. Its inapplicability to the facts in this record is discussed under subsequent headings.

Decisions of circuit courts of appeal.

The federal courts of appeals have, without exception, followed the statute of 1853, and the rule established by this Court in the foregoing cases, that, in the absence of authorizing statute, attorneys' fees in excess of $20 may not be taxed as costs as between solicitor and client, to be paid by one of the parties to the suit. The decision of the lower court is in conflict with the decisions of circuit courts of appeal of other circuits, now to be referred to.

In McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66, the court of appeals of the seventh circuit held that attorneys' fees could not be taxed as costs in a partnership accounting case. In its opinion the court said, in reference to the allowable items of expense:

> Such allowances were of statutory origin. Our statute of 1853 . . . provides what shall, as costs, "be included in and form a portion of a judgment or decree against the losing party." . . . In our opinion the discretion of a court of equity does not authorize it to require one party . . . to pay to the other, under the name of costs, items paid from the fund for > services and expenses in administering a suit properly in court, nor any other items not within a fee bill act.

Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556, was a suit by a legatee to enforce his claim against an executor and reach real estate fraudulently conveyed by her. The district court added to the decree an allowance of $1,000 solicitor's fees. The court of appeals for the seventh circuit said:

> No law of Illinois warranted the increase of Grace Fraser's indebtedness by such an addition. . . . Nor can equity in a suit upon a creditor's bill or a vendor's lien bill enlarge the defendant's debt in that way.

Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246, was a fraud case in which the successful party sought to have his attorneys' fees taxed against the losing party. The court of appeals for the fourth circuit said:

> The costs that can be taxed against the losing party . . . are little more than nominal, and the winner is therefore out of pocket for the fees of his counsel. If this be unjust to the one found to be in the right, it is because the law gives him only the amount of his recovery and the scanty sum allowed as taxable costs.

In Motion Picture Patents Company v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63, the district court allowed an attorney's fee of $150.00 in each of two cases because of the vexatious conduct of plaintiff's counsel in the litigation. The court of appeals for the second circuit held that an attorney might be compelled to pay certain costs for vexatious conduct by virtue of Section 982 of the statutes, but that the costs could not be taxed against the client.

In Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 Fed. (2d) 460, attorneys' fees were taxed as costs in a copyright case. The court of appeals for the second circuit held that while such fees were taxable under the copyright law:

> The general rule, which is subject to some exceptions, of course, is that each party to a litigation must pay his own counsel fees, no matter how unjust the litigation may have been, or how great may have been the expensa litis (citing the Arcambel and Oelrichs cases).

We respectfully contend that the decision of the lower court is contrary to the statute, contrary to the decisions of this Court, and contrary to the decisions of federal courts of appeal in other circuits.

Counsel fees incurred after the decree of June, 1910.

We earnestly contend that, for the reasons above stated, the law does not authorize or permit the taxation against petitioner of any of the attorneys' fees or other expenses of the Trust Company during the entire period of this litigation. For the purpose, however, of bringing into impressive relief what we regard as one of the glaring errors of the lower court, we desire, for the moment, to lay to one side all other controverted matters, and to direct the attention of the Court to the proceedings in this case following the final decree of June, 1910—the period during which a considerable portion of the Trust Company's liability for attorneys' fees were incurred. The grave injustice of imposing these expenses upon petitioner appears to us to be so plain and obvious that a brief reference to the uncontradicted facts should suffice.

The decree of the lower court, in June, 1910, was against the Trust Company, and, accordingly, it appealed to the circuit court of appeals. As has been heretofore pointed out, the issue—the personal liability of petitioner for the debt of the Belt Company—was an exceedingly difficult one, and involved in much doubt and uncertainty. The Boyd Case (228 U. S. 482, April, 1913) had not then been decided. Finite minds could not tell what the decision in our case would be. The circuit court of appeals recognized the serious and difficult nature of the controversy when it permitted two arguments and handed down two elaborate opinions. This Court held, May 11, 1914, that the nature of the case was such as to warrant the grant of its writ of certiorari, in case an appeal did not lie. The decree of the circuit court of appeals was affirmed by this Court; the Chief Justice and one Associate Justice dissenting.

Upon what conceivable principle can petitioner be condemned to pay the Trust Company's attorneys' fees and other expenses, involved in its appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and involved in petitioner's appeal to this Court, to determine this liability issue, which the Trust Company itself injected into the litigation in 1905, in its answer to the intervening petition of petitioner? What warning was there in the books of text writers or in the decisions of the courts, saying to petitioner, in effect: "If you resist the Trust Company's appeal to the circuit court of appeals, or if you appeal from that court to the Supreme Court, you do so at your peril of being mulcted for the attorneys' fees and other expenses of the Trust Company, in the event that you are unsuccessful"?

What becomes of the guaranty, declaratory of the public policy in the jurisdiction where the litigation was carried on, that "The courts of justice shall be open to every person, and certain remedy afforded for every injury to person, property or character, and that right and justice should be administered without sale, denial or delay" (Const. Mo., Art. II, Sec. 10).

The right of free access to the courts is fundamental in our theory of Government. In Straus v. Victor Talking Mach. Co., 297 Fed. 791, 798 (circuit court of appeals, second circuit), it is said: "Free access to the courts must neither be denied nor penalized."

In Missouri Pacific R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, the right of a state to impose attorneys' fees upon the losing party in an appeal to this Court was denied on the ground that if that were permitted, "the right to freely seek access to the Supreme Court of the United States would cease to exist."

In Wetmore v. Mellinger, 64 Iowa, 741, it is said:

> The courts are open and free to all who have grievances and seek remedies therefor, and there should be no restraint upon a suitor, through fear of liability resulting from failure in his action, which would keep him from the courts.

The imposition of the Trust Company's expenses incurred following the final decree of June, 1910, can only be justified upon the assumption that petitioner, instead of resisting the Trust Company's appeal to the circuit court of appeals, should have filed a confession of error, and permitted a perfunctory reversal of the decree; and, further, upon the assumption that petitioner should have refrained from prosecuting an appeal from the circuit court of appeals to this Court, although this Court stood ready to issue its writ of certiorari if the appeal did not lie. Such an assumption passes the limits of reason. Petitioner would have betrayed its stockholders if it had taken any other course than the one it pursued. Upon what theory should it now be penalized?

III.

The fact that complainant sought unsuccessfully to charge the Trust Company with the duties and obligations of a trustee, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

The complaints charged that the Trust Company at all times dominated and controlled the Belt Company and the other corporations officered by it, and that by reason of such domination and control, the Trust Company assumed towards them the position and obligations of a trustee. In the Cambria bill, it is alleged that the Trust Company did "assume the position of trustee and agent in managing and disposing of the bonds, stocks, funds, and other assets of said railroad companies, and auxiliary companies, in trust and for the use and benefit of the parties who might become concerned or interested therein; . . . including particularly creditors thereof and your orator" (Rec. II, 6). The Trust Company in its answer to the Cambria bill denied, as above stated, that it assumed the position or the obligations of a trustee (Rec. II, 42).

The issue was thus made by the pleadings. On the one hand, it was alleged that the Trust Company has assumed the position and relation of a constructive trustee, and, on the other hand, this was emphatically denied. The master found that the Trust Company did not thus assume the position and obligation of a trustee, and his finding was approved by the district court.

In these circumstances, the court of appeals held, erroneously, we contend, that the Trust Company was entitled to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, or that an allowance should be made in its favor by analogy to the law giving trustees their disbursements in the execution of their trusts.

The law is plain, we respectfully submit, that the rule imposing attorneys' fees as costs in favor of a trustee has no application. The reason is that there is no trustee, no cestui que trust, and no fund that is being handled or administered. The parties therefore occupy the position of ordinary litigants.

The applicable rule was thus stated in Perry on Trusts, 6th Ed., 1911, sec. 896:

> But where plaintiffs bring a bill against defendants for the purpose of creating a trust fund—as if they bring a bill to convert defendants into trustees under a constructive trust, or to compel the defendants to hold certain property in their hands for plaintiffs—the defendants can have costs only as between party and party, if the plaintiffs fail; for the suit in such case turns out to be between strangers.

In Lewin on Law of Trusts, 12th Ed., p. 1267, it is said:

> But if plaintiffs take proceedings for the purpose of creating a fund, of which the defendants would be trustees for the plaintiffs, if the plaintiffs succeeded, but the plaintiffs fail, the defendants are entitled as against the plaintiffs to costs only as between party and party.

In Tiffany & Bullard on Trusts and Trustees, p. 714, it is said:

> As these costs taxed between solicitor and client are termed trustee's costs, it follows that they will not be taxed in a case where that relation or character does not exist.

It is likewise the rule that where a trustee disclaims his trust, he is entitled only to his costs as between party and party. (Godefroi's Law of Trusts, Third Ed. (London, 1907), p. 28; Daniell's Chancery Practice, Ed. 7 (1901), Vol. 1, p. 1011; Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swanston's Reports (1818), 201; Bulkeley v. The Earl of Eglington, 1 Jur. (1885) 994; Norway v. Norway, 2 Mylne & Keen's Rep. (1834), 278; Heap v. Jones, 5 W. R. (1856), 106; Bray v. West, 9 Simons Rep., 429.)

The same considerations apply to so much of the intervening petition of petitioner as complains of the Trust Company's action with respect to the Union Terminal bonds. A complete answer to the Trust Company's claim for indemnity is found in the fact that the intervenor sought to impose upon the Trust Company the duties and obligations of a trustee with respect to the use of the Union Terminal bonds and their proceeds. It invoked the provisions of the mortgage itself, and the implications thought to arise from the terms of the mortgage, to establish this relationship, and so to make the Trust Company a trustee with respect thereto.

The Trust Company, although a trustee in the mortgage of the Union Company, in its answer denied the existence of any such trust relations, either by law or the express terms of the mortgage, and specifically denied that any duty rested upon it to see that, as said bonds were sold, the proceeds were used in the construction, completion and equipment of the railroad. This defense was sustained by the master (Rec. II, 876).

We have, therefore, on the part of the intervenor, an assertion of a trust relation with respect to the disposition of the bonds and their proceeds, and, on the part of the Trust Company, a denial that any such trust relationship existed. The master found this issue in favor of the Trust Company, and thereby it was established that no such trust relation existed, or ever had existed.

In other words, the intervenor sought to hold the Trust Company to the duties and obligations of a trustee, in respect of the disposition of the bonds, or their proceeds, and failed to establish its claim in that behalf. The trustee relationship not being established, the authorities, referred to above, hold that there is no ground for a claim of indemnity.

IV.

The litigation conducted by the Trust Company for its own benefit with respect to the collateral security, does not entitle it to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

The Trust Company, on March 31, 1899, the day before the receivership of the Gulf Company, took from the Belt Company, or received from it, the collateral security in question, consisting of stocks, etc.—everything, in fact, which the Belt Company had at the time, which could be used as collateral. All of this, or its proceeds, the Trust Company proceeded to hold as security for the debt which it alleged the Belt Company owed to it. When this litigation came on, on September 6, 1900, receivers were appointed of all the assets of the Belt Company (Rec. II, 29), of every kind and nature. Later a receiver was appointed for the Northern Townsite Company (Rec. II, 914), whose stock was a part of the collateral in question; and a receiver was also appointed for the Central Improvement Company (Rec. II, 162, 163), whose stock was also a part of the same collateral. A receiver was also appointed for the Elevator Company (Rec. II, 162).

The litigation between the Cambria Company, the Belt Company and its receivers, on the one hand, and the Trust Company, on the other, concerned solely the question of debt or no debt as between the Belt Company and the Trust Company. As this should be determined, the collateral or its proceeds automatically would remain with the Trust Company or return to the Belt Company or its creditors, the Cambria Company.

It cannot be contended that the Trust Company, in litigating the issue of debt or no debt, was acting in the interest of the Belt Company, which was the pledgor of the collateral. It was acting adversely to the Belt Company, as well as to petitioner, which was the owner of the stock of the Belt Company. It was acting solely in its own interest, to protect its own individual claim.

Nor was it seeking to protect the collateral security itself, for it needed no protection. It simply remained throughout the litigation as the pawn or pledge to be awarded to the successful party when the litigation should end. The only dealing by the court with the collateral during the entire litigation was the sale by the Trust Company, under orders of the court, of certain Northern Connecting bonds and coupons, for which $40,001.25 was realized and held by the Trust Company in special deposit until the final decree, in which it was ordered to be applied upon the Trust Company's debt (Rec. II, 907). That part of the collateral which possessed value, consisting of the property of the Central Improvement Company and, in lesser degree, of the Northern Townsite Company, was being administered by the receivers of those properties, under the direction of the court (Rec. II, 914).

The Trust Company performed no services whatsoever for the benefit of the pledgor, or for the benefit of the collateral itself. It was performing no duties as pledgee or trustee. Its services were rendered, and its efforts expended, in protecting its own interest. In these circumstances, there is, we respectfully submit, no rule of law which permits the Trust Company, as trustee or pledgee, to impose its disbursements for counsel fees upon its adversary.

It is, of course, the ordinary rule that a pledgee has a lien on the property for any expenses, including attorneys' fees reasonably incurred by him in keeping and caring for the property pledged, protecting it against liens, taxes, assessments, etc. But our contention is that it has no application whatsoever to the facts in this case.

When we examine the reason of the rule which allows a pledgee attorneys' fees for the protection of pledged property, it becomes clear that the Trust Company does not come within it. The foundation of the rule is that the pledgee, after a sale of the pledged property, must credit the pledgor with the net amount realized by him from the proceeds. If he has been put to expense in order to protect the property pledged, for illustration, if he has been compelled to pay an incumbrance to prevent a foreclosure, or forced to defend the pledgor's title for the benefit of the pledgor, the gross proceeds must be reduced to the extent of the expense incurred in the doing of one or all these things, because done on behalf of the pledgor and for his benefit. The pledgee has the property in his possession; the pledgor is not in position to defend it against adverse claims or to protect it generally. The pledgee, therefore, is authorized, in law, to act for the benefit of the pledgor, as his quasi-agent, in doing what the pledgor would have done had he been in possession of his property and in position to defend it.

Where, as here, suits are undertaken by the pledgee which are of no benefit to the pledgor, the reason for the rule ceases, and the rule itself has no application.

The rule and the reason for it are recognized and set forth in Work v. Tibbits, 87 Hun 352, 34 N. Y. Supp. 308.

Other decisions to the same effect are:

Wolf v. Am. Trust & Savings Bank, 214 Fed. 761 (7th Circ.);

Smith v. Equitable Trust Company, 215 Pa. 413, 62 Atl. 591;

Willard v. White, 56 Hun 581, 10 N. Y. Supp. 170.

V.

It is contrary to both reason and authority to base an allowance of counsel fees in this case upon the assumption that the Trust Company uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid.

The lower court sought to justify the imposition of costs as between solicitor and client upon the assumption that "the Trust Company in the course of litigation uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid." This, we contend, is clearly erroneous, and the error is susceptible of plain demonstration.

We insist, in the first place, that no fund was uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court, within the meaning of the rule relied upon; and, furthermore, we insist that the case is governed by established principles which prohibit the allowance of counsel fees in the circumstances shown in this case. Before coming to a discussion of these questions, we call attention to the following considerations:

The decree of the lower court, which this Court affirmed, did not order the distribution of any fund to creditors. It merely awarded a personal judgment against petitioner, for the amount of the Belt Company's debt, with the return of the collateral upon payment of the debt, and with a sale of the collateral upon a failure to pay the debt. It was a personal judgment, which has long since been paid in full, in favor of the Trust Company, and this judgment did not inure to the benefit of any one else.

At no time did the Trust Company assert any claim except its own. There can be no pretense that it was acting for the benefit of any creditor. Its claim that petitioner was liable for the debt of the Belt Company is stated in its answer to the amended intervening petition of petitioner (Rec. II, 311), and is asserted solely in its own behalf. No mention is made of other creditors. It is in the nature of a legal claim, as distinguished from an action in equity. The suits in state courts upon the same cause of action (Rec. II, 502) were actions at law, triable by jury (R. S. Mo. 1919, sec. 1398).

Not only was the property of the Belt Company not a trust fund, in any substantial sense, but it was not in the possession of any court at the time the Trust Company asserted its claim in 1905, nor has it been in the possession of any court since that time. The property of the Belt Company, as appears from the Trust Company's answer (Rec. II, 295) was sold in November, 1901, at foreclosure sale, and was purchased by petitioner, which ever since that time has had exclusive possession thereof. Manifestly, the stock of petitioner, which was issued in exchange for the stock of the Belt Company in the reorganization (if that be regarded as a "fund"), has never been in the possession of any court.

The lower court conceives that its decision with respect to the discovery and administration of a fund is supported by Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, and decisions of that character. Those cases hold, in general, that where one litigant, at his own expense, has either created, preserved or protected a fund, and others were entitled to claim, and did claim, the results of his labors, it was not fair that the persons who have taken the risk and cost and expense of the litigation should bear all the costs, but those who share in the fruits should bear their pro rata share of the expense. The rule goes no further than where meritorious results have actually been achieved, those who, by inaction, seek to await the result and escape all expense if the case be lost, but if successful, to share the actual benefits by receiving their portion of this success, should not be allowed to do so without contributing their share of the expense (Buell Case, 201 Fed. 762, 768).

The lower court's ruling is in direct conflict with the applicable authorities.

The total inapplicability of this rule to the case at bar is manifest, for several reasons, which we now point out:

(a) In this case, the court did not take charge of, administer, preserve or distribute any fund. It awarded a money judgment, in favor of the Trust Company and against petitioner, which has long since been paid in full. The rule of the Greenough case, which permits the making of an allowance to counsel, does not apply. This, because the result of the litigation was "a general personal judgment, without segregating a fund in kind, and bringing its corpus into a court of equity for distribution."

This rule is stated clearly and emphatically by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Johnson v. United Rys. Co., 247 Mo. 326, 350, 152 S. W. 362, the jurisdiction where this litigation was carried on. There, an action in equity was brought in behalf of complainant and other creditors to subject to the payment of their debts certain property which the debtor had transferred in fraud of creditors. There was a money judgment for complainant, and his motion for an allowance of attorney's fees was denied. The court held that the rule of the Greenough case had no application, saying:

> With cases of that ilk eliminated, there is left to consider a doctrine of equity, viz., that a trust fund of right should bear the expenses of its own administration. According to that rule, it has been held that where a transaction has been ripped up or a conveyance set aside for fraud and an estate has been uncovered and recovered, which, in equity, belongs to creditors, and that estate is held in the hollow of the chancellor's hand to be administered and distributed, attorney's fees may be allowed as part of the trust administration. White v. University Land Company, 49 Mo. App. 450; Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, 26 L. Ed. 1157; Central Railroad, etc. v. Pettus et al., 113 U. S. 116, 28 L. Ed. 915; Woodward v. Mastin, 106 Mo. loc. cit. 364, 365, 17 S. W. 308. Agreeably thereto are an array of other cases industriously collated in Mr. Gillian's brief pro se. But it seems to us their doctrine does not apply here. This because the power of a court of equity is flexible enough to measure out relief in cases of this kind by a gen> eral personal judgment without segregating a fund in kind, and bringing its corpus into a court of equity for administration. Accordingly, here the judgment was a general money judgment against Railways Company. It stopped short at that point. It administered no fund. It took this form apparently by consent of the parties; at least, no one took exception to that feature. In such fix, the case falls within the doctrine of the general rule, viz., that in Missouri one litigant cannot be compelled to pay the attorneys' fees of another, either in equity or at law. Pickel v. Pickel, 147 S. W. 1059, not yet officially reported. It appears that Johnson contracted that Mr. Gilliam on top of a named percentage might have all attorney's fees the court allowed. That friendly turn added no virtue to movent's position. In that aspect it dealt with a bird (not in hand, but) in bush. We hold the motion well ruled.

This rule applies squarely to the case under consideration. Here, there was a general money judgment against petitioner. The decree stopped short at that point. It administered no fund. The case therefore falls within the doctrine of the general rule, in federal courts as well as in the state courts of Missouri, that one litigant cannot be compelled to pay the attorney's fees of another, either in equity or at law.

(b) Even where a creditor sues in equity for the benefit of himself and all intervening creditors, and obtains a decree for complainant and such creditors, and the complainant and such creditors receive the full amount of their debts, with interest and taxable costs, the complainant is not entitled to an allowance for solicitor's fees out of the surplus otherwise payable to the debtor.

In this case, the only creditor was the Trust Company. It did not sue for the benefit of other creditors who might come in and assert their claims. The Trust Company's debt became merged in a personal judgment, and that judgment, with interest, has been paid, and the taxable costs have been paid. Upon what theory of law is the Trust Company entitled to impose the burden of its counsel fees upon the surplus of the trust fund (assuming there was a trust fund), belonging to petitioner?

The authorities deny the validity of a claim of this nature. One such authority is Huff v. Bidwell, from the fifth circuit, 195 Fed. 430, where it is held:

> Where a judgment lien creditor sues in equity for the benefit of himself and all intervening creditors, and obtains decree for complainant and such creditors, and the defendant's property condemned and sold to satisfy debts exceeds the amount of debts and interest and costs, the complainant is not entitled to an allowance for his solicitor's fees out of the surplus otherwise payable to the debtor after full payment of all debts and costs.

The court said (p. 431):

> In creditors' suits, the underlying principle upon which those who do not appear as plaintiffs are charged with a proportionate part of the solicitors' fees is that the plaintiffs represented, and were suing for, the others; and this agency is generally shown by the appearance of the other creditors in court propounding their claims and claiming to share in the result of the suit. Lamar v. Hall & Wilberly, 129 Fed. 79, 83, 63 C. C. A. 521; Farmers' Loan & Trust Company v. Green, 79 Fed. 222, 24 C. C. A. 506; Hand v. Railroad Company, 21 S. C. 162. But the plaintiff in this case in no sense represented

> Huff, the defendant. The suit was not brought for his benefit. There was no just reason for seizing more of his property than would pay his debts, principal and interest, and the costs of suit. The property having been sold for a sum in excess, the proceeds necessarily came into court; but it was never the purpose of the suit to accomplish more than the collection of the debts and costs. If no creditors had intervened, if the suit had been brought by the plaintiffs to enforce and collect their judgments only, is there any known principle upon which Huff could have been made responsible for the plaintiffs' solicitor's fees? The intervening of the creditors may in such cases oblige them to contribute to the payment of the fee; but such interventions impose no obligation on the defendant who is sued. On principle, it seems to us that this fee cannot be added to Huff's indebtedness.

The sentence which we have italicized has accurate and precise application to this case. Here, no other creditors did intervene. The Trust Company sought to enforce and collect its claim only. Is there, therefore, any known principle upon which petitioner can be made responsible for the Trust Company's solicitors' fees?

In 20 Cyc. 825, the rule is thus stated:

> Upon a conveyance by a debtor being set aside as fraudulent, at the suit of a creditor, and a sale of the property being ordered, the creditor's attorney may be allowed a fee out of the proceeds; but such fee should be paid out of that part applicable to the demands of creditors, and not out of such balance as may come to the debtor after the liquidation of the debts proven and passed.

The foregoing quotation is cited and followed in Pickel v. Pickel, 243 Mo. 641, 665, in a case where, at the suit of a wife, a conveyance by a husband was set aside as fraudulent as to her rights of maintenance.

To the same effect are: Waggener v. Mars, 27 S. C. 97, 2 S. E. 844, 846; Miller v. Kehoe, 107 Cal. 340.

If there had been in this case a fund in the possession of the court for administration and distribution (we insist there was not) the utmost limit of recovery by the Trust Company and other creditors (assuming there were others who intervened, although, in fact, there were not) would be the full amount of their respective claims, with interest, diminished by their proper proportion of any allowance made for counsel fees. The amount distributable to the Trust Company, plus its pro rata share of the allowance of counsel fees, might equal, but could not exceed, the amount of its claim, with interest. In other words, the Trust Company would pay its proportion of counsel fees out of its own distributive share; and the same would be true of other participating creditors.

The result is the same, in principle, where, as here, the Trust Company was the only creditor. The amount awarded it in this case was the full amount of its claim, with interest, and, accordingly, on both principle and authority, the Trust Company should pay its own counsel fees out of the proceeds of its judgment.

Certainly, there is no equity in requiring petitioner to pay out of its share of the trust fund (assuming, as before, that there was one), the expenses of the Trust Company's counsel, who rendered no service whatsoever for petitioner, and whose activities were wholly in conflict with its interest.

(c) Not only was the Trust Company awarded a money judgment, which has been paid, and not only does the Trust Company seek to impose its claim for counsel fees upon the part of the trust fund (if there was one) remaining after the only creditor in the action has been paid in full, but the fact remains that the Trust Company's effort in this litigation was solely made in its own behalf, and in an endeavor to protect its own selfish interest; and the rule applies that in such cases there can be no allowance of counsel fees (Groves v. Sentell, 153 U. S. 465, 486; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 490; Pike v. Cincinnati R. Co., 179 Fed. 97, 103; Riddle v. Hudgins, 58 Fed. 490, 494; Boothe v. Coal Co., 72 Wash. 679; Attorney General v. Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 57; Savage v. Sherman, 87 N. Y. 285).

VI.

The statement in the opinion of the court of appeals that the entire litigation was vexatious, is entirely unwarranted and wholly unjust for the reasons, first, it finds absolutely no support in the record; secondly, it finds no support in the opinion and mandate of this Court (240 U. S. 166); thirdly, the record, as it stands, shows affirmatively the complete good faith of petitioner and the others associated with it during the entire litigation; and, fourthly, petitioner was wrongfully denied the right, when its good faith was challenged, to introduce evidence in its own behalf upon that issue.

It is greatly to be regretted that the court of appeals, in its third and last opinion, has felt impelled to characterize "the whole litigation" as of a "vexatious character." Many facts stand out in striking challenge to this extraordinary statement. They point out conclusively the error into which the court has fallen, due, doubtless, to the length and complicated character of this litigation, with its accumulation of pleadings, issues, testimony, briefs, and collateral matters.

1. Neither the special master, the district court, the court of appeals in its first two opinions, nor this court has held, or even intimated, that the whole litigation, or any part of it, was trivial, insincere or vexatious. (We are not unmindful of what the court of appeals said in its second opinion and will deal with that later under its appropriate heading.) Nowhere in the entire litigation has that issue been made. It was sought to be made in the court of appeals at the reargument in 1913 (210 Fed. 722), but that court declined to entertain it.

2. The opinion of this Court in this case and its mandate (Rec. I, 465), which naturally superseded the opinion and mandate of the court of appeals (First National Bank v. Chicago Trust Co., 207 U. S. 61, 66), contain no intimation that the litigation, or any part of it, was unjustified or unwarranted.

3. The record, as it stands, affirmatively shows the good faith of petitioner and those associated with it on its side of the litigation, and this will be pointed out in due course.

4. The district court, in its first opinion in 1923 (Rec. I, 691, 699), while disclaiming the expression of any opinion of its own upon the good faith of the litigation, erroneously said that the court of appeals had found that the Cambria suit was wholly baseless and unwarranted. This was the first time that any court had ever intimated that the good faith of petitioner or any of those associated on its side of the litigation was questioned by it, and the intimation was entirely erroneous, as we point out later. Thereupon petitioner and the Cambria Company in December, 1923 (Rec. I, 33, 44) sought to file in the lower court a petition "for leave to introduce testimony proving that this litigation was instituted and conducted on the part of each of the complainants in entire good faith"; and this petition was wrongfully denied by the district court on the same day on which it was presented.

This petition was signed by four counsel who are officers of this Court, as well as of both lower courts, and was duly verified by one of them. It set out in detail the history of the institution and conduct of this litigation, from beginning to end, and asked leave to make proof, by oral and documentary evidence, of each and every statement therein contained. This petition appears in the record (Rec. I, 34-44). It is quite likely that this error would have been rectified later by the district court, but for its revised opinion, in 1926 (Rec. II, 704), denying the right to a taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, in view of which the investigation sought by the petition was doubtless regarded as unnecessary.

It is quite unnecessary to argue that if we are correct in any of the foregoing statements, the charge of instituting and continuing vexatious litigation will be promptly disapproved.

We regard the matter as of such importance that we are constrained to ask the indulgence of the Court while we point out, as briefly as possible, some of the features of the case bearing on this question.

There was ample justification for the filing of the Cambria bill and the ancillary bills.

The names of Louis C. Krauthoff and Frank Hagerman are signed to the bill of the Cambria Company, filed in September, 1900, and it is verified by the latter. The name of Thomas R. Morrow is signed as counsel to the ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers, filed in 1901. These three gentlemen, in their lifetime, were accomplished and distinguished members of this Court, as well as of the lower courts, and stood foremost among the leaders of the bar of the State of Missouri. As is well known to some of the members of this Court, they were men of unquestioned integrity, and deserved and received the confidence and respect of both bench and bar. There is a strong presumption, which we feel the court of appeals might very properly have indulged, that lawyers of ability, character and standing, such as these gentlemen were, did not institute this action for purposes of vexation, or, reverting to the standard definition of a "vexatious suit" (Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's Third Edition, Vol. 3, p. 3399), "maliciously and without probable cause." To indulge such a presumption of honesty and upright conduct is but a small tribute to the memory of honorable and distinguished members of the bar. If, at this late day, any court is to impute unworthy motives to them, it should only be after the formality of a hearing, where those who may desire to speak for them may be accorded an opportunity so to do, and after the introduction of testimony so cogent and compelling as to lead to no other conclusion. Fortunately, however, the record itself speaks in their vindication.

The Cambria Company bill, filed in September, 1900, was an ordinary creditor's bill, expressed to be in behalf of the complainant and other creditors, based upon an unsatisfied judgment for $100,000.00 against the Belt Company. Its allegations have been summarized in the preceding statement. It invoked the rule of the Geddes case, 254 U. S. 590, and sought to sift the transactions between the Belt Company and the Trust Company covering a period of some ten years, during which the latter, through interlocking officers and directors, was in a position to control, and, in fact, did control, the former, and was in a position to impose, and did impose, such bargains and transactions as it deemed to be in its interest. The filing of bills of this character is an everyday occurrence. The Cambria Company owed a duty to its stockholders to put forth every reasonable effort to collect its judgment against the Belt Company. The accounting proceeding offered the only available opportunity to achieve this result. We do not stop to argue that the filing of this bill under these circumstances was not a vexatious suit, but, on the contrary, the usual and ordinary procedure, dictated by the most obvious business considerations, for the purpose of collecting a debt judicially established to be due and owing to it.

It is intimated by the court of appeals (210 Fed. 717) that "the Cambria suit was in reality the suit of the Southern Company." There is nothing in the record, we respectfully submit, to support this statement, which we consider most unfair. We desire, if we may do so without impropriety, to refer to the rejected offer of proof in the district court (Rec. I, 36). If the evidence there sought to be introduced had been admitted, we are entitled to assume that the court's error would have been rectified.

The ancillary bill of the Belt Company and its receivers prayed for an accounting between the Belt Company and the Trust Company, in substantially the same manner and form as the bill of the Cambria Company. It was filed pursuant to specific authority of the district court (Rec. I, 29). That court, on being advised of the "past dealings and relations" between the Trust Company and the Belt Company, felt that there should be an accounting between them. The court's authority to file a suit for an accounting was, under the circumstances, equivalent to a direction to do so.

The Trust Company itself apparently felt that an accounting between the companies was inevitable. It knew that if it sued to collect its notes or its open account, it would be met with a demand for an accounting. This is a fair inference from the facts, even without recourse to the affidavit (Rec. II., 1025).

In 1900 the Trust Company filed its answer to the Cambria bill, consenting to an accounting (Rec. II, 48). In November, 1901, it entered into a stipulation (Rec. II, 89), providing that an accounting should be had and expedited, and in its answer to the ancillary bill, the Trust Company offered to account as the court might desire (Rec. II, 155). The special master, in February, 1905, after the Trust Company's account had been presented by it, ruled that there should be an accounting (Rec. I, 14). In his final report he recognized the propriety of an accounting between the parties. He said (Rec. II, 760) that "the relations of the Belt and Trust Companies were exceedingly intimate, and of such character as not only to warrant, but perhaps to exact, the most scrutinizing investigation of any questionable transactions between them, at the instance of an interested party."

The court of appeals in its opinion refers with apparent criticism to the filing of the first amended and supplemental ancillary bill. The fact is, as above stated (Rec. I, 15), that this pleading was filed at the request of the Trust Company, which had taken the position that, having submitted its account to the master, it devolved upon the complainant to surcharge and falsify the account (Rec. II, 1023). The bill was filed to satisfy this demand (Rec. I, 15). The court of appeals also refers, with apparent disapproval, to the filing of the second amended and supplemental ancillary bill. This pleading, as above stated, was filed by stipulation between the parties (Rec. II, 391), providing that the amended pleading and the answer should be filed simultaneously. This was after the taking of testimony was completed, and in order to conform the pleading to the proof (Rec. II, 1023). This is the usual and ordinary practice, and ought not to give rise to adverse criticism.

We have heretofore dealt with the charge of fraud and the allegations concerning the existence of trust or fiduciary relations, to which we beg to refer. We are wholly unable to see the slightest ground for criticism in connection with the filing of the ancillary bill or the amended ancillary bills.

Petitioner was fully justified in filing its intervening petition.

The petitioner's intervening petition was filed by agreement with the Trust Company, embodied in a stipulation (Rec. II, 164-166). Its counsel knew the nature of the claim to be asserted by petitioner, and was, for obvious reasons, anxious to have the petitioner a party to the action. The amended intervening petition was also filed by agreement, expressed by stipulation (Rec. II, 267-269). It will also be noted that the Trust Company expressly consented in the stipulation that the claim against it on account of its disposition of the Union Terminal Company bonds should be litigated in this action; otherwise it is improbable that this claim could have been included in the intervening petition. Petitioner's claim, as above stated, was based upon the fact that it was the purchaser at foreclosure sale of the properties of the several companies, and thereby acquired the equitable title to the collateral held by the Trust Company, or the properties represented thereby. This claim was sustained by the special master and by the district court with respect to lands of Central Improvement Company, which were by far the most important and valuable item in the controversy. We respectfully invite counsel to point out any fact or circumstance indicating, directly or remotely, that this intervention was malicious or without probable cause, or that it constituted a vexatious suit or proceeding.

The evidence fully warranted the demand made for an accounting.

Aside from the order of the district court providing for an accounting, the stipulation consenting to an accounting, the Trust Company's offer to account, and aside from the master's ruling that an accounting should be had, and his further statement that by reason of the relations of the parties, a scrutinizing investigation of any questionable transactions was appropriate, there was, we earnestly and confidently contend, full and complete justification, arising from the plain and uncontroverted facts in the record, for the demand made upon the Trust Company for an accounting. The evidence adduced in the accounting proceeding is not in the record. The master's report, reviewing the pleadings and evidence (Rec. II, 579-888), is too voluminous to be analyzed in the limited space of this brief. We must, therefore, content ourselves with referring to but two of the large number of items involved in the accounting, the De Goeijen item and the Stilwell contract, as representative of the general character of the proceeding. We feel that the Court will find no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that these two items, independently of all other considerations, afforded ample justification for the proceeding. They should, however, be viewed in the light of the evidence tending to prove the Trust Company's control over the Belt Company and its subsidiaries, which may be briefly summarized as follows:

The Trust Company's domination and control of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries.

There was substantial and persuasive testimony tending to prove the domination and control by the Trust Company over the Belt Company and its subsidiaries during the entire period covered by the accounting. This is summarized in the master's report (Rec. II, 593-608). Without going into detail, which space does not permit, it is entirely clear, we respectfully submit that there was ample justification for charging the existence of such domination and control as the complainants did in their bill; in fact, a finding in their favor would have been fully supported by the evidence.

It there appeared that the Trust Company for a number of years had been engaged in the business of organizing companies (593, 594). It had organized some forty corporations (597), including the Belt Company and its subsidiaries, all of which were regarded as Trust Company enterprises (593). A. E. Stilwell was at the head of the Trust Company, and the dominating and controlling figure in all these companies (593, 595, 596, 598, 602, 604). He said these companies were creatures of the Trust Company and were managed by it (596). The officers and directors of the Trust Company were at the same time the officers and directors of the Belt Company and its subsidiary companies (597). When these companies were organized, the Trust Company would prepare the incorporation papers and pay the expense of incorporation, and the Trust Company's officers would decide who would be selected as officers in the newly incorporated company (598). The officers of all these companies were in the same building in Kansas City, Missouri, and were "like one family of officers and clerks (594). They were represented by the same counsel (594). The securities belonging to the Belt Company and its subsidiaries were kept in the custody of the Trust Company, and in the same boxes with the securities of the latter company (595, 599). The same was true of its stock and bond ledgers, transfer books and minute books (602, 605). The officers of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries were accustomed to take their orders from Stilwell or his confidential clerk, Cone, with regard to financial transactions (595, 604, 602, 605). Stilwell, as the president of the Trust Company, was the moving spirit (598). He would be asked which of the subsidiary companies he preferred should owe the Trust Company with respect to some particular transaction, and he would decide accordingly. Discharge from the service would be the penalty for disobedience (595). Stilwell always looked after the interests of the Trust Company first, before that of the railroad or that of any of the other companies (607).

When a meeting of Belt stockholders came on, the Trust Company would secure proxies from the non-resident shareholders so as to have a majority present at the meetings, and these proxies would usually run to Stilwell, and he, as such proxy, would vote the stock at these meetings.

Stilwell instructed his secretary, Cone, to keep writing to stockholders until he had a majority. The statements which were presented at these meetings were balance sheets, showing assets, liabilities, earnings and expenses, and the net result in surplus, but in those statements there would be no specifications showing the amount in detail, the amount of commissions or interest, or of other charges by the Trust Company; and in the statements sent out to financial publications or to stockholders these matters would not appear in detail in any of those statements (603, 604). Stilwell was a heavy stockholder in the Trust Company, as were his associates, Martin and Taylor, and they retained their holdings largely as permanent investments. They also owned stock from time to time in the Belt Company and other railroad companies promoted by the Trust Company, but these securities would be sold from time to time (600, 601).

The Belt Company never actively opposed any policy that was announced or established by the Trust Company. The Trust Company's officers would instruct as to what minutes should be placed on the minute books of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries (604). This was the case on one occasion in July, 1899, when the Trust Company's officers gave instructions that certain minutes should be placed on the minute books of the Belt Company, whereby a large number of shares of stock in various companies were turned over to the Trust Company as collateral security to the Trust Company's claim against the Belt Company (604). The vice-president of the Belt Company objected, in July, 1899, to turning over to the Trust Company a large amount of stocks and bonds of the Belt Company's subsidiaries, but he was overruled by the Trust Company's officers (605).

Whether the foregoing evidence, and much in addition which might be referred to, actually established the domination of the Trust Company over the Belt Company and its subsidiaries, as we think it did, is not important now. It is referred to for the purpose of showing that there was ample proof in the record that it was quite within the power of the Trust Company to control the other companies as it wished. We now proceed to point out that there was ample evidence tending to prove that such power was actually exercised by the Trust Company to the financial detriment of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries.

The DeGoeijen item.

One of the items in the Trust Company's account, and challenged in the accounting proceeding, is referred to in the evidence as the De Goeijen item of $89,333.33 (Rec. II, 682 et seq.). This was approximately 25 per cent. of the entire indebtedness claimed by the Trust Company, which amounted, at that time, to about $360,000.00 (Rec. II, 668). It appeared without contradiction that this item had been for a long time prior to March 31, 1899 (the day preceding the receivership of the Gulf Company) carried on the books of the Trust Company as an indebtedness of Mr. De Goeijen (whose solvency was then doubtful), and on that day (Rec. II, 688) it was arbitrarily, and without consideration, charged to the Belt Company, thus increasing its apparent indebtedness to the Trust Company in that amount. It was believed by the complainants at the time of the institution of this litigation, and there was obvious justification for the belief, that the Trust Company, on the eve of the receivership of the Gulf Company, had merely dumped this uncollectible debt back on the Belt Company; and accordingly, in the accounting suit, this item of indebtedness was challenged.

Not only did the complainants feel justified in challenging this item, and in asking that it be eliminated from the account, but the Trust Company itself and its counsel deliberately and after full investigation reached the conclusion that the complainants were fully justified in their contention, and that the Trust Company had no right to charge this account back on the Belt Company. This is a matter of record, about which there can be no question or controversy. Mr. Mecartney became chief counsel for the Trust Company in 1904, and, in a written report upon this litigation made to the directors of that company, dated December 1, 1904 (Rec. I, 540), after stating the facts with respect to the De Goeijen item of $89,333.33, he said that the Belt Company should be credited with this amount. His language was: "This item must be allowed." This was the deliberate opinion of the chief counsel for the Trust Company four years after the institution of the action. Twenty-five per cent. of complainants' claim was, in his opinion, not even debatable; it was not to be litigated; it was to be conceded and allowed. Other counsel for the Trust Company (Rec. I, 512) had been of the same opinion.

We have, then, a claim in the accounting suit amounting to $89,333.33 which complainants' counsel felt was a just and meritorious claim. The Trust Company's counsel also felt that it was a just and meritorious claim, and so stated in writing to his principal. In the face of this fact, how can the court of appeals say that the whole litigation was vexatious? Where a complainant asserts, and the defendant concedes, that complainants' claim to the extent of 25 per cent. is just and meritorious, is it not a strange and unusual proceeding to characterize the action as a vexa-tious suit, involving, as vexatious suits do, "malice and want of probable cause"? Is it malicious to sue a defendant for what it admits to be due? Is there not probable cause for a demand when defendant concedes it to be just?

True, the De Goeijen item was finally disallowed by the master (Rec. II, 692). It is interesting to follow the process by which this extraordinary result was brought about. The explanation is really very simple (Rec. I, 401). (This is from the testimony of Mr. Mecartney, at the time chief counsel for the Trust Company, given in his suit for fees against the Trust Company. His evidence was at first excluded by the master, but was afterwards admitted) (Rec. I, 678, 679). Mr. Frank B. Wilcox had formerly been auditor for the Trust Company. He was called by the complainants to testify in 1905. He was on the witness stand testifying for them when the Trust Company approached him to induce him to testify in its behalf, and, in particular, to give some explanation of the De Goeijen item which would relieve the Trust Company from the necessity of recrediting the amount to the Belt Company.

Mr. Wilcox told the junior counsel for the Trust Company (Rec. I, 401) that he was willing to give testimony which would completely overcome the complainants' claim with respect to this item, but he demanded compensation for his services. His terms were one-half of one per cent. of the amount to be saved the Trust Company, or a total of $446.66. This proposition was communicated by telephone to the chief counsel for the Trust Company, in or near Chicago, one Sunday morning. The latter replied over the telephone that he thought it would not look well to make a contract with a witness to testify on an exact percentage basis, but he directed his junior counsel to close the deal with Mr. Wilcox if the latter would accept $450.00 instead of $446.46. Naturally, Mr. Wilcox accepted, since he was to be paid $3.34 more than he had asked.

Mr. Wilcox afterwards testified in behalf of the Trust Company, in fulfillment of his percentage contract (augmented by a small bonus for the sake of appearances), to a secret understanding, not evidenced in any record, paper, document or memorandum (Rec. 11, 692), to the effect that while the Trust Company had in fact assumed and agreed to pay off the $89,333.33, this assumption was conditioned upon the payment being made to the Trust Company by Mr. De Goeijen as and when the latter should remit the money for that purpose. There was no testimony to the contrary, and the master accepted this explanation.

Whether the De Goeijen item was rightly disallowed is not, of course, the question here. The important fact is that the complainants in good faith believed that it should be allowed; and this good faith is made clear and unimpeachable by the fact that the Trust Company, no doubt with the natural reluctance to be expected under the circumstances, was compelled formally to concede and admit that the complainants' claim was well founded. This item, it will be remembered, represented 25 per cent. of the entire claim asserted by the complainants. In itself, it would fully justify the accounting proceeding. How can complainants' action challenging this item be characterized as vexatious?

The Stilwell contract.

In June, 1889, Stilwell, who was vice-president, general manager and member of the executive committee of the Trust Company, made a contract with the Suburban Company, the predecessor of the Belt Company, which, for convenience, we will refer to as the Belt Company, by the terms of which he agreed to organize a company to construct a double track railroad for the Belt Company for a distance of some four and one-half miles in Kansas City, Missouri, including right of way, depots, etc. (Rec. II, 654). The contract price was to be $450,000.00 par value of bonds of the Belt Company and $900,000.00 par value of stock; both stock and bonds to be delivered to the Trust Company in escrow and finally delivered upon completion of the contract (Rec. II, 655). The contract itself was assigned to the Trust Company, which thereupon organized The Kansas City Construction Company, with a capital of $300,000.00, to do the work of construction (Rec. II, 657). The Construction Company entered upon its contract and, in May, 1890, had complied therewith in part only (Rec. II, 659), but had expended on construction the sum of $292,000.00, which was all the money that it had (Rec. II, 656, 662). Much yet remained to be done in acquiring right of way for tracks, lands for sidings and yard purposes, and certain depot work (Rec. II, 662).

As the Construction Company had no further funds, something had to be done. The Trust Company was in complete control of the entire situation and could do anything that it pleased. All the officers of the Construction Company were stockholders and directors of the Trust Company; and of the six directors of the Belt Company, five of them were either directors or officers, or both, of the Trust Company, and all were directors and stockholders of the Construction Company (Rec. II, 660).

Ordinary business integrity, as well as the interest of the Belt Company and its stockholders, demanded that the Construction Company comply with its construction contract. Obviously, the Construction Company was not entitled to the $450,000.00 of bonds and $900,000.00 of stock until this should be done. But the Trust Company found a way to get the full consideration for the complete performance of the contract, while leaving the contract itself unperformed. The Belt Company and the Construction Company, pursuant to authority granted at board meetings where the officers of the Trust Company were in complete control (Rec. II, 661), entered into a solemn contract whereby the Belt Company accepted the uncompleted railroad as a full compliance with the contract, and released the Construction Company from any further liability thereunder, and whereby the Trust Company was called upon to release to the Construction Company the $450,000.00 of bonds and $900,000.00 of stock deposited in escrow. The Construction Company willingly accepted this welcome relief from its financial difficulties, received the bonds and stock as specified in the contract, and distributed them to its stockholders, who, presumably, were officers, directors and stockholders of the Trust Company, since the master states that "the names of the incorporators and of the board of directors were largely persons interested in the Trust Company" (Rec. II, 657). At the time of this transaction, the stock of the Belt Company, amounting in the aggregate to 10,000 shares, was held as follows: Trust Company, 2,446; Trust Company, trustee for C. E. Grannis, 554; Trust Company, trustee, 4,000; E. L. Martin, trustee, 1,000; and one share each standing in the names of five directors (Rec. II, 661). It does not appear who the beneficial owners of the stock were, outside of 2,446 shares standing in the name of the Trust Company.

It necessarily followed that the cost of completing the railroad, which the Construction Company should have borne under its contract, had to be paid by the Belt Company. This ran into large figures, as set forth in Rec. II, 220-223, and amounted, in the aggregate, to a greater sum than the Trust Company's claim against the Belt Company.

In the ancillary bills it was claimed that this additional cost was foisted upon the Belt Company by the Trust Company through its domination over both the Belt Company and the Construction Company. The Trust Company, while not seriously controverting the facts, pleaded laches and the statute of limitations. The master, after having found against the theory of domination and control, sustained the plea.

These facts, which we have recited from the master's report, evidence, we contend, a ruthless exploitation of the resources of the Belt Company. No one can for a moment suppose that such a program of spoliation could have been put through without the Trust Company's corporate ascendancy over the other two companies. We are not now arguing that the master should have decided differently than he did, although that argument might well be forcefully made; but we do vigorously contend that the Belt Company and its receivers would have been unfaithful to the interests they represented if they had failed to challenge a transaction of this nature.

Will anyone for a moment contend that an action brought to compel restitution under these circumstances was trivial, insincere or vexatious? We feel certain that the court of appeals could not have understood the situation as it actually existed, and as it is disclosed in this voluminous record. Had it done so, it is inconceivable that it would have felt called upon to characterize the litigation as it did.

The litigation which occurred after the final decree of June, 1910.

The only party that appealed from this decree was the Trust Company; and substantially the only issue raised by it on its appeal, and subsequently by us on our appeal to this Court, was the question of the liability of petitioner for the debt of the Belt Company. The Central Improvement Company matter was incidental to this issue. If the petitioner was required to pay the Belt Company's debt, that automatically decided the Central Improvement Company matter. The liability issue, it will be remembered, was one that the Trust Company itself had injected into the case in 1905. If it had refrained from introducing this issue into the case, its appeal would have been limited to the less important item of the lands of the Central Improvement Company.

It seems to us unthinkable that the Trust Company's appeal, substantially for the purpose of determining the liability issue, or our subsequent appeal to this Court upon the same issue, can be characterized as vexatious on our part. Obviously, no one will be heard to urge that the petitioner should have confessed error in the proceeding in the court of appeals, or that it should have refrained from taking its appeal to this Court.

It should be wholly unnecessary, we respectfully submit, for us to be called upon to argue the good faith on our side of this litigation following the decree of the district court. But what are the facts?

(a) The district court in its final decree decided the liability issue in favor of petitioner, and also awarded it the Central Improvement Company lands. Its decree upon these two issues, in and of itself, effectively dispels and refutes any imputation of bad faith or improper motives, even though the decree was afterwards reversed upon appeal. It is said in Crescent City v. Butchers' Union, 120 U. S. 141: * * * "the judgment or decree of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter, in favor of the plaintiff, is sufficient evidence of probable cause for its institution, although subsequently reversed by an appellate tribunal."

If the unthinkable intimation or suggestion should be made (nowhere has it been made) that the district court was actuated by improper motives in thus rendering its decree, and that these motives are to be imputed to petitioner, the case just cited gives the answer, in the following language (p. 159):

> "* * * It is equally true and equally well settled in the foundations of the law that neither misconduct nor demerit can be imputed to the court itself. It is an invincible presumption of the law that the judicial tribunal, acting within its jurisdiction, has acted impartially and honestly."

If there were nothing more, the decree of the district court in favor of petitioner is a complete and sufficient justification for all that it did following its entry in June, 1910. But there is much more.

(b) The court of appeals handed down its first opinion (201 Fed. 811) in October, 1912. There was no suggestion in it that the matters decided were trivial or lacking in substantial merit. On the contrary, that court, realizing the difficult nature of the issues involved, and being desirous of affording the fullest opportunity to test its conclusions, adopted the unusual procedure of permitting a reargument of the entire case, in January, 1913. After nearly a year's deliberation, it handed down its second opinion. Here, again, as we shall presently show, there was no finding that the litigation was frivolous or vexatious. True, it said in its opinion that the averment that the Belt Company was not indebted to the Trust Company "has been adjudged untrue," and that "it has become clear that the Cambria Company has no cause of action against the Trust Company." But this is quite another matter, and is discussed later. The fact that the court of appeals permitted the reargument ought to be sufficient evidence that it regarded the issues as serious, important and difficult. It is not in the habit of granting rehearings where litigation appears on its face to be vexatious.

(c) Petitioner appealed from the court of appeals to this Court. The Trust Company filed a motion to dismiss. Petitioner countered with an application for certiorari.

This Court held, May 11, 1914, that the nature of the case was such that if it should appear that an appeal did not lie, the writ of certiorari would be granted, saying:

> The motion to dismiss is hence postponed to the hearing on the merits; and, being of opinion that the nature of the case is such as to authorize the granting of the writ of certiorari which is applied for, in the event it develops on the hearing there is no jurisdiction to review the same, the application for the writ of certiorari is therefore also postponed to the hearing.

It is unnecessary to point out that this Court, particularly at that time, issued its writs of certiorari very sparingly, and only in cases where grave questions were involved or where the public interest was directly affected. It did not issue its writ to review cases utterly lacking in merit, or of a vexatious character.

Finally, the case was heard and decided in this Court, and the decree of the court of appeals was affirmed. The Chief Justice and one of the Associate Justices dissented, as appears from the following statement (240 U. S. 166, 178):

> The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Van Devanter are of opinion that, upon the finding of the master, the decree should be reversed, and therefore dissent.

Two Justices of this Court felt that the case of petitioner was a meritorious one. Surely, there is no necessity for petitioner to apologize for advocating a cause that received their support. To stigmatize such litigation as "vexatious" involves processes which we fail to understand.

The two injunction suits.

We desire to make a brief reference to the two injunction suits, reported in 146 Fed. 337 and 171 Fed. 43. In the opinion of the court of appeals (28 F. (2d) 240) they are referred to as "the two unwarranted injunction suits"; and it is added that "they furnish additional proof, if it were needed, of the vexatious character of the whole litigation."

We are prepared not only to argue, but to demonstrate, that the injunction suits were neither unwarranted nor are they additional proof, or proof in any degree, that the entire litigation, or any part of it, was vexatious.

(a) Both injunctions were duly granted by the district court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, in a case of which that court had jurisdiction, both of the subject matter and of the parties. The injunctions were granted only after the Trust Company had been accorded a full hearing. One was granted by Honorable John F. Philips, then district judge for the western district of Missouri, and the other by Honorable Smith McPherson, then district judge for Iowa. In both cases it was the court, in the exercise of its judicial functions, after hearing in due and orderly course, that granted the injunctions. True, the injunctions were afterwards reversed by the court of appeals. But the action of the court in granting the injunctions, applying the rule of Crescent City v. Butchers' Union, 120 U. S. 14, "is sufficient evidence of probable cause for its institution, although subsequently reversed by an appellate tribunal." To characterize the injunctions as vexatious and unfounded is to impute misconduct and demerit to the court itself, in defiance of the "invincible presumption of the law that the judicial tribunal, acting within its jurisdiction, has acted impartially and honestly." This should be a complete answer to the court's criticism of the injunction suits; but there is another answer.

The principles of law for which petitioner contended unsuccessfully in the court of appeals in those two cases were, we respectfully submit, fully and completely adopted by it in 1921, in Burke Construction Co. v. Kline, 271 Fed. 605.

It is true that the Burke case was afterwards reversed by this court (260 U. S. 226), but that only serves to emphasize the difficult nature of the questions involved, and the unfairness of penalizing parties because their counsel may be unable to predict with absolute certainty what view an appellate court will take in so delicate a matter as the dividing line between federal and state jurisdiction.

The two injunction suits merely illustrate a situation which occurs in everyday practice of the law, when one party feels that his chances are best in a federal court, under the rules and decisions that obtain there, and the other party feels that his client will fare best in the state court, under its rules and decisions. Each one strives to have the case determined in the jurisdiction of his preference. Petitioner sought an adjudication in the federal court; and the Trust Company was striving just as hard to secure an adjudication of the cases it had brought in the state court. Each party was well within its rights in seeking the forum of its preference.

No court has found that any part of this litigation was baseless and unwarranted.

We challenge the statement contained in the opinion (28 F. (2d) 239): "This court characterized the Cambria Company suit as 'baseless' and 'unwarranted'."

We strenuously insist that the court of appeals in its first two opinions made no finding whatsoever reflecting upon the bona fides of the institution and prosecution of this action. In its first opinion (201 Fed. 811), the facts are stated at page 816, in plain language and without the use of unnecessary emphasis. It said:

> The master found that the evidence did not support the claim of the Cambria Company, and recommended that its bill be dismissed for want of equity. * * * The report of the special master was in all things approved and confirmed, and a decree entered in accordance with the findings and recommendations of the master.

Upon the reargument, counsel for petitioner endeavored with much earnestness in brief and argument to controvert the conclusions of the court stated in the first opinion. Substantially the only issue dealt with was the liability issue. As the criticism by counsel of the first opinion of the court had been respectfully earnest and strenuous, so the second opinion of the court was emphatic and positive in support of the conclusion reached in its first opinion. The conclusions reached by the court in both opinions were substantially the same; the difference between them is largely in the emphatic language employed in the second opinion reinforcing its first conclusion. In the second opinion (210 Fed. 714), in reciting the facts to show that there was no evidence of laches on the part of the Trust Company, the court expanded the simple statement above quoted into the following:

> On September 6, 1900, the Cambria Company commenced the suit here in hand against the Belt Company and against the Trust Company to enjoin the latter from selling its collateral and applying their proceeds to the payment of the debt of the Belt Company, a suit which it founded on the averment, which has been adjudged untrue, that the Belt Company was not indebted to the Trust Company, and on other allegations so baseless that it has become clear that the Cambria Company had no cause of action against the Trust Company. (Italics ours.)

This, we respectfully submit, is no more than saying that in the decree in the lower court it was adjudged that the bill of the Cambria Company should be dismissed for want of equity. There is here no independent finding made by the court. There could not be, since the evidence was not brought to that court.

Again, the court says (p. 717):

> It (the Trust Company) gave notice of its sale of its remaining collaterals on September 1, 1900, and was enjoined from proceeding in the baseless suit of the Cambria Company.

Again, it is said (p. 718):

> By the Belt Company's consent to a judgment against it in favor of the Cambria Company, it laid the technical foundation of the Cambria Company's unwarranted suit, which prevented the Trust Company from selling its collaterals, and held the issue of the Belt Company's indebtedness to it suspended for more than eight years.

In both these quotations, the court of appeals is not making an independent finding of its own; it is merely reciting the adjudication in the district court, that the bill of the Cambria Company was without equity.

In the nature of things, it could not have made a finding that the Cambria Company suit was wholly baseless and unwarranted, except in the sense stated. The evidence in the case was not taken to that court. It said (201 Fed. 816): "The evidence has not been brought to this court." And it states (210 Fed. 723): "it would be unwise and might be unjust" to adjudicate any issue in the absence of the evidence.

Finally, it is entirely clear from the opinion itself that the court did not intend to characterize the suit as baseless and unwarranted. It had been expressly asked to do so, and it declined in plain and unambiguous language. Counsel for three stockholders of the Trust Company had petitioned the court "to adjudge" that "certain of the litigation" had been "commenced and prosecuted in bad faith," and the court was asked, thereupon, to give appropriate directions in the decree touching the taxation by the district court of the Trust Company's disbursements (210 Fed. 722); but the court declined to entertain the petition. It declined "to adjudicate" as requested. It said (p. 723): "It would be unwise and might be unjust to adjudicate the questions presented by the petition of these stockholders." Three reasons were given: (1) The question came into the suit for the first time at the rehearing; (2) no evidence had been taken relative to it; and (3) the evidence upon the issues of the case had not been brought to that court.

Does not this conclusively prove that the court of appeals did not in fact pass upon or adjudicate any question touching the good faith of the institution and prosecution of the action? Is it not entirely clear that the court declined even to express any opinion upon the question, for the three reasons stated? The reasons themselves exclude the possibility of an adjudication, or an opinion or a characterization. How, therefore, can it now be plausibly claimed that the court of appeals decided that the suit was baseless and unwarranted, or even characterized it as such? We respectfully submit that the court of appeals in its third opinion has completely misconceived the scope and effect of its second opinion, and that its criticism is entirely unjustified.

The opinion of this Court is controlling, and it contains no intimation that the litigation was vexatious.

In the opinion delivered by this Court, the history of the litigation is stated, the relations of the parties are defined, and the entire matter is reviewed, as it was in the court of appeals, and the decree of the latter was affirmed. What was the decree of that court which was affirmed?

It is found in the concluding paragraph of its opinion (210 Fed. 723, 724), where the district court is directed to enter a specific decree, the details of which are stated at length. Petitioner is required to pay the debt of the Belt Company "and the costs of this suit." If it fails to do so, then certain property may be sold in order to pay "the debt and the costs" out of the proceeds of the sale. The proceeds of such sale shall be applied in the payment of the debt "and of the costs after as well as before the decree." "The decree should adjudge that the Trust Company may recover its costs down to the entry of the decree of the Cambria Company as well as of the Southern Company, and the court may opportion those costs between them, but not as against the Trust Company, which should be permitted to pursue either or both of them until its costs are paid."

This is the decree which this Court affirmed, for reasons stated in its opinion. Nothing is said by this Court or in the proposed form of decree which warrants an imputation of bad faith. The decree, we contend, carries ordinary costs as between party and party, and no more. If this Court had intended that costs should be taxed in accordance with rules obtaining in some foreign jurisdiction, or in some unusual and unprecedented manner, it would have said so in plain and direct language. If it had thought that the litigation was trivial or vexatious, and that the parties should be penalized on that account, we may be sure that we would not be left to conjecture as to its intention. Where this Court finds that either parties or counsel have overstepped the bounds of propriety, and for that reason need to be rebuked, it is its custom and practice to say so in direct and unambiguous language.

Petitioner respectfully prays that the judgment and decree of the circuit court of appeals be reversed, and that the decree of the district court be affirmed; and that the lower court's characterization of this litigation as vexatious be disapproved.

October 4, 1929.

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

PETITIONER'S REPLY BRIEF

FILE COPY

Office Supreme Court
FILED
OCT 24 19
CHARLES ELMORE
CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1929.

No. 22.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,

Petitioner,

v.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY,
Henry C. Flower, Receiver.

Respondent.

REPLY BRIEF OF PETITIONER.

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

October 24, 1929.

Pandick Press, Inc., 22 Thames St., New York, U. S. A.

INDEX.

	PAGE
Counsel is completely mistaken in his assertion that the Court of Appeals found that the Cambria suit was vexatious	2
Counsel's claim that a plan was formed to harass and annoy the Trust Company by means of this litigation, is purely imaginary	5
Complaints of charges of fraud come with poor grace from the Trust Company	17
The Trust Company, as pledgee of the collateral security, performed no services for the benefit of the Belt Company, as pledgor	21
The proper execution of the mandate of this Court	23

AUTHORITIES CITED.

Daniell's (Second) Chancery Practice, Fifth Ed., p. 1411	23
Guardian Trust Company v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 201 Fed. 811	2
210 Fed. 722, 723	3
171 Fed. 43, 50	11
Trimble v. Guardian Trust Co., 244 Mo. 228, 263	9

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1929.

No. 22.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

v.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Henry C. Flower, Receiver,
Respondent,

REPLY BRIEF OF PETITIONER.

The main purpose of this reply brief is to point out some of the errors in the statement of facts contained in respondent's brief. While it seems improbable that these matters will enter into the decision of the case, yet we are reluctant to allow misstatements of fact, which conceivably may prejudice the case, to pass by unchallenged.

It will be noted that, throughout respondent's brief, there are numerous statements which purport to be statements of fact taken from the record, but which are without any supporting references to the record, and for which the record itself, we contend, affords no justification. In so far as these statements are outside of the record, their accuracy is by no means admitted.

Counsel is completely mistaken in his assertion that the court of appeals found that the Cambria suit was vexatious.

At the very outset of respondent's brief (p. 2), the erroneous and misleading statement is made that the circuit court of appeals, upon a former appeal, found that the Cambria suit was the suit of the Southern Company and "that it was a baseless and unwarranted action, filed for the ulterior purpose of wrongfully depriving the Trust Company of the collateral pledged to it as security for the debt of the Belt Company." This is repeated frequently throughout the brief.

It is entirely plain, we respectfully submit, that no such finding was made by the court of appeals. The record itself clearly so states, in plain and unambiguous language, as we now proceed to point out.

The first time that any claim was asserted by any one that this litigation was vexatious and that for that reason the ordinary rule of costs as between party and party should be departed from, was made after the first decision of the court of appeals in favor of the Trust Company (201 Fed. 811), and over twelve years after the suit was instituted. The Chicago counsel for three stockholders of the Trust Company filed a petition in the court of appeals in December, 1912 (Rec. II, 1006), asking that court "to embody in its decree of reversal a special finding that the entire litigation has been trivial, wanton and oppressive"; and further asking the court, upon making this special finding, thereupon either to direct the lower court to ascertain and decree the payment by petitioner of the Trust Company's disbursements in the litigation, consisting of attorneys' fees, solicitors' fees, stenographers' fees, etc.; or, in the alternative, to incorporate in the decree a provision permitting the Trust Company to institute thereafter an independent action or actions against petitioner to recover such disbursements. The primary purpose of this petition, as clearly appears on its face, was to secure from the court of appeals a "special finding" that the litigation was vexatious.

This Court might naturally infer from the statement in the brief, above quoted, that this petition filed by the counsel for the three stockholders had been granted by the court of appeals, and that the "special finding" had been made as requested. But the facts are precisely to the contrary. The court of appeals specifically declined to make the special finding requested by counsel for the three stockholders, or any finding, special or otherwise, upon the subject. It declined to entertain the petition, or to pass upon it one way or the other. That this was the court's action is so clear as to be beyond the realm of controversy (210 Fed. 723). This was the only occasion on which the question arose in the court of appeals.

The court of appeals gave three unanswerable reasons for its action (210 Fed. 722, 723): first, that the petition came too late, being presented for the first time after the first decision of the court, and shortly prior to the reargument in 1913; secondly, that there was no evidence before the court bearing upon the issue of good faith, and, obviously, it could not pass upon that issue in the absence of evidence; and, thirdly, the evidence upon the main issues in the case had not been brought to the appellate court, and, manifestly, the court could not determine the character of the litigation in the absence of the evidence upon the merits of the case. The court very properly said that "it would be unwise and might be unjust" to adjudicate the issues tendered by the petition of counsel for the three stockholders under those circumstances; and, very naturally, it declined to do so. It is in the face of this record that respondent now contends that the requested special finding, which the court refused to make, was actually made.

But the court of appeals did not stop there. It felt that there should be an end of the litigation, which was then thirteen years old. Not only did it decline itself to adjudicate the issue of the good faith of the litigation raised at that late day and without any evidence upon which it could act, but it did not propose to allow the district court to further prolong the litigation by undertaking itself to hear and adjudicate those same issues; and so, in substance, it directed the lower court to refrain from reopening the case for that purpose. This is aptly expressed in the following language (210 Fed. 723):

> . . . as directions to the court below to open and try new issues might, and probably would, prolong this litigation through several years more, our conclusion is that our just course is to leave the taxation of costs to the court below under the principles, rules, and practice in equity.

We respectfully and confidently contend that no one can read the record referred to above without being promptly convinced that the court of appeals did not, as contended by counsel, find that the litigation was baseless and unwarranted. It said itself, in so many words, that it declined to make a finding of that nature, or any finding whatsoever on the subject. The use of the words "baseless and unwarranted," occurring in other parts of the opinion, can only refer, as we pointed out in our main brief (pp. 82-85), to the fact that the Cambria bill had been adjudged to be without equity. The brief statement in the third opinion to the effect that the court of appeals had previously characterized the Cambria Company's suit as baseless and unwarranted, can only be explained upon the assumption that the court in making that statement had been misled by a superficial examination of the opinion.

The further statement contained in the excerpt from respondent's brief, above quoted, to the effect that the court of appeals had actually found that the Cambria suit was filed "for the ulterior purpose of wrongfully depriving the Trust Company of the collateral pledged to it as security for the debt of the Belt Company," is too obviously due to counsel's zeal to require serious consideration. It can not be pretended that there is anything in the record which lends color to the statement.

Counsel's claim that a plan was formed to harass and annoy the Trust Company by means of this litigation, is purely imaginary.

In respondent's brief, it is intimated that this suit and various other proceedings were part of a general plan to harass and annoy the Trust Company. We confidently contend that the record contains not the slightest support or justification for this unwarranted charge.

1. It is suggested (p. 11) that the appointment of a receiver for the Guardian Trust Company in 1900 was based, to some extent at least, upon the "huge claims" made against it in the Cambria bill. This is erroneous, as the record clearly indicates. The opinion of Judge Thayer, then circuit judge for the eighth circuit, appointing a receiver for the Trust Company in the Bierce case, in November, 1900, will be found in the record (Rec. I, 437). It is there stated that the bill of complaint was one by minority stockholders of the Trust Company to "correct abuses of administration and to obtain the appointment of a receiver because of the mismanagement of the company's officers and various ultra vires acts committed by the directors and managers," leading to a dissipation of the company's assets.

It is interesting to note that these charges of mismanagement and ultra vires acts, brought by stockholders against the Trust Company in the Bierce case in 1900, have a direct bearing upon the charges of domination and control and maladministration brought against the Trust Company in this case.

Judge Thayer summarized the proof (Rec. I, 439), which, he said, established with reasonable certainty that the Trust Company had made a practice of organizing other corporations to engage in various enterprises of a highly speculative character; that its funds had been invested in the stocks and bonds of such concerns and losses occasioned thereby, and further losses were imminent; that the officers, directors and employees of the Trust Company generally served as officers and directors of such subsidiary companies, and that such subsidiary companies were mere adjuncts of the Trust Company, and that such outside enterprises were its own adventures. Judge Thayer was referring, in large part at least, to the very activities of the Trust Company complained of in this action and made the basis for the accounting proceedings. He said (Rec. I, 439):

> The proof shows with reasonable certainty that the officers and directors of the defendant company > have made a practice of organizing other corporations to engage in various enterprises of a highly speculative character; that funds of the company to a large amount have been invested in the stocks and bonds of such concerns which had at the time no market value; that money in considerable sums has been loaned to such companies, sometimes upon their stock as collateral, and on other occasions without any security; that some of these enterprises have proved absolute failures; and that the money invested therein has been wholly lost, while other of such enterprises are in a precarious condition and the outcome thereof is doubtful and uncertain. The fact that officers, directors and employees of the trust company have generally served as officers and directors of such subsidiary companies and have held stock therein, leads the court to conclude that the moneys of the trust company would not have been used to purchase the stocks and bonds of such concerns and to supply them with capital, except on the theory that they were mere adjuncts of the trust company and that the enterprises which it thus attempted to foster by the means aforesaid were its own adventures.

Judge Thayer furthermore said, as the complainants have said in this case, that there was such an identity of officers and employees governing these corporations that it was impossible to believe that their interests were properly protected in dealings between them. He said (Rec. I, 439):

> Moreover, in some cases, if not in all, there appears to have been such identity in the personnel of the governing bodies of these corporations and the governing body of the trust company that it is impossible to believe that the interests of either were fairly considered or properly guarded in any of the transactions and dealings which occurred between them.

The appointment of a reciver for the Trust Company in 1900 was far from being any evidence of a conspiracy on the part of any one to harass and annoy it. It affords very persuasive evidence of the Trust Company's domination and control over the Belt Company and its subsidiaries through the interlocking and intermingling of officers and directors, with resulting unfair bargains made by officials dealing with themselves; and of the propriety, and even necessity, of an accounting to determine the real rights and obligations of the parties.

2. Again, respondent refers to the four separate bills for the foreclosure of the mortgages of the Belt line and its subsidiaries, as well as to the foreclosure of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf and Port Arthur Channel & Dock mortgages and the reorganization plan as part of a general conspiracy against the Trust Company. With respect to the mortgage foreclosures and the reorganization plan (under which the Trust Company was one of the depositaries), the master made an explicit finding (Rec. II, 853), quoted infra, holding that there was no evidence whatsoever of actual fraud in any of these proceedings.

The receivership of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Company, so far from being any evidence of conspiracy on the part of the complainants, discloses the Trust Company as the aggressor rather than the injured and innocent party. It will be remembered that on March 31, 1899, the Trust Company took or received from the Belt Company the notes and collateral security in controversy. It then knew that on the following day the Gulf Company would default in the payment of interest then due. Not content with thus stripping the Belt Company of all its available assets on the eve of the receivership, the Trust Company itself precipitated the receivership on April 1, 1899. Its counsel on that day brought a suit in the name of the Belt Company and certain persons interested in the Trust Company, as well as the Gulf Company, against the Gulf Company in the state court at Kansas City, Missouri, setting up the insolvency of the Gulf Company and its exposure to the demands of various creditors, and asking for the appointment of a receiver (Rec. I, 430-436). Midnight receivers were appointed, their personnel consisting of three individuals, two of whom were officers of the Trust Company. It was "a race of diligence for the control of the litigation through receivership" (Trimble vs. Trust Co., 244 Mo. 228, 263). Counsel for the Trust Company, who was also counsel for the Gulf Company and for the Belt Company, testified (244 Mo. 244) "I had suit instituted here (Kansas City) to put the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railway Company in the hands of a receiver before the New York Committee could get out here and do it. * * * This action was taken on behalf of the Trust Company." The Trust Company itself brought suit in Louisiana, and also in Texas, and had receivers appointed there.

Not only was the Trust Company extremely vigilant in bringing its own suit first, and in securing the appointment of its own receivers in the case of the Gulf Company, but it contemplated taking action to secure the same priority in the appointment of receivers for the Belt Company. Prior to the filing of the Cambria bill, in September, 1900, the Trust Company was taking steps, in its own behalf, to secure the appointment of a receiver for the Belt Company upon a creditor's bill. The Cambria bill merely anticipated the Trust Company's move. Again, it appears to have been a race of diligence. This is apparent from the offer of proof (Rec. I, 36). As respondent has referred to this offer of proof, and quoted from it in its brief, p. 100, we feel at liberty to do the same. The following appears immediately preceding the excerpt quoted by respondent:

> About the middle of August, 1900, the Belt Company and your petitioner were reliably advised that the Trust Company had itself conceived the idea of procuring the appointment of a receiver for the Belt Company, and that it was then endeavoring to persuade one of the creditors of the Belt Company to institute such an action.

It was only the failure of the Trust Company to get into court first and initiate its own litigation and secure its own receiver for the Belt Company, as it did for the Gulf Company, that enables it now to cry conspiracy against its adversary.

3. Counsel, at page 114, finds additional evidence of wrongdoing on the part of complainants in the fact that they did not appeal from the decree of the district court upon the issue of debt or no debt as between the Belt Company and the Trust Company. The reason why no such appeal was taken clearly appears in the record, and it requires a strong imagination to draw any prejudicial inference therefrom.

When the Trust Company appealed from the decree of June, 1910, which adjudicated that the petitioner was not liable for the debt of the Belt Company, it carefully refrained from assigning as error the soundness of that adjudication (Rec. II, 916). Its only assignment was that the court erred in "including in said decree" the finding of non-liability. It then had its own suits pending in the state court at Kansas City against the petitioner upon precisely the same cause of action (Rec. II, 502-545). The Trust Company preferred to try the liability issue in the state court. It apparently felt encouraged by the statement contained in the opinion of the court of appeals (171 Fed. 43, 50), to the effect that the liability of petitioner to pay the debts of the Belt Company was not at issue and could not be litigated in the action in the federal court (Rec. II, 894). Accordingly, in taking its appeal, it sought to eliminate the liability issue from the case rather than incur the hazard of an affirmance of the district court's decree.

Petitioner felt confident that the liability issue, which the district court had decided in its favor, was properly in the case, and that the appellate court would so hold, as it did subsequently. If this view were correct, it would follow that the district court's finding of non-liability would be affirmed; and in that event the state of account between the Belt Company and the Trust Company, or the amount of the judgment in favor of the latter, would not be a matter of practical importance. Petitioner's reason for not appealing is stated in an affidavit filed in the court of appeals (Rec. II, 1024). The case was first argued and submitted in the court of appeals in May, 1911 (Rec. II, 948). The contention of the Trust Company there was that the liability issue was not properly in the case, in accordance with its assignment of error to that effect. Sometime after the final submission of the case, the court announced to counsel (Rec. II, 978) that it had reached the tentative conclusion that that issue was necessarily involved in the case. Thereupon counsel for three stockholders of the Trust Company were permitted to intervene (Rec. II, 971, 985), and, for the first time, to challenge the correctness of that part of the district court's decree holding that petitioner was liable for the debt of the Belt Company. When this took place the time limited by statute within which the complainants could take an appeal on the issue of debt or no debt, had long since passed. Petitioner urged these facts unsuccessfully in this Court, as well as in the court of appeals, as a reason why the Trust Company should be confined to its assignment of error as originally made. Manifestly, the petitioner was placed in an unfortunate position; but its misadventure ought not to be tortured into evidence of a conspiracy to injure and oppress the Trust Company, as its counsel seeks to do.

4. Incredible as it may seem, the Trust Company in its brief (p. 98), after referring to the amount claimed by the Trust Company as being due from the Belt Company, put at approximately $400,000, says: "There is not, and never was, the slightest doubt as to the genuineness of that indebtedness." And it makes the amazing statement (p. 117), evidently based thereon, that the purpose of the litigation, on the part of the complainant, "was to smother the Trust Company with difficulties and expenses until it could no longer sustain the unequal contest".

After the Trust Company had consented to an accounting by answer and by stipulation, as was pointed out in our main brief, the only purpose of which was to challenge the correctness of this debt, and after the master, upon the coming in of the Trust Company's account, and upon a consideration of the evidence submitted by complainant, had ruled that there must be an accounting, the whole purpose of which was to determine the question of debt or no debt; after the court had overruled a motion in the nature of a demurrer for want of equity (Rec. II, 565, 567), and after the Trust Company in view of the evidence adduced was compelled to confess two items of the account, and after the master upon the evidence determined a third one adversely to the Trust Company, and after the Trust Company had escaped from serious consequences by successfully pleading the statute of limitations, we are now solemnly told by counsel that there never was any question about the genuineness of the indebtedness, fixed at the sum named; and, based upon that figment of the imagination, the Court is informed that the purpose of this litigation was to smother the Trust Company with expenses until it should succumb in the unequal struggle.

Instead of assuming this extraordinary attitude, the Trust Company might well appreciate that it had been liberally favored by fortune in receiving payment in full of its judgment against the Belt Company. We have no desire to reargue those issues, but in view of counsel's statement above quoted, it may assist the Court if we point out a few pertinent facts and circumstances, in addition to those contained in our original brief.

The gravamen of the action, as above stated, was the charge that the Trust Company dominated and controlled the other companies to their disadvantage. The extract from Judge Thayer's opinion, above quoted, presents the situation with a considerable decree of accuracy. The master had already found in this case that there was a domination and control exercised by the Trust Company, but on final analysis he held that it was not sufficient in amount or extent to come within the rule as he understood it. He said (Rec. II, 643, 644):

> The Trust Company was the central and important and controlling corporation of the aggregation, known as the Stilwell companies, and which, in large measure, was influential in bringing into existence all the corporations, whose operations are involved in complainants' bill, and which were substantially financed by it.
>
> If there was any dominating control exercised in the controverted transactions between the Trust Company and any of these other companies, by reason of the mutuality of the officers and directors representing the companies, so dealing with each other, it is evident from the proofs in the record, that such domination must have been on the part of the Trust Company, and not on the part of the subordinate companies.
>
> From the foregoing statements of the witnesses, Cone and others, it cannot be questioned that A. E. Stilwell was the influential and dominant personage, who, more than any other person connected with it, outlined the policies of the Trust Company, and likewise, with E. L. Martin, and other associates, practically determined those of the railroad companies interested in this accounting.

Can anyone doubt that with this finding as a basis, the master might well have concluded that the unreasonable and excessive charges of the Trust Company against the Belt Company and its subsidiaries should be eliminated from the accounts, or reduced to fair and equitable amounts? Had he done so, it is too plain for argument that his finding would have been supported by substantial evidence, and hence unassailable.

The master pointed out (Rec. II, 644) that the Trust Company "may have received, and did, in fact, receive large compensation for its services, in the way of commissions, trustee fees and bonuses".

Again he said (Rec. II, 645):

> . . . it is evident from the testimony of E. L. Martin and others, that there was at all times manifested a friendly disposition to deal "liberally" with the Trust Company.

In respect of the charge that the Trust Company had taken $350,000 of Union Terminal bonds, issued for the purpose of building the railroad of that company, and had used those bonds to apply on the indebtedness of the Belt Company in the construction of another road (Rec. II, 887), the master intimated that "the respondent might be held liable therefor to other parties".

On the charge of extravagance in the cost of construction and the issuance of bonds, the master said (Rec. II, 852):

> It may be properly suggested that there has been produced in this cause considerable testimony tending to show that all the roads forming the Belt System were extravagantly built, and were bonded largely in excess of their actual cost.

As to the charge of excessive trustees' fees, commissions, bonuses, etc., he said (Rec. II, 705):

> There may rightly be a difference of opinion as to whether such charges were reasonable at all times.

As to the charges made by the building department, the master said (Rec. II, 708):

> It is possible that some of the charges for the work done may have been higher than it was necessary to pay for the same work on the outside.

The Belt Company in 1896 entered into a contract, set out in the record (Rec. II, 69), for the construction of another railroad, called the Kansas City & Northern Connecting Railroad. Its duties under this contract were those of a general railroad construction contractor. Complainants contended in this case that the Trust Company, through its control over the Belt Company, wrongfully caused it to enter into this construction contract. The result of the contract was a large loss, which the Belt Company was compelled to bear. It appears from the master's report (Rec. II, 669) that a large part of the $360,000 owing by the Belt Company to the Trust Company on March 31, 1899, was made up of this deficit. It was contended by complainants that this construction contract was ultra vires and beyond the corporate capacity of the Belt Company. To say the least, this was a debatable question, and the finding might well have been against the Trust Company.

With respect to the Stilwell contract, respondent's counsel does not deny that the Belt Company sustained an enormous loss because it accepted an uncompleted railroad in satisfaction of a contract for a completed road, the Trust Company being in complete control of both companies and it and its friends being the beneficiaries of the transaction. He is content, however, to point to the statute of limitations and to characterize the assertion of this claim by complainants as an effort to smother the Trust Company with expenses until it should become exhausted. But was the statute of limitations a bar to a recovery in this case? We thought not, for the reason that neither the statute of limitations nor the doctrine of laches should be applicable during a period when the Belt Company was under the domination of officers of the Trust Company, and while it was caused to act in the interest of the latter. This, of course, is not now a live question, since it has been foreclosed by the decree. But it must be admitted that it was a real question in the case. The evidence, as we have heretofore stated, clearly warranted a finding that such domination and control actually existed, and that, therefore, the claim was not barred.

Equally unsatisfactory is respondent's answer to the De Goeijen claim. True, the master, after holding that Wilcox's testimony disposed of the item in favor of the Trust Company, also held that it was embraced within the general terms of the settlement between the reorganization committee and De Goeijen. But this was a disputed issue. Petitioner did not think it was included within the very general language of the document, and evidently counsel for the Trust Company agreed with that contention in 1904, when, after a thorough investigation, his conclusion was (Rec. I, 563, 564): "This item must be allowed." This, it may be added, was also the view entertained by prior counsel for the Trust Company, as well as by Mr. Mecartney and his associate (Rec. I, 512).

Complaints of charges of fraud come with poor grace from the Trust Company.

We have pointed out in our main brief (p. 11) that the master did not regard the complainants' action as one involving charges of actual fraud, and also that the Trust Company itself, when the matter was fresh in its mind, put itself on record, in a statement verified by one of its counsel, that no charges of actual fraud had been made. To this may be added the statement of counsel for the three stockholders (Rec. II, 961), "that the entire charge of 'domination' and resultant fraud and unfairness is based solely upon the averment (as to community of directors); that therefore and thereby the entire transactions between the two companies . . . were constructively 'fraudulent'." Their characterization of the intervening petition (Rec. II, 957) is equally free from charges of fraud. Nevertheless, the brief of respondent now complains that it was charged with fraud, and intimates that such charges are evidence of a desire to oppress and injure it.

It will be noted, however, that the Trust Company, at the very inception of this litigation, itself set the example of making wholesale charges of fraud and fraudulent conduct against its adversaries; charges which were not subsequently sustained. In its answer to the Cambria bill, filed in November, 1900 (Rec. II, 33) the Trust Company, while admitting the justice of the Cambria's claim, nevertheless insisted (Rec. II, 35) that the suit was not instituted in good faith, but, on the contrary, that the Belt Company, the Philadelphia reorganization committee and the petitioner were acting collusively for the fraudulent purpose and design of hindering and delaying and defrauding the creditors of the Belt Company.

It was also alleged that the four actions for the foreclosure of mortgages on the properties of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries were based upon the false and fraudulent pretense that there had been a default in the payment of interest, and for the fraudulent purpose, design and intent by said parties to cut off and defeat unsecured creditors, and not for the purpose of enforcing payment of the mortgage bonds (Rec. II, 36, 37); and that the action of the Provident Life & Trust Company of Philadelphia in instituting the foreclosure suits was fraudulent and for the purpose of hindering and delaying unsecured creditors of the Belt Company. It was charged that the Philadelphia committee, the Belt Company and the petitioner "wrongfully and wickedly" conceived the plan of escaping the payment of the unsecured debts of the Belt Company by means of said foreclosure suits, and the Cambria suit simultaneously instituted (Rec. II, 41). These allegations are repeated throughout the answer (Rec. II, 43, 44, 45); again, in the answer of the Central Improvement Company, represented by the same counsel (Rec. II, 77, 78, 79, 83); and again in the Trust Company's answer to the ancillary bill (Rec. II, 115, 116). The Trust Company made the same allegations of fraud in the Bierce case (Rec. I, 447), and in the Provident Life & Trust Company foreclosure suit against the Belt Company (Rec. I, 599).

The Trust Company even went so far as to allege that an answer not then in existence, but which it was supposed the Belt Company might or would file at some time in the future, would be, if filed, collusive and fraudulent, for the purpose of defrauding its own creditors. In that respect, after noting the failure of the Belt Company to file an answer, it said (Rec. II, 116):

> If it should file any such answer, the same will be collusive and fraudulent, for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of said suit in hindering, delaying and defrauding the creditors of the said Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company.

However, this anticipatory allegation of fraud was stricken out by the court (Rec. II, 161).

Manifestly, the Trust Company went to the extreme limit in charging actual, purposeful and intentional fraud on the part of all its adversaries. Its charges were couched in vigorous and emphatic language, and included the Provident Life & Trust Company, the complainant in the four foreclosure suits, the Cambria Company, the Philadelphia committee, the Belt Company and petitioner.

It also charged that the reorganization plan and agreement were fraudulent (Rec. II, 866). The master devotes four pages of his report to a discussion of these charges of fraud (Rec. II, 866-870) holding that they were unfounded. They were made, as he points out, notwithstanding the fact that the Trust Company was a depositary under the reorganization plan, and that it cooperated with the reorganization committee and used its influence, by correspondence and otherwise, to induce bondholders and stockholders to deposit their securities with the committee; and that it deposited its own stocks and bonds in a substantial amount, and in that way benefited from the plan (Rec. II, 870).

But the Trust Company's charges of fraud were not sustained. The master made specific findings as follows (Rec. II, 852, 853, 854):

> The foreclosure sales were legally made, and the Trust Company, though a party to the foreclosure proceedings, has not at any time objected to the regularity thereof, or the sufficiency of the amounts received for the properties sold.
>
> There is no evidence in the record showing actual frauds either at or in the inception of the reorganization scheme, or in any proceeding thereunder; including the foreclosures of the mortgage liens on the properties sold and the conveyance to the Southern Company.

These findings of the master were approved by the district court; and while the master's conclusion upon the liability issue has been overturned, his finding with respect to the absence of actual fraud was not criticized or modified.

It thus appears that petitioner and those associated with it in the litigation were subjected to repeated and reiterated charges of actual and intentional fraud, and that these charges were not sustained. If the respondent's contention with respect to the taxation of costs between solicitor and client is correct, petitioner would be entitled to charge against the respondent its disbursements for attorneys' fees and other expenses incurred in this litigation. It is unnecessary, perhaps, to say that petitioner does not feel that, under the law as it exists in this country, it has any excuse or justification for putting forward a claim of that character.

The Trust Company, as pledgee of the collateral security, performed no services for the benefit of the Belt Company, as pledgor.

Respondent contends in its brief (p. 38 et seq.) that the Trust Company, as a pledgee, was engaged in defending the title of the Belt Company as pledgor, and that it is entitled to be compensated therefor through an allowance of counsel fees and other expenses. It needs but a brief consideration of the record to discover that there are no facts upon which such a claim can properly rest.

As we have pointed out in our main brief (p. 21), substantially all the collateral which the Trust Company received from the Belt Company had, with the exception of the Central Improvement Company stock, been sold, either prior to the inception of the litigation or very shortly thereafter, and the proceeds applied by the Trust Company upon the indebtedness in question. In these instances, therefore, after such sales were made, there was no pledged collateral whose title needed defending. The proceeds of the sale of the collateral remained as a bookkeeping credit, to be applied in the reduction of the Trust Company's account or otherwise, as the rights of the parties might appear on final hearing. The Central Improvement lands were in the hands of its own receiver, who at all times was a party to this action, and were being administered by him, who presumably gave them all the protection needed. The stock was of no value, aside from the lands. There was, therefore, no pledged property for the Trust Company to protect. There was no property whose title had to be defended by it in the interest of a pledgor.

But if the collateral security had remained intact in the hands of the Trust Company throughout the litigation, as it did not, the Trust Company could not claim that it was defending the title of the Belt Company, as pledgor, within the rule which gives the pledgee an allowance for so doing, for the simple reason that the Trust Company was not acting for the benefit of the pledgor, as a quasi or emergency agent; but, on the contrary, it was acting solely in its own interest, to serve its own individual purposes. It is not intended to criticize the Trust Company for so doing, but, undoubtedly, it had no thought of benefiting the Belt Company, or of benefiting anybody except itself. The attitude of the Belt Company in the litigation was that the Trust Company had wrongfully acquired the collateral to secure an indebtedness that had no existence, and that, therefore, it or its proceeds should be returned; and this the Trust Company denied. The attitude of petitioner was that the collateral or its proceeds had passed to it with the foreclosure of the old companies; and this the Trust Company denied. It was an ordinary, everyday litigation, where each party strives to the best of its ability to protect its own interest. It is little less than absurd to suppose that, under these circumstances, the Trust Company was acting for the benefit of the Belt Company, as a quasi or emergency agent, to protect its interest.

The proper execution of the mandate of this Court.

To the authorities cited in our main brief (p. 24 et seq.), we desire to add the following statement from Second Daniell's Chancery Practice, Fifth Edition, page 1411:

> When costs are ordered to be taxed simply, it means as between party and party. If the costs are to be taxed as between solicitor and client, or if any costs, charges, and expenses, not strictly costs of suit, are to be allowed on the taxation, or any variation from a taxation as between party and party, is to be allowed, it should be expressed in the decree.

October 24, 1929.

Respectfully submitted,

FRANK H. MOORE,
CYRUS CRANE,
A. F. SMITH,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

SAMUEL W. MOORE,
Of Counsel.

RESPONDENT'S BRIEF

FILE COPY

Office Supreme Court
FILED
OCT 21 19
CHARLES ELMORE
CL

No. 22.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1929.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Respondent.

STATEMENT AND BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT.

JUSTIN D. BOWERSOCK,
ROBERT B. FIZZELL,
JOHN F. RHODES,
Attorneys for Respondent.

SMITH-GREVER, LAW PRINTERS KANSAS CITY, MO

INDEX

	PAGE
Statement	1-33
Organization of companies	3
Reorganization of Gulf Company	5
Belt Company indebtedness to Trust Company	6
Belt foreclosure suit	6
Filing of Cambria bill	8
Trust Company's answer to Cambria bill	11
Ancillary bill by Belt receivers	12
Intervening petition of Southern Company	12
Trust Company's answer to intervening petition	13
Amended and supplemental ancillary bill of Belt receivers	13
Amended intervening petition of Southern Company	14
Supplemental bill of Southern and Belt receivers	15
Injunctions against state court suits	17
Reference to Master	17
Findings of Master	19
Exceptions to Master's report	22
Appeal to Court of Appeals	23
First intervention of minority stockholders	23
Second intervention of minority stockholders	24
First opinion of Court of Appeals	25
Third intervention of minority stockholders	25
Second opinion of Court of Appeals	26
Appeal to United States Supreme Court	28
Mandate from Supreme Court	28
Payment of judgment	30
Motion for entry of final decree	30
First memorandum opinion of District Court	30
Appointment of Special Master	31
Report of Special Master	32
Second memorandum opinion of District Court	32
Appeal to Court of Appeals	33
Decision of Court of Appeals	33
Argument	35-137
I. The issue before this court is the power of the District Court to reimburse the Trust Company for any of the items covered by its claim for solicitor and client costs	35-37

PAGE

II. The District Court had power to effect reimbursement of the Trust Company without regard to any other principle justifying the imposition of solicitor and client costs, for the reason that it was defending the Belt collateral against the attack of the Southern Company upon the title of its pledgor..... 38-44

III. (a) The mandate of this court on the former appeal dealt only with party and party costs, and not with solicitor and client costs, and has no bearing upon the issues herein..... 44-50

(b) The Act of February 26, 1853, regulates party and party costs only..... 50-63

IV. The Federal Courts are, by the Constitution, vested with the equity powers possessed by the High Court of Chancery in England at the time the Constitution was adopted. 64-65

V. (a) The English authorities allow solicitor and client costs even in the absence of a fiduciary relationship, where gross charges of fraud and misconduct have been made and not sustained..... 66-67

(b) Many authorities allow solicitor and client costs, even in the absence of a fiduciary relationship, where the litigation is so baseless and unwarranted as to justify an implication of bad faith..... 68-81

(c) Where a fiduciary relation exists between the parties, expenses occasioned by baseless and unwarranted litigation are taxable as solicitor and client costs against the offending party..... 81-90

VI. Gross charges of fraud and misconduct were made..... 91-96

VII. The main ground of the suit was false, unjust, vexatious, wanton and oppressive..... 96-118

VIII. Various fiduciary relationships were involved, and the Southern Company itself was trustee for the Trust Company..... 118-128

IX. There was a fund in court..... 128-130

X. Counsel fees and costs after June, 1910, are allowable.... 131-132

XI. Situation as to attorneys' fees in this country is not different from that in England..... 132-134

XII. Freedom from vexatious litigation is no less important than free access to the courts. The latter, if vexatious, should not be encouraged..... 134-137

Cases and Authorities Cited.

A.

	PAGE
Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen 587 (1862)	86
Act of 1789	55
Act of 1792	55
Act of 1793	55
Act of 1799	55
Act of 1847	55
Act of 1853	55
The Walter Adams, 271 Fed. 358 (1921)	89
Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bingham 66 (1827)	40
Allen v. City of Detroit, 167 Mich. 464, 133 N. W. 317 (1911)	71
American National Bank v. Warner, 176 S. W. 863 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1915)	84, 127
Anderson v. Marietta National Bank, 93 Okla. 241, 220 Pac. 883 (1923)	74
Andrews v. Barnes, L. R. 39 Ch. D. 133 (1887)	134
The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362 (1824)	72
Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306 (1796)	90
Atlantic Trust Co. v. Chapman, 208 U. S. 360, 28 S. Ct. 406 (1908)	43, 76
Attorney General v. Old South Society, 13 Allen 474 (1866)	83, 127
Attorneys & Solicitors Act of August 22, 1843, 6 & 7 Vict., Chap. 73	133
Attorneys & Solicitors Act of July 14, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict., Chap. 28	133
Ayckbourn, Practice of the High Court of Chancery, 7th Ed. (1861), p. 396	134

B.

In re Baldwin's Estate, (1900) 1 Irish L. R. 15	42, 130
Ballingale v. Hunsberger, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 117 (1901)	38
The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377	51
Baltimore Building and Loan Association v. Alderson, 99 Fed. 489, 39 C. C. A. 609 (1900)	46
Bank of Philadelphia v. Posey, 130 Miss. 530, 92 So. 840 (1922)	73
Barbour, The Practice of the Court of Chancery, (2d Ed.) (1875) V. 2, pp. 336-339	88
Bay Biscayne Co. v. Baile, 73 Fla. 1120, 75 So. 860 (1917)	42
Beach, Modern Equity Practice, (1894) Vol. 2, Sec. 1015	61
Beach v. Macon Grocery Co., 125 Fed. 513, 60 C. C. A. 557 (1903)	74
Beams, Costs in Equity, (2d Ed.) (1840) p. 24	39
Beams, Costs in Equity, (2d Ed.) (1840) Chap. 10	88
Beams, Equity Costs, 4	69
Beams, Equity Costs, 7	69
Beams, Equity Costs, 85	70

CASES AND AUTHORITIES CITED—Continued.

PAGE

Biddle's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 340 (1877) 82
Blake, Practice of the Court of Chancery of the State of New York, 2d Ed., (1824) p. 558 57
Bramble v. Brett, 230 Fed. 385, 144 C. C. A. 527 (1916) 86
The Boston, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1672 (1846) 70
Brueggemann v. Young, 128 Ill. App. 200 (1906) 46
Bruty v. Edmundson, L. R., (1917) 2 Ch. 285 66
Buell v. Kanawha Lumber Corp., 201 Fed. 762 (1912) 76
Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449 (1890) 89
Business Mens' Assurance Co. v. Campbell, 18 Fed. (2d) 223 (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1927) 60

C.

The Gordon Campbell, 131 Fed. 963 (1904) 61
Cantor v. American & Ocean Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307 (1830) 88
Central Improvement Co. v. Cambria Steel Co., 201 Fed. 811, 815. 8, 25
Central Improvement Co. v. Cambria Steel Co., 210 Fed. 696 26
Central Railroad Co. v. Pettus, 113 U. S. 116 (1884) 130
In re Chenell, L. R. 8 Ch. D. 492 (1877) 82
Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Nye-Schneider-Fowler Co., 260 U. S. 35, 43 S. Ct. 55 (1922) 77, 134
Chicago Terminal Transfer Co. v. Bomberger, 130 Fed. 884, 65 C. C. A. 64 (1904) 71
Childs v. Ferguson, 181 Fed. 795, 104 C. C. A. 305 (1910) 64
City of St. Louis v. St. Louis Gas Light Co., 11 Mo. App. 237 (1881) 74
In re Clark, 174 Ia. 449, 154 N. W. 759 (1915) 70, 83, 127
Clark v. Anderson, 13 Bush (76 Ky.) 111 (1877) 82
Clark v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 105 Fed. 552 (1900) 46
Congressional Globe, Volume 22, Appendix, p. 207 57
Corkery v. Dorsey, 223 Mass. 97, 111 N. E. 795 (1916) 71
Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 132 Fed. 570 (1904) 60
31 Cyc. 826 39

D.

The John D. Dailey, 158 Fed. 642 (1907) 90
Daniell's Chancery Practice, (1st Ed.) (1837) V. 3, p. 14 39
Daniell, Chancery Practice, (1st Ed.) (1837) Sec. 4, Chap. 27 88
Daniell, Pleading and Practice of the High Court of Chancery, 4th Am. Ed., (1871) V. 2, p. 1439 134
Darby v. Gilligan, 37 W. Va. 59, 16 S. E. 507 (1892) 82
Re Davies; Jenkins v. Davies, 64 L. T. R. 824 (1891) 86
Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363 (1851) 69, 90
Deggo v. Colebrook, 1 Atk. 395 (1738) 68

PAGE

Delcambre v. Murphy, 5 S. W. (2d) 789 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1928).. 74
Dewey v. Stratton, 114 Fed. 179, 52 C. C. A. 135 (1902)..... 43
D'Oechsner v. Scott, 24 Beavan 239 (1857)..... 66
Dungey v. Angove, 2 Ves. Jr. 304 (1794)..... 68
Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 291 (1866)..... 86

E.

Ely-Walker Dry Goods Co. v. Colbert, 124 S. W. 705 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1910)..... 39
Ephriam v. Pacific Bank, 129 Cal. 589, 62 Pac. 177 (1900)..... 76

F.

Fagan v. Thompson, 38 Fed. 467 (1889)..... 38, 39
In re Famatina Development Corporation, Ltd., L. R. (1914) 2 Ch. D. 271..... 40
Fane v. Fane, L. R. 13 Ch. D. 228 (1878)..... 66
Farmers & Merchants Insurance Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 23 S. Ct. 565 (1902).....78, 79, 135
Fidelity Mutual Life Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 S. Ct. 662 (1901)..... 78
First National Bank v. Tenney, 43 Ill. App. 544 (1891)..... 40
Fleming v. Wilson, 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 610 (1869)..... 82
Forester v. Read, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 40 (1870)..... 66
In re Foster v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 515 (1882). 134
Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. 369 (1854)..... 64
Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556..... 51, 54
The Elizabeth Frith, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4361 (1831)..... 72
Frost v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 6 Allen 152 (1863)..... 87
Furness v. Union National Bank, 147 Ill. 570, 35 N. E. 624 (1893). 39

G.

Gates v. Parmly, 93 Wis. 294, 67 N. W. 739 (1896)..... 71
Geer v. Finn, 196 Mich. 738, 163 N. W. 20 (1917)..... 70
Globe Indemnity Co. v. Sulpho-Saline Bath Co., 299 Fed. 219, (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1924) certiorari denied, 266 U. S. 606.... 63
Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 517 (1747)..... 39
Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2 (1883.....58, 60, 69, 89
Graham v. Railroad Co., 102 U. S. 148, 153..... 103
Gregory v. Pike, 67 Fed. 837, 15 C. C. A. 33 (1895)..... 38
Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Railway Co., 28 Fed. (2d) 233..... 33

PAGE

Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43 (1909) 17
Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 146 Fed. 337 (C. C. A., 8th) 17
Gulf Refining Co. v. United States, 269 U. S. 125, 46 S. Ct. 52 (1925) 47
Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Walker, 104 Miss. 363, 61 So. 458 (1913) 73

H.

Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 21, p. 238 ..... 39, 42
Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 28, p. 161 83
Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 23, p. 183 134
Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 26, p. 798 134
Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 311, 18 S. Ct. 129 (1897) 87
Hastings v. Spenser, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6201 (1853) 71
Hawkins v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 99 Fed. 322, 39 C. C. A. 538 (1900) 48
Hennessy v. Sheldon, 12 Wall. 440 (1870) 136
Hernandez v. Brookdale Mills, 232 N. Y. 552, 134 N. E. 568 (1921) 74
Hill on Trustees, (1867) p. 566 83
The Ellen Holgate, 30 Fed. 125 (1887) 71
Home Life Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 188 U. S. 726, 23 S. Ct. 380 (1902) 78, 135
House v. Amsdell Brewing and Malting Co., 117 N. Y. S. 796, 133 App. Div. 486 (1909) 46
Hurst v. Coley, 22 Fed. 183 (1884) 42
The Hurtsdale, 171 Fed. 607 (1909) 90
Hutchinson Box Board & Paper Co. v. Van Horn, 299 Fed. 424 (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1924) 84

I.

Ibberson v. Worth, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 440 (1855) 66
Individual Drinking Cup Co. v. Union News Co., 250 Fed. 625, 162 C. C. A. 641 (1918) 65
Iowa Life Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 23 S. Ct. 126 (1902) 78

J.

Jacobsen v. Lewis Klondike Exposition Co., 112 Fed. 73, 50 C. C. A. 12 (1901) 90
Ex parte Jaffray, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7170 (1869) 60, 86
The Robert Jenkins, 22 Fed. 797 (1885) 70
Jerman v. Stewart, Gwynne & Co., 12 Fed. 271 (1882) 62
Johnson v. Blanchard, 7 Fed. 597 (1885) 70

PAGE

Jones, Collateral Securities, 3d Ed., Sec. 400 39
Jordan v. Agawam Woolen Co., 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7516 (1869) .. 62
Joslyn v. Parlin, 54 Vt. 670 (1881) 73

K.

Kaempfer v. Taylor, 78 Fed. 795 (1897) 62
Kansas City Southern Railway Co. v. Guardian Trust Company, 240 U. S. 166, 36 S. Ct. 334 28
Karns v. Imlay Rapid Cyanide Process Co., 181 Fed. 751 (1910) 64
Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245 46
Kevan v. Crawford, L. R. 6th D. 29 (1877) 66
Kirby v. Lake Shore & M. S. R., 120 U. S. 130 (1886) 64
Koelble v. Runyan, 158 N. E. 279 (Ohio) (1927) 87

L.

In re Lacov, 142 Fed. 960, 74 C. C. A. 130 (1905) 74
Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246 ..... 51, 54
Lewin on Trusts, 8th Ed. (1891), V. 3, p. 987 83
Lindley v. Denver, 259 Fed. 83, 170 C. C. A. 151 (1919) 65
Loring v. Marsh, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8515 (1865) 65
Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Clark, 16 Fed. 20 (1883) 60, 87
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dickerson, 191 Fed. 705, 112 C. C. A. 295 (1911) 79
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart, 241 U. S. 261, 36 S. Ct. 586 (1915) 135
Lycan v. Miller, 56 Mo. App. 79 (1894) 82

M.

McCloskey v. Bowden, 82 N. J. E. 410, 89 At. 528 (1914) 71
McCloskey v. Kirk, 243 Pa. 319, 90 At. 73 (1914) 71
McGaw v. Acker, Merrall and Condit Co., 111 Md. 153, 73 At. 731 (1909) 83, 127, 130
McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66 ..... 51, 53
Madden v. Rosseter, 192 N. Y. S. 113, 117 Misc. Rep. 244 (1921) 84, 127, 130
Mangnetto v. Crankshaw, 26 R. I. 453, 59 At. 309 (1904) 80
Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 Fed. (2d) 460 54
Masserne v. Lyndon, 2 Brown 291 (1788) 68
Matheson v. Hanna-Schoelkopf Co., 128 Fed. 162 (1904) 62, 65
Mayhew v. Phoenix Insurance Co., 23 Mich. 105 (1871) 67
In re Mead, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9364 (1871) 86
Mecartney v. Guardian Trust Company, 274 Mo. 224 (1918) 132

PAGE

Mecartney v. Guardian Trust Company, 280 Fed. 64 (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1922) 132
Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 U. S. 412, 35 S. Ct. 328 (1914) 79, 135
Meyers v. Block, 120 U. S. 206 (1886) 43
Michigan Aluminum Foundry Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 190 Fed. 903 (1911) 63
Mills v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 226 Fed. 812 (1915) 46
Minuse v. Cox, 5 Johns. Ch. 441 (1821) 82
Mississippi Mills v. Cohn, 150 U. S. 202 (1893) 64
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530 ..... 51, 52
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris, 234 U. S. 412, 34 S. Ct. 790 (1913) 78
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Cade, 233 U. S. 642, 34 S. Ct. 678 (1914) 78, 79, 134
Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459 ..... 49, 51, 52
Mordue v. Palmer, L. R. 6 Ch. A. C. 22 (1870) 134
Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63 ..... 51, 54, 80
Murphy v. Loos, 32 Ill. App. 595 (1889) 46
Myers v. Frankenthal, 55 Ill. App. 390 (1894) 74

N.

National Surety Co. v. Lyons, 16 Fed. (2d) 688 (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1926) 60, 63
In re Neil's Will, 172 N. Y. S. 79, 184 App. Div. 507 86
Newton v. Consolidated Gas Co., 265 U. S. 78, 44 S. Ct. 481 (1923) 43, 61, 70, 89
Niday v. Graef, 279 Fed. 941 (C. C. A., 9th Cir.) (1922) 87
North Missouri Railroad Co. v. Lackland, 25 Mo. 515 (1857) .. 74
North Missouri Railroad Co. v. Reynal, 25 Mo. 534 (1857) 74
J. E. North Lumber Co. v. Gary, 83 Miss. 640, 36 S. 2 (1904) .. 73

O.

Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211 51
O'Neal v. Spivey, 145 S. E. 71 (Ga.) (1928) 73

P.

Page v. Rogers, 211 U. S. 575, 29 S. Ct. 159 (1909) 43
Palmer v. Walesby, L. R. 3 Ch. A. C. 732 (1868) 68
Parker v. Watkins, Johnson's Reports 133 (1858) 39
In re Paschal, 10 Wall. 483 (1870) 59
Passingham v. Sherborn, 9 Beavan 424 (1839) 66
Patrick v. Patrick, 71 N. J. E. 347, 63 At. 848 (1906) 87
Patterson v. Ball, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10, 823 (1809) 73

PAGE

Patterson v. Northern Trust Co., 286 Ill. 564, 122 N. E. 55 (1919) 82
Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425 (1868) 64
People of Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238, 48 S. Ct. 239 (1928) 59
Perry, Trusts and Trustees, 7th Ed. (1929), V. 2, Sec. 894 83
In re Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543 (1919) 61, 62, 89
Case of Pettit, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,047 71
Pickett & Sexton v. School District of Kansas City, 193 Mo. App. 519, 186 S. W. 533 (1916) 87, 130
Planters Rice Mill Co. v. Merchants National Bank, 78 Ga. 574, 3 S. E. 327 (1887) 39, 130
Porter v. Steel Co., 120 U. S. 649, 673 103

R.

Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 23 S. Ct. 710 (1902) 86
Receivers of Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Staake, 133 Fed. 717, 66 C. C. A. 547 (1904) 87
Rennett v. Green, 1 Cox Ch. Cas. 253 (1786) 68
Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. 212 (1818) 64
Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433, 437 (1881) 43, 64

S.

Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 246 (1843) 39
In re Sanford Fork and Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247, 16 S. Ct. 291 (1895) 45, 47
In re Schocket, 177 Fed. 583 (1910) 61, 70, 76
Seibert v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 58 Minn. 58, 57 N. W. 1068 (1894) 37
Selz, Schwab & Co. v. Guthman, 62 Ill. App. 624 (1895) 40
Shannon v. Angelique, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12, 705 (1856) 87
Ex parte Simpson, 15 Ves. Jr. 476 (1809) 66
Simpson v. Malherbe, 4 Gifford 707 (1865) 68
Sizer v. Many, 16 How. 98 (1853) 46
Smith, Chancery Practice (2d Ed.) (1837), V. 1, pp. 697-700 . . 88
Solicitors Remuneration Act, of August 22, 1881, L. R. Gen. Pub. St., V. 17, Chap. 44 133
The South Portland, 95 Fed. 295 (1899) 90
Southern Ry. Co. v. Gadd, 233 U. S. 572, 34 S. Ct. 696 (1913) . . 135
Spaulding v. Tucker, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,221 (1871) 62
Spring Garden Insurance Co. v. Amusement Syndicate Co., 178 Fed. 519, 102 C. C. A. 29 (1910) 73
St. Louis and San Francisco R. Co. v. Barker, 210 Fed. 902 (1914) 46

PAGE

Stafford v. Mott, 3 Paige 100 (1832) 71
Stallo v. Wagner, 245 Fed. 636, 158 C. C. A. 64 (1917) 61, 69, 70
In re Starr, 103 At. 392 (N. J.) (1918) 82
State of Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 18 How. 460 (1855) 64
E. G. Staude Mfg. Co. v. Labombarbe, 243 Fed. 362, 156 (C. C. A. 142) (1917) 81
In re Stewart, 179 Fed. 222, 102 C. C. A. 348 (1910) 86
Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. 359 (1839) 64
Street, Federal Equity Practice (1909), Vol. 2, Sec. 2034 ..... 61, 88
The Sydney, 47 Fed. 260 (1891) 48
Syndicate Imp. Co. v. Bradley, 6 Wyo. 171, 43 Pac. 79, 44 Pac. 60 (1896) 80

T.

Tesla Electric Co. v. Scott, 101 Fed. 524 (1900) 61
Tevander v. Ruysdael, 299 Fed. 746 (C. C. A., 7th Cir.) (1924) ... 130
Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Prater, 229 U. S. 177, 33 S. Ct. 637 (1913) 135
Thome v. Allen, 24 Ky. L. R. 987, 70 S. W. 410, 71 S. W. 431 (1903) 82
Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 104 (1884) 88
Title Insurance Co. v. California Development Co., 179 Cal. 734, 178 Pac. 857 (1919) 46
Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527 .....53, 59, 63, 84
Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497 ..... 51, 52
Turner v. Collins, L. R. 12 Eq. Cas. 438 (1871) 68, 82, 134
Turner, Practice and Costs in the High Court of Chancery (3d Ed.) (1804) 88
Twist v. Babcock, 48 Mich. 513, 12 N. W. 680 (1882) 71

U.

Ex parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317, 20 S. Ct. 904 (1900) 45, 47
United States v. Pan American Petroleum Co., 24 Fed. (2d) 206 (1927) 46, 48
United States v. Waters, 133 U. S. 208 (1889) 59
United States Code Annotated, Title 49, Sections 8 and 16 (2) ... 79
United States Code Annotated, Title 28, Section 824 ..... 80, 135
United States Code Annotated, Title 28, Section 819 ..... 80, 135
United States Code Annotated, Title 28, Sections 825-829 ..... 80, 135
United States Code Annotated, Title 17, Section 40 ..... 81, 135

W.

	PAGE
Walters v. Woodbridge, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 504 (1878)	126
Walworth, Rules and Orders of the Court of Chancery of the State of New York, (1839) p. 193	57
Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank and Trust Company, 215 U. S. 33, 30 S. Ct. 10 (1909)	64
In re Wells & Croft, 15 Reports 169 (1894)	40
In re Wentworth Lunch Co., 191 Fed. 821 (112 C. C. A. 335) (1911)	74
West v. Brashear, 14 Pet. 51 (1840)	47
Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 208 Fed. 581 (1913)	62, 90
Weston v. Watts, 45 Hun. 219 (1887)	74
Whitehead v. Darling, 5 S. W. 356 (Ky.) (1887)	40
Wilcke v. Duross, 144 Mich. 243 (107 N. W. 907) (1906)	71
Williams v. Lister & Co., 109 L. T. R. 699 (1913)	40
Williams v. MacDougall, 39 Cal. 80 (1870)	86
Williamson v. Liverpool & London Ins. Co., 141 Fed. 54 (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1905)	63
Wittenberg v. Fisher, 183 Mo. App. 347, 166 S. W. 1106 (1914)	80
Woodworth v. Old Second National Bank, 154 Mich. 459, 118 N. W. 581 (1908)	84, 127
In re Wright, 16 Fed. 482 (1883)	72

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1929.

No. 22.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Respondent.

STATEMENT AND BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT.

STATEMENT.

The pertinent facts and proceedings involved in this case, so far as they affect the substantial rights of the parties, have been three times set forth and determined by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, and appear in 201 Fed. 811, 210 Fed. 696, and 28 Fed. 2d, 233. The facts so found by the court form the basis of the present proceeding, which seeks to have a proper taxation of costs paid out by the respondent in defending the litigation. On the merits, the final decision has been in favor of respondent. It remains to determine whether the District Court had power, under the facts resulting in such decision, to allow the respondent certain extraordinary costs.

We contend that all the facts essential to sustain that power have been found by the Circuit Court of Appeals upon the former appeal; that such finding as to the facts is final and conclusive upon the parties hereto, and that the petitioner is not entitled to relitigate them in this proceeding. The Circuit Court of Appeals found, we submit, the following facts:

That the Southern Company caused the Cambria suit to be filed and that such suit was in fact the suit of the Southern Company;

That it was a baseless and unwarranted action, filed for the ulterior purpose of wrongfully depriving the Trust Company of the collateral pledged to it as security for the debt of the Belt Company;

That the bills filed by the Belt Company and its receivers were also filed at the instance and for the benefit of the Southern Company and that such bills were in fact the bills of the Southern Company.

We believe that the decisions of the Court of Appeals, the bills and petitions filed by the Cambria, Belt and Southern Companies, and the report of the master will be all of the voluminous record which this court need to examine. However, in order that the court may have the whole picture before it, we are giving what we believe to be a fair resume of the facts disclosed by the record upon which the Court of Appeals acted and upon which the power of the District Court depends.

THE FACTS.

The Guardian Trust Company was organized as a Missouri trust company in 1889. The Company was a flourishing institution and during the period from 1889 to 1900 played a large part in financing various railroad and other enterprises in and around Kansas City, Missouri.

The enterprises financed by and through the Trust Company, and whose affairs are involved in this proceeding, were Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Consolidated Terminal Railway Company, the Union Terminal Railroad Company, Kansas City and Independence Air Line, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company (a consolidation of Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company and Consolidated Terminal Railway Company), Missouri Elevator and Terminal Company, Central Improvement Company, Second Street Improvement Company, Fairmount Amusement Company, Northern Townsite Company, The Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company, Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company and Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company.

The Kansas City and Independence Air Line and the Union Terminal Railroad Company were subsidiaries of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company. The three functioned as a unit, were generally referred to collectively as the "Belt Company," and owned and operated a belt line or terminal system in Kansas City and its environs, from Grandview in Jackson County, Missouri, to the stockyards in Argentine, Kansas. The Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company owned and operated a similar terminal system at Port Arthur, Texas. The Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company owned and operated a trunk line from a connection with the Belt Line at Grandview, to a connection with the Dock Company's road at Port Arthur.

The Central Improvement Company, also a Belt Company subsidiary, held the title to valuable terminal lands appurtenant to the Belt Line. The Missouri Elevator and Terminal Company owned grain elevators along the Belt Line. Fairmount Amusement Company, which operated an amusement park known as Fairmount Park, had been organized to promote passenger traffic on the Belt Line. The Kansas City and Northern Connecting Railroad Company was formed to build a connecting road between the Belt Line in Kansas City and the town of Pattonsburg, Missouri, to provide certain northern railroads with an entrance into Kansas City. The Northern Townsite Company held title to certain townsites on this proposed road to Pattonsburg.

With all these companies the Guardian Trust Company had had, up to 1900, a continuous course of dealing, extending over a period of years, resulting in thousands of transactions involving millions of dollars. All of the railroad companies named had issued bonds, totaling many millions of dollars. The Trust Company was corporate trustee in the railroad mortgages securing the bonds. The securities of the railroads had been marketed by them through the agency of the Trust Company, it receiving a commission for its services. It had, furthermore, advanced money to them for pressing needs, and acted as their banker and fiscal agent.

John W. Gates, of Chicago, had purchased heavily of the securities of the railroad companies mentioned. Gates also purchased stock in the Trust Company, but his interest in the railroad was much greater than in the Trust Company. In 1899 Gates and Stilwell, president of the Trust Company, became involved in a bitter personal controversy, and Gates sought, but without success, to oust Stilwell from the control of the Trust Company. Thereafter Gates was bitterly antagonistic toward the Trust Company. (Rec. V. 2, p. 672.)

On April 1, 1899, receivers were appointed for the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company. Gates and his associates, heavily interested in the bonds of the company, organized themselves into a bondholders' reorganization committee to reorganize the finances of the company. It was recognized that any new or successor company must acquire the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company properties and the Belt Line properties in Kansas City, in order that the new company might have one continuous line of road from Kansas City to the Gulf.

To this end, in November, 1899, the committee promulgated a plan of reorganization whereby it proposed to organize a new company, to be called the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and offered the bondholders and stockholders of the Belt Company and the Dock Company securities of the new company in exchange for their holdings in the old companies. The plan contemplated, also, the payment of the floating debts of the old companies. At this time the Belt Company was a solvent going concern. Pursuant to the proposals, the holders of substantially all of the outstanding stocks and bonds of the Belt and Dock companies deposited their securities in exchange for new securities of the proposed company. (See 201 Fed. 813.)

On March 19, 1900, the Gulf Company properties were sold at foreclosure to Max Pam, Gates' personal attorney. Pam on the same day conveyed the property to the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, which had been incorporated a few days before. On April 1, 1900, the Southern Company demanded the resignations of the then officers and directors of the Belt Company, and from that date the Belt Company was wholly in the control, and functioned as a part, of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company.

The Trust Company had, during the years of its close association with the Belt Company, made large loans to the Belt Company, represented by the notes of the latter, often secured by the pledge of stock or bonds of the Belt's subsidiary companies. Between September 23, 1898, and November 27, 1899, the Belt Company executed promissory notes to the Trust Company totaling over $700,000. (Rec. V. 2, p. 752.) At the time of the Gulf Company foreclosure and sale, the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company was about $400,000. As security for this indebtedness the Trust Company held miscellaneous securities of the Belt Company subsidiaries (Rec. V. 2, p. 755), the most valuable of which were 1120 shares of stock (being substantially all) of the Central Improvement Company. This company owned terminal lands worth over $200,000.

On September 1, 1900, the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company being in default and unpaid, the Trust Company gave written notice to the Belt Company that unless the debt were paid in the meantime, it would on September 7, 1900, proceed to sell, under the terms of the pledge, the securities pledged with it, for application on the debt.

On September 6, 1900, the Cambria Steel Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, appearing by Frank Hagerman and L. C. Krauthoff, filed a suit at law in the Federal Court in Kansas City, against the Belt Company, on an open account for steel rails furnished. The fact was, though no reference to it was made in the suit, that the Cambria Company held the same sort of collateral for its debt as did the Trust Company. (Rec. V. 2, p. 672.) The Belt Company, through an associate of Mr. Pam (who was then counsel for the Kansas City Southern Railway Company) waived summons and confesssed judgment, on the same day. At the same time, on the same day, execution was issued against the Belt Company, and at the request of the attorneys of the Cambria Company, was returned nulla bona, without any attempt being made to have the execution satisfied.

On the same day, in the same court, and appearing through the same attorneys, the Provident Life and Trust Company, a co-trustee in the Belt, Union Terminal, Air Line and Consolidated Terminal mortgages, filed four separate bills for the foreclosure of those mortgages. As a preliminary to these suits, the Kansas City Southern Company, then holding all of the bonds issued by said railroad companies, as the result of the Reorganization Plan, had, under powers given in the mortgages, removed the Guardian Trust Company as co-trustee in the mortgages. These foreclosure suits were later consolidated, and were consummated by a foreclosure sale, the Kansas City Southern being the purchaser at the sale. At about the same time, and in the same manner, through a foreclosure suit in the Federal Court in Texas, the Kansas City Southern acquired the properties of the Port Arthur Channel & Dock Company.

The Trust Company was a party to the Belt foreclosure suits, and before the decree was entered, it asked that the Southern Company be made a party, and asked leave to file an amended supplemental answer asserting that the Southern Company, as the successor of the Belt

Company, and by virtue of its agreement to pay the Belt indebtedness, was liable to the Trust Company for the Belt indebtedness to it. The court denied leave to file such answer, but on condition that the complainant should file a stipulation that the decree should be without prejudice to the claim of the Trust Company against the Southern Company. The last paragraph of the foreclosure decree expressly saved and reserved to the Trust Company the rights to plead and insist in any other present or future litigation that the Southern Company was liable to it for the Belt indebtedness. (See findings to this effect in Central Improvement Co. v. Cambria Steel Co., 201 Fed. 811, 815.)

On the same day (i. e., September 6, 1900), in the same court, and appearing through the same attorneys, the Cambria Steel Company filed its creditors' bill, based upon the confessed judgment against the Belt Company procured on that day (upon a petition that day filed, as above set forth), naming as defendants the Belt Company and its subsidiaries, and the Guardian Trust Company. (Rec. V. 2, pp. 3-20.) With the filing of this Cambria bill on September 6, 1900, the present litigation began.

The allegations of the bill will be noted more in detail in a later connection. However, the bill asserted that the Trust Company organized, dominated, controlled and manipulated the Belt Company and its subsidiaries pursuant to a fraudulent scheme and design for the exploitation and wholesale fleecing of those companies and the investors in their securities; that the Trust Company, as trustee in the railroad mortgages, and as trustee for and agent of the companies in managing and disposing of their stocks, bonds and other assets, committed flagrant breaches of trust, resulting in millions of dollars of loss to said companies; that the Trust Company had failed to account for, and had converted to its own use, some $7,000,000 of securities of the Belt Line companies; that the Trust Company caused to be formed the Elevator, Amusement, Central and Townsite Companies, with the fraudulent intent and purpose of defeating the creditors of the railroad companies, by the diversion of assets rightly belonging to those companies; that the Trust Company wrongfully and fraudulently charged to the Belt Company a loss of over $300,000 incurred by the Trust Company in constructing the Pattonsburg road; that for the purpose of hindering, delaying and defrauding the creditors of the Belt Company in the collection of their respective demands, and particularly the Cambria Company in the collection of its judgment, the Trust Company made various false and unfounded claims and demands against the Belt Company, and caused the Belt Company to go through the form of executing a number of pretended promissory notes, aggregating about $500,000, to the Trust Company, and for the pretended purpose of securing the payment of said pretended notes, caused the Belt Company to deposit with the Trust Company various named securities of the Belt subsidiaries.

The bill further alleged that the Trust Company was totally insolvent; that it had outstanding a large number of matured obligations, the holders of which were pressing for payment, and that it was wholly unable to meet such demands; that it was threatening to sell the notes which it fraudulently caused the Belt Company to go through the form of executing, and the collateral pretended to be pledged as security therefor—all to the end that the creditors of the Belt Company might be hindered, delayed and defrauded; that the property of the Elevator, Amusement, Central and Townsite Companies in equity belonged to the Belt Company, and that it is necessary for the protection of the creditors of the Belt Company that receivers be appointed for said companies.

The bill prayed (a) that an accounting be taken of the various transactions and dealings between the Trust Company and the Belt Company, or by the Trust Company as trustee and agent of and for the Belt Company, and that the Trust Company be required to pay the balance found to be due the Belt Company, plus all losses incurred in transactions by the Trust Company with the property of the Belt Company; (b) that the Trust Company be decreed to hold the pledged securities of the Belt subsidiaries in trust for the creditors of the Belt Company; (c) that the property and assets of the Elevator, Amusement, Central and Townsite Companies be declared to be in equity the property of the Belt Company and chargeable with the debts of the Belt Company; and (d) that a receiver be appointed for the Belt Company and its property and of the property of the subsidiary companies; and that the Trust Company be enjoined from selling or disposing of the Belt Company notes and collateral.

After the bill was filed, and on the same day, the Belt Company entered its appearance in the cause (Rec. V. 2, p. 28), and on that day, upon inspection of the bill and without notice to the Trust Company, the court granted the injunction prayed for and appointed receivers for the Belt Company. (Rec. V. 2, p. 28.)

On the same day, September 6, 1900, the court appointed receivers for all of the Belt subsidiary companies.

It may also be stated that shortly thereafter, on October 23, 1900, Gates and his associates, appearing by the same attorneys who filed the Cambria bill, filed their bill for the appointment of a receiver for the Guardian Trust Company, asserting, as one of the grounds for the application, the predicament of the Company occasioned by the huge claims made against it in the Cambria bill. A receiver was appointed, but was discharged two years later.

On November 5, 1900, the Trust Company answered the Cambria bill. (Rec. V. 2, p. 33.) The answer, after denying the allegations of fraud and misconduct contained in the bill, alleged that the Cambria suit against the Trust Company and the Provident Life and Trust Company suit for the foreclosure of the Belt mortgages, were fraudulently and conclusively brought, pursuant to a fraudulent scheme of the Belt Company and the Kansas City Southern Railway Company to defraud the creditors of the Belt Company, including the Trust Company; that there had in fact been no bona fide default in the payment of the Belt mortgages; and that the Belt Company and the Southern Company induced the Cambria Company to bring this suit, under an agreement to indemnify it from loss and expenses in connection therewith and to see that its debt was fully paid. The answer asserted that the Trust Company never, until the filing of the bill of complaint, had any knowledge or information that there was any claim or pretense in any quarter that it owed the Belt Company anything, or that the Belt Company did not owe it the amounts specified in the promissory notes executed by the Belt Company. It denied that any request had been made by the Belt Company for an accounting (as alleged in the bill) and denied that the Cambria Company ever had any information or belief that such a request had been made; and denied that the complainant in good faith desired an accounting.

On December 3, 1900, the Cambria Steel Company replied to the answer of the Trust Company merely by asserting that the answer was very uncertain, evasive and insufficient in law to be replied unto. (Rec. V. 2, p. 95.)

The receivers of the Belt Company filed an ancillary bill of complaint on November 20, 1901, through attorneys who also represented the Kansas City Southern Railway Company. (Rec. V. 2, p. 97.) This bill substantially repeated the allegations of the Cambria bill, except that in many instances the charges of fraud and breach of trust on the part of the Trust Company were enlarged upon. It alleged in addition to the allegations contained in the Cambria bill, that the Trust Company, while acting as agent for the Belt Company, took out of the earnings and assets of the Belt Company large sums of money which it pretended to expend for and on behalf of the Belt Company, but which in fact it did not expend for the Belt Company, and for which it never accounted; that the Belt Company furnished to the Trust Company large sums of money for the purchase of property to be held by the Elevator Company, the Amusement Company, the Townsite Company and the Central Improvement Company, and that the Trust Company, though often requested so to do, had never accounted for the same; that certain shares of stock of the Central Improvement were, though belonging to the Belt Company, issued to the Trust Company, and it disposed of the same, without accounting therefor to the Belt Company; and that $350,000 was furnished by the Belt Company to the Trust Company to be expended in fitting up Fairmount Park, for which the Trust Company never accounted.

Upon the filing of this ancillary bill, the Cambria Steel Company practically disappeared from the case.

On February 27, 1905, the Kansas City Southern Railway Company filed an intervening petition in the cause. (Rec. V. 2, p. 166.) This petition contained many of the allegations of fraud and breach of trust on the part of the Trust Company, made in the original and ancillary bills. It alleged, in addition to these allegations, that the Trust Company, while acting as agent and trustee of the Kansas City Northern Connecting Railroad Company, had taken 1130 of the first mortgage bonds of the Connecting Company, owned by the Belt Company, and worth $845,415:00; 16 second mortgage bonds of the Connecting Company, owned by the Belt Company, worth $7,200.00; 6250 shares of stock of the Connecting Company, owned by the Belt Company, worth $37,500.00. The petition also alleged that on or about July 20, 1899, the Trust Company took from the Belt Company 3920 shares of stock of the Connecting Company which it claimed to hold as collateral security for an alleged indebtedness from the Belt Company to it, and disposed of said stock for $19,885.71. The Southern Company asserted that the Trust Company was indebted to it in connection therewith in the sum of $995,415.00 and alleged that the lands of the Central Improvement Company and all the collateral held by the Trust Company for the alleged indebtedness of the Belt Company to it passed under the after acquired property clause of the Belt Company mortgage.

In its answer filed March 7, 1905, to the intervening petition of the Southern Company, the Trust Company, after putting in issue the allegations of said petition, asserted that the Southern Company, as the successor of the Belt Company, and by reason of the agreement made by it to pay the Belt Company debts, was liable to the Trust Company for that indebtedness. (Rec. V. 2, pp. 186, 200.)

On March 22, 1905, the Belt Company receivers filed an Amended and Supplemental Ancillary Bill. (Rec. V. 2, p. 202.) This bill fixed the amount which the Trust Company, while in domination and control of the Belt Company, took out of its earnings and assets, which it pretended to, but did not, expend for and on account of the Belt Company, and for which it never accounted, at $500,000. The bill enumerated a great list of other claims against the Trust Company, not mentioned in the previous bills, totaling more than $4,000,000 in amount. They were based upon charges of conversion, breach of trust, falsification of accounts and if we understand rightly plain stealing. Apparently the bill attacked every transaction between the Trust Company and each and all of the railroad and subsidiary companies from the organization of the respective companies down to that date. Among other things, the bill claimed that all commissions and trustee's fees charged by the Trust Company for its services, as agent, in disposing of the securities of the railroad and subsidiary companies, were unlawfully collected, and that the Belt was entitled to credit therefor. This on the theory that the Trust Company absolutely dominated and controlled said companies, and used them and each of them as its own instrumentality or dummy for its own benefit and profit, and that the Trust Company occupied a fiduciary relation to said companies, and that contracts with said companies for compensation were unlawful.

Many of the transactions attacked in this bill occurred more than ten years prior to the filing of the original Cambria bill, and more than 15 years prior to the filing of the bill in which the charges were, for the first time, made.

On May 1, 1905, the Kansas City Southern Railway Company filed its amended intervening petition in the cause. (Rec. V. 2, p. 269.) This petition set up, in addition to the allegations contained in prior bills, a cause of action against the Trust Company arising out of its breach of duty as a trustee under the Union Terminal Railroad mortgage dated February 1, 1893. The petition alleged that the Trust Company, unmindful of its duties as such trustee, sold the bonds of said company to innocent purchasers for value, and unlawfully and improperly diverted the proceeds of said sales from the purposes for which they were intended, and unlawfully and improperly used said proceeds to diminish from time to time the alleged indebtedness from the Belt Company to it; that bonds of the Union Company of the par value of $1,350,000 and of the actual value of $1,215,000 were thus diverted by the Trust Company from the uses and purposes for which the bonds were issued, as the Trust Company at all times well knew; and that after the completion and equipment of the Union Company, and when there was no occasion or necessity for a sale or disposition of said bonds, the Trust Company in violation of its duties as trustee, fraudulently sold and put afloat additional bonds of the Union Company.

In its answer, filed May 20, 1905, to the amended intervening petition of the Southern Company, the Trust Company, among other allegations, renewed its assertion that the Southern Company, as the successor of the Belt Company, and by reason of its agreement to pay the Belt indebtedness, was liable for the indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company. (Rec. V. 2, pp. 293, 311.)

On November 16, 1907, the Kansas City Southern Railway Company and the Belt Company and its receiver jointly filed a supplemental bill in the cause (Rec. V. 2, p. 477). The new matter alleged concerned three suits filed in the Circuit Court of Jackson County, Missouri, two on March 15, 1905, and one on July 2, 1906, by the Guardian Trust Company against the Kansas City Southern, and which had been set down for trial on the docket of that court on December 2, 1907. The first two suits had been brought against the Southern Company by the Trust Company, on the Belt indebtedness to it, on the theory that the Southern Company was liable for that indebtedness as the successor of the Belt Company and by reason of an agreement to pay that indebtedness as a part of the plan for the reorganization of the Gulf, Dock and Belt Companies. The third suit was brought by the Trust Company against the Southern Company on certain indebtedness owing to the Trust Company by the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company, on the theory that the Southern Company, as the successor of the Gulf Company, was liable for that indebtedness. The bill sought to have the prosecution of these three state court suits enjoined. It alleged that by reason of the prior institution of this action and the filing of the various bills and the various proceedings therein, the federal court had acquired a prior and superior equitable jurisdiction over all the parties to the proceeding and all the issues therein involved; that by the injunction issued at the outset against the sale of the collateral held by the Trust Company, as well as by its subsequent proceedings, the court took possession of and impounded the notes in question, and had assumed possession and jurisdiction over the notes, bonds, assigned accounts and other property held by the Trust Company as collateral to its pretended indebtedness against the Belt Company; and such property was alleged to be within the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the federal court.

On the day upon which this bill was filed, the court granted a temporary restraining order against the further prosecution of the state court suits (Rec. V. 2, p. 554). On February 22, 1908, this injunction was made permanent (Rec. V. 2, p. 561). A motion to dissolve the injunction having been denied (Rec. V. 2, p. 567), the Trust Company appealed from said action of the court to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit (Rec. V. 2, p. 569). The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the lower court and dissolved the injunction. See Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 171 Fed. 43 (1909) (Rec. V. 2, p. 573).

This was the second attempt to enjoin the two state court suits based upon the Belt indebtedness. In August, 1905, the Southern Company had filed a bill to enjoin the prosecution of the suits, and obtained an injunction. The order granting the injunction was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals in May, 1906. See Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 146 Fed. 337 (C. C. A., 8th).

The issues raised by the foregoing bills and the answers thereto were referred to a Special Master, appointed by the court on November 7, 1900 (Rec. V. 2, p. 94). Between January, 1903, and October, 1904, over 8,000 pages of testimony were taken, all on behalf of the complainants. In December, 1904, the Trust Company unsuccessfully moved the Master to require the complainants to close their proofs. Subsequently, such a rule was granted, and the complainants were given until March 15, 1905, to complete their case, and the Trust Company from March 15, 1905, to April 15, 1905, to introduce its proofs. But March 15, 1905, came and went, and the complainants were still introducing evidence. The entire ledger account between the Trust Company and the Belt Company, and each and every item thereof, over 6,000 in number, from the first day the companies transacted business together, in January, 1887, until the filing of the suit, a period of thirteen and a half years, were scrutinized and attacked.

In addition, the ledger accounts of the Trust Company with all the constituent and related companies were gone into, including every transaction with the Air Line, the Union Terminal, the Consolidated Terminal, the Central Improvement Company, the Elevator Company, the Second Street Company, the Amusement Company, the Northern Connecting Company, the Townsite Company, the Gulf Company and the Dock Company. The Trust Company was required to produce its vouchers, musty with age, covering every transaction shown on these accounts. Expert accountants were examined upon these papers, and testified for months at a time. The complainants were by an order of court given access to all of the books of the Trust Company, and for weeks they examined them. The Trust Company complained to the Master and to the court that the processes of the court were being abused in wasteful litigation, but the court declined to interfere. During the year 1905 almost daily hearings were had before the Master. In January, 1906, when the hearings closed, 36,000 pages of testimony had been taken (see Master's report, Rec. V. 2, p. 579). From 10,000 to 12,000 items of account had been scrutinized (Rec. V. 2, p. 580). The stenographer who took and transcribed the testimony was paid $25,000 for his services. The record of the hearing before the Master consisted of 58 volumes. The Master in his report, filed May 21, 1910, over four years after the hearings ceased, and nine and a half years after the case had been referred to him, consumed nearly 400 printed pages in discussing and deciding the issues involved (Rec. V. 2, p. 575).

The Master's findings of fact were wholly in favor of the Trust Company. The suit had been grounded upon the proposition that the Belt and its subsidiary companies were so dominated and controlled by the Trust Company that their officers and directors were merely agents of the Trust Company, and that the companies were conceived, organized and manipulated by the Trust Company pursuant to a gigantic scheme to defraud investors in their securities. The Master found that there was no scheme to defraud; and that the companies were not organized, dominated, controlled or manipulated by the Trust Company. For thirteen independent reasons, "either appearing on the face of the bills, or practically undisputed in the proofs," the Master found the bills to be wholly without equity (Rec. V. 2, p. 647).

He found that at no time did the Trust Company own a majority, or even a substantial minority, of the stock of any of the companies; that the dealings of the Trust Company with the other companies were in all respects legitimate and proper; that there had been no overreaching or breach of duty on the part of the Trust Company; that its charges for services in marketing the securities of the other companies were not excessive; that its position as trustee in railroad mortgages did not disqualify it from handling those securities, or from receiving the same in pledge; that the transactions between the Trust Company and the other companies were open, a matter of record, and that the bookkeeping was full, complete and accurate as to all entries; that the accounts between the companies had been regularly stated and audited each month by formal certificates exchanged by their respective auditors, "and that the books tallied to a cent" (Rec. V. 2, p. 648); that all the transactions attacked in the bills had at all times been known to the stockholders and bondholders of the respective companies, and had been expressly ratified by them without a single protest from any of them, and that "there was manifested, throughout many years, the most complete acquiescence in these transactions by the shareholders as a body."

As regards complainants' contentions that the Trust Company concealed the real nature of its dealings with the respective companies, in perpetration of the alleged scheme to defraud, the Master found as follows (Rec. V. 2, p. 671):

> "The record shows that all of those companies employed the voucher system of bookkeeping. The accounting between the companies appears to have been very accurate and correct, and all of the data and information, upon which the complainants predicate the right to an accounting, are shown on the books, both of the Belt Company and Trust Company. For every transaction that took place between those companies, a voucher advising as to the details of such transaction, was given by the Trust Company to the railroad company at the time, with the fullest details. The authority for every entry by the railroad company was in the shape of a letter from an executive officer, attached to a voucher, made up in the railroad company's office. If the Trust Company paid a bill, or a series of bills, for or on account of the railroad companies, the original bill, bearing the receipt of the party who got the money, passed to the railroad company's office and was there fastened to a formal voucher. All the transactions in the record are supported by a voucher, either cash or journal, and, in respect to the journal entries, in cases where the railroad company charged some account of its own, that voucher was made up with unusual fullness, and spread at large upon the books of the railroad company. From the testimony of all the expert accountants for the complainants and defendants, the Master is convinced that, instead of there being any concealment on the part of either the Belt or the Trust Company, the entries made by both were unusually full of detail, for book entries, and were such as would either reasonably explain the transactions to others or put them on inquiry to find out what was meant by the entries, and from which it would seem, then, that the charge of concealed fraud could not be sustained by the proofs."

The Master further found that all of the transactions complained of occurred long prior to the accrual of the complainants' alleged cause of action; that no attempt was made to excuse the long delay in seeking an accounting; that the transactions attacked were closed, executed and completed transactions, consummated years before the original bill was filed, and that substantially all of the claims set forth in the bills had been barred by the five and ten-year statutes of limitation.

The Master found that the Belt Company was indebted to the Trust Company in the sum of $639,658.86; that the huge claims made by the complainants against the Trust Company and in favor of the Belt Company were unfounded; that the Trust Company was entitled to retain the securities pledged to it by the Belt Company, as against the Southern Company's contention that they passed to it under the after acquired property clauses of the Belt mortgages; but that the Southern Company was entitled to an order and decree requiring the Central Company and its receiver to convey to the Southern Company the real estate standing in the name of the Central Company, it having been purchased, according to the finding of the Master, with funds furnished by the Belt Company.

The Master, as to the contention of the Trust Company that the Southern Company was liable to it for the Belt Company indebtedness, found in favor of the Southern Company (Rec. V. 2, p. 812-872).

On June 17, 1910, the Trust Company filed exceptions to the Master's report (Rec. V. 2, p. 892). The Trust Company excepted to the finding that the Southern Company was entitled to a conveyance of the Central Improvement Company lands, but did not allege error in the finding that the Southern Company was not liable on the Belt indebtedness. As to this latter matter the exceptions stated:

> "The Master has in said report stated as follows: 'That the Southern Company is not in any way liable for the floating indebtedness of the Belt Company,' whereas the Master should have omitted reference to or recommendation concerning the question of the liability of the Southern for said floating indebtedness of the Belt."

Five reasons were then given why the liability of the Southern was not an issue in the case.

On the day upon which they were filed, the exceptions were by the court overruled; and on June 25, 1910, the court entered a final decree in accordance with the findings and recommendations in the Master's report. Judgment in favor of the Trust Company was rendered against the Belt Company in the sum of $639,658.86; the Southern Company was awarded the Central Improvement Company lands; and the Southern Company was adjudged not liable on the Belt indebtedness to the Trust Company (Rec. V. 2, p. 903).

On August 10, 1910, the Trust Company appealed from said order and decree to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit (Rec. V. 2, p. 920). The assignment of errors, however, made no complaint of that part of the judgment relieving the Southern Company from liability for the Belt indebtedness, except to assert that the court erred in including any finding as to that matter in the decree (Rec. V. 2, p. 916).

On May 21, 1911, the Trust Company's appeal came on for hearing in the Court of Appeals at St. Paul. Minority stockholders in the Trust Company, alarmed at the failure of the Trust Company to assign error to the finding and judgment of the lower court that the Southern Company was not liable for the Belt indebtedness, employed Mr. Mecartney of Chicago, a former counsel of the Trust Company, to be present at the argument. Touching the Southern Company, the only argument made by counsel for the Trust Company was that the liability of the Southern Company was not in issue in the suit, and that the lower court had no right to include in its decree any adjudication upon the liability or non-liability of the Southern Company.

On May 26, 1911, Edward A. Shedd, Charles B. Shedd and Robert H. Law, the minority stockholders represented by Mr. Mecartney, filed a petition in the Circuit Court of Appeals for leave to file additional briefs in support of the appeal of the Guardian Trust Company (Rec. V. 2, p. 590). On June 16, 1911, the court entered an order directing the Trust Company, the Southern Company and the Cambria Company to show cause why the prayer of said petition should not be granted (Rec. V. 2, p. 968). On June 21, 1911, the Trust Company filed its return to said order, resisting the application of the petitioners to file additional briefs (Rec. V. 2, p. 970). The return states: "The question of the personal liability of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company for the debt of the Belt Company is not in issue and cannot be determined upon this appeal." Furthermore, counsel of the Trust Company appeared in person and contested the right of the stockholders to be heard (Rec. V. 2, p. 971).

Upon an announcement by the court that a tentative conclusion had been reached adverse to the Trust Company upon the issue presented in the return (Rec. V. 2, p. 978), counsel for the Trust Company asked and received leave to file additional briefs upon this question and upon the correctness of the Master's finding (Rec. V. 2, pp. 971-3). Later a revised brief was filed on behalf of the Trust Company, which failed, however, to ask for a decree against the Southern Company (Rec. V. 2, p. 974).

On February 19, 1912, the minority stockholders represented by Mr. Mecartney filed a second petition (Rec. V. 2, p. 973). It prayed the court for leave to make an additional assignment of error on behalf of the Trust Company and to file suggestions as to the final judgment, and "that in case this Court finds that the Southern Company is liable for the Belt Company's debts, a final judgment may be rendered here directing the lower court, upon the application of the Trust Company, to enter a decree against the Southern Company for the total amount of the decree formerly entered against the Belt Company, with interest and costs." This petition and the suggestions were allowed by the court to be filed, by order entered on that day.

Subsequently there was a complete reargument of the case before the court, counsel for the Trust Company still insisting that the liability of the Southern Company was not in issue.

On October 22, 1912, the Court of Appeals filed its first opinion, reversing the decree of the Circuit Court, and holding the Southern Company liable for the Belt debt. It did not however require the Southern Company to pay the debt of the Belt Company, except as a condition to its right to the Central Improvement Company lands and the collateral held by the Trust Company. Central Improvement Co. v. Cambria Steel Co., 201 Fed. 811.

On December 21, 1921, the minority stockholders filed their third petition. (Rec. V. 2, p. 1006.) The petition prayed the court as follows:

> "That this court embody in its proposed order of reversal to be entered herein in pursuance of the opinion heretofore filed—
>
> A special finding to the effect that the said litigation commenced by said Cambria Steel Company, and prosecuted by the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company in the way of an ancillary bill filed in this cause, which issues were raised, and said suits instigated at the instance and request of and prosecuted in reality on behalf of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, and the said intervening petition filed and prosecuted by said Southern Company were each and all instituted and prosecuted without good faith, and that said entire litigation has been trivial, wanton and oppressive.
>
> That thereupon:
>
> 1. This court direct the lower court upon entering the decree against the said Southern Company, as ordered by the opinion lately filed herein,
>
> (1) To reserve jurisdiction to inquire as to the amount of attorney's or solicitor's fees, stenographer's fees, expert accountant's fees, and such other expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred by said Guardian Trust Company in making its defenses to such bill and ancillary bill and intervening petition and in asserting its claims herein;

(2) That upon petition or suggestion as to the same being filed in said cause by the Trust Company and upon evidence taken by affidavits or otherwise as the court may direct, the said court make a finding as to the amount of such fees, costs and expenses;

(3) That it thereupon order the same to be taxed as costs in said cause and a further decree be entered against said Cambria Company and Southern Company for said amounts respectively, in favor of said Trust Company, and that it be awarded execution therefor—the said inquiry and taxation of costs not to delay the entry of the said principal decree, as heretofore directed by said opinion, and not to stay the collection of the same in any manner."

In January, 1913, the case was reargued in the Court of Appeals, and on December 2, 1913, the court filed its second opinion in the case. Central Improvement Co. v. Cambria Steel Co., 210 Fed. 696.

In said opinion the Court of Appeals reaffirmed its former holding that the Southern Company was liable for the Belt debt, but went further and directed a judgment against the Southern Company for the amount of said indebtedness. The court further held that all the property of the Belt Company then in the possession of the Southern Company was "a trust fund in control of the court," and subject to seizure and sale, and that said property was "charged with a trust in favor of the Trust Company for its debts and costs, and that the Southern Company now holds that property as trustee for the Trust Company."

Concerning the petition of the minority stockholders that costs as between solicitor and client be taxed against the Southern Company, the court said (210 Fed. 723):

> "A deliberate consideration of this petition and of the exhaustive arguments of counsel have, however, persuaded that inasmuch as the questions suggested came for the first time into this suit at the rehearing in this court, as no evidence has been taken relative to them, and as the evidence upon the issues tried in this case was not brought to this court, it would be unwise and might be unjust to adjudicate the questions presented by the petition of the stockholders. Moreover, as this court cannot rightly determine the questions relating to the costs to be taxed at this time, as there are established rules of practice concerning them, and as directions to the court below to open and try new issues might, and probably would, prolong this litigation through several years more, our conclusion is that our just course is to leave the taxation of costs to the court below under the principles, rules, and practice in equity."

In giving directions to the lower court concerning the terms of the decree to be entered, the opinion concluded (210 Fed. 724):

> "The decree should adjudge that the Trust Company may recover its costs down to the entry of the decree of the Cambria Company as well as of the Southern Company, and the court may apportion those costs between them, but not as against the Trust Company, which should be permitted to pursue either or both of them until its costs are paid. The District Court should reserve in the decree full jurisdiction to render such further decrees and take such subsequent proceedings in the suit as equity and good conscience may require."

The Southern Company appealed from the decree to this court, which on February 21, 1916, affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeals. Kansas City Southern Railway Co. v. Guardian Trust Company, 240 U. S. 166, 36 S. Ct. 334. The opinion of the court deals wholly with the liability of the Southern for the Belt debt, and does not mention the matter of costs; and no reference is made to the stockholders' petition regarding attorneys' fees. The opinion is relatively brief, in view of the issues involved, and concludes: "The case has been so fully discussed below that we think it unnecessary to go into further detail." Chief Justice White and Mr. Justice Van Devanter were of the opinion that upon the findings of the Master, the decree should be reversed, and therefore dissented.

The mandate from this court to the District Court (Rec. V. 1, p. 465), filed April 18, 1916, recited in full the decree of the Court of Appeals, entered December 2, 1913, as follows:

> "These causes came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, and were argued by counsel.
>
> On consideration whereof, it is now here ordered, adjudged and decreed by this court that the decree of the said Circuit Court, in these causes be, and the same is hereby, reversed with costs; and that the Central Improvement Company, H. H. Crittenden, Receiver of Central Improvement Company, in case No. 3489, and the Guardian Trust Company in No. 3490, have and recover against the Cambria

Steel Company, The Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, Edward F. Swinney, as Receiver of the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, and The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, their costs in this behalf expended in the respective cases to be taxed by the Clerk of this Court.

It is further ordered that these causes be, and the same are hereby remanded to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri, as the successor of the Circuit Court for said District, with directions to render a decree for the Trust Company in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion of this Court," * * *.

The mandate concluded:

"On Consideration Whereof, it is now ordered, adjudged and decreed by this Court that the decree of the said United States Circuit Court of Appeals in this cause be, and the same is hereby, affirmed with costs; and that the said Guardian Trust Company, Central Improvement Company, Cambria Steel Company and Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company recover against the said The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Twenty Dollars for their costs herein expended and have execution therefor.

And It is Further Ordered, that this cause be, and the same is hereby, remanded to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.

You, therefore, are hereby commanded that such execution and proceedings be had in said cause, as according to right and justice, and the laws of the United States, ought to be had, the said appeal notwithstanding.

Witness, the Honorable Edward D. White, Chief Justice of the United States, the thirteenth day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand Nine hundred and Sixteen.

JAMES D. MAHER,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Costs of Guardian Trust Co. et al.

Clerk	Paid
Printing Record
Attorney	$20.00
	$20.00"

On April 15, 1916, the Southern Company paid the Trust Company $821,623.28, said sum being agreed upon as an approximation of the amount due on the judgment, and being subject to check and correction thereafter. (Rec. V. 1, p. 129.) The Trust Company gave its receipt for the amount paid, said receipt expressly stipulating, and all parties understanding and acknowledging, that the payment and receipt of said amount should not affect the Trust Company's right to recover costs and attorneys' fees. On final hearing it was determined that the amount paid was in excess of the amount due, by the sum of $6,765.54, and that difference was adjusted between the parties. (Rec. V. 1, p. 130.)

On October 4, 1922, the Trust Company moved the District Court to enter a final decree in the cause pursuant to the decree and opinion of the Court of Appeals and the mandate of this Court. (Rec. V. 1, p. 16.) The Trust Company contended that it was entitled to have the court ascertain solicitor and client costs, and to have them taxed against the complainants.

On June 20, 1923, the District Court filed its memorandum opinion upon the issues raised by said motion.

(Rec. V. 1, p. 691.) The court prefaced its discussion with the following analysis (Rec. V. 1, p. 693):

> "The right to tax costs as between solicitor and client depends upon one, or both, of two theories recognized in the law.
>
> First. Where gross charges of fraud and misconduct have been made and not sustained, and where the main ground of the suit is shown to be false, unjust, vexatious, wanton or oppressive. In other words, where charges amounting to scandal and a misuse of the court are made and not sustained, but found to be baseless and unwarrantable.
>
> Second. Where a fiduciary relation exists between the parties, such as trustee and cestui que trust, or pledgor and pledgee, or principal and agent, and where the fiduciary is put to expense in the defense of an unfounded suit brought against him by such cestui que trust, or pledgor or principal, especially where charges of gross fraud and misconduct have been made against a fiduciary and have been found baseless and unwarrantable."

The court considered that in view of the findings of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the present case fell within both of the above classifications, and that the Trust Company was therefore entitled to solicitor and client costs. On June 25, 1923, the court appointed a Special Master to ascertain, take and state an itemized account of all costs and expenses paid or incurred by the Trust Company in its resistance of and defense against this litigation, including among other expenses, those for attorneys' fees, stenographers' fees, and expert accountants' fees. (Rec. V. 1, p. 19.)

The Trust Company, pursuant to the order of the court appointing the Special Master, filed with the Special Master its claim for costs as between solicitor and client, over and above the ordinary party and party costs, in the sum of $319,829.97, all of which had been paid and incurred by the Trust Company in the progress of the cause. (Rec. V. 1, p. 91.) Of this amount, $299,137.30 had been expended in payment of attorneys' fees. The Master, in his report, filed September 15, 1924, found and allowed as costs as between solicitor and client, the sum of $296,520.37. (Rec. V. 1, p. 46, 59.) The Trust Company, and the Southern and Cambria Companies (the latter jointly) filed exceptions to the Master's report. (Rec. V. 1, pp. 94, 106.)

On March 23, 1926, the court filed its memorandum opinion on the issues raised by the exceptions. (Rec. V. 1, p. 704.) The court had, upon reflection, changed the views expressed by it in its former opinion. The court, after a discussion of authorities, came to the following conclusion (Rec. V. 1, p. 714):

> "One cannot escape the conclusion, whatever he may think the law ought to be, that under the statutes of the United States, and the policy announced by its courts from highest to lowest, costs as between solicitor and client cannot be taxed against the losing party, however unjust and expensive the litigation, in the absence of the existence of a fiduciary relation, with the necessary incidents which create an exception of this rule, and that, in this respect, the practice which may prevail in the Chancery Courts of England can have no controlling effect."

It then determined that the necessary fiduciary relationship did not exist in this case, because the Trust Company was defending its own interests in the litigation. (Rec. V. 1, p. 716.) The court therefore held that the exceptions of the Trust Company to the Master's report, going to the power of the court to tax costs as between solicitor and client, should be sustained. (Rec. V. 1, p. 717.) On May 15, 1926, the court entered a final decree in the cause, taxing in favor of the Trust Company only party and party costs. (Rec. V. 1, p. 128.) This decree, reciting the payment of the judgment by the Southern Company, directed the Trust Company to deliver forthwith to the Southern Company all the collateral security pledged by the Belt Company to secure its indebtedness.

On June 18, 1926, the Trust Company duly appealed from said decree to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. (Rec. V. 1, p. 132.) On May 18, 1928, said court reversed the decree of the District Court. (Rec. V. 1, p. 749.) The opinion of the court fully upholds the right of the Trust Company to costs as between solicitor and client, and the power of the court to award such costs under the circumstances. (Rec. V. 1, pp. 722-749.) Guardian Trust Co. v. Kansas City Southern Railway Co., 28 Fed. (2d) 233. The court directed the following disposition of the case (Rec. V. 1, p. 748):

> "In view of the state of the record, the case must be sent back to the trial court to make the proper allowances for costs 'as between solicitor and client'. The special master's report has been made. Numerous exceptions have been filed thereto by both parties. Doubtless these will have to be passed upon. We see no necessity for the taking of further testimony. The amounts to be allowed are not controlled by what the Trust Company actually expended, and may vary widely therefrom. The allowances should be such as, in view of the facts and circumstances proved in this case which authorize them, will be reasonable and just.

The decree is reversed with instructions for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed."

The case was brought here on certiorari, allowed February 25, 1929. (Rec. V. 1, p. 825.)

ARGUMENT.

I.

The sole issue is the power of the District Court.

The issue before this Court, and the only issue, according to our analysis, is the power of the District Court under the circumstances of this case, to reimburse the Trust Company for any of the items covered by its claim for solicitor and client costs.

The District Court properly adopted, and considered itself bound by, the findings of the Court of Appeals. It said (Rec. V. 1, p. 703):

> "This court is passing no new and independent judgment upon the issues already litigated. The Circuit Court of Appeals, as it says, practically tried the case de novo, and made distinct findings. This court adopts those findings and bases its action upon them, and them alone. * * * To do otherwise * * * would be to disregard the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals to a degree amounting practically to contumacy."

The pertinent findings of the Court of Appeals, which the District Court, in its first opinion, thought sufficient to entitle the Trust Company to solicitor and client costs, are commented on by the Court as follows (Rec. V. 1, pp. 698, 699):

> "There is no escape from the conclusion that the Circuit Court of Appeals was of opinion, and in substance so found, that a plan was formed by the then guiding and controlling powers of the Southern Company to despoil the Trust Company of its property. * * * So that, the responsibility of the > Southern Company is judicially fixed for the initiation of all this successive litigation against the Trust Company, and the objects of that litigation are also clearly defined. The Court then finds that the Cambria suit, so inspired by the Southern Company, was wholly baseless and unwarranted."

In its second opinion, also, the District Court considered itself bound by the findings of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and conceived that those findings conclusively established the nature of the suit, its purpose, and the responsibility of the Southern Company therefor, the only question being the interpretation of the language (in the opinion of the Court of Appeals) "under the principles, rules and practice in equity." (Rec. V. 1, 705.)

The court sustained the exceptions of the Southern Company to the Master's report, because "one cannot escape the conclusion, whatever he may think the law ought to be, that under the statutes of the United States, and the policy announced by its courts from highest to lowest, costs as between solicitor and client cannot be taxed against the losing party, however unjust and expensive the litigation." (Rec. V. 1, p. 714.)

The Southern Company's brief in this Court in support of its petition for certiorari states (p. 15): "The court reversed its former ruling, and held that the law did not permit the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client."

The lower court, therefore, considered it judicially established that this suit was wholly baseless and unwarranted, and that it was brought and fostered by the Southern Company in pursuance of a fraudulent plan and design to despoil the Trust Company of its property. Evidently, therefore, in the opinion of the District Court, all the equities were in favor of the Trust Company. It was entitled to be reimbursed for its costs and expenses if the court had power to compel reimbursement. But the court considered that no such power existed.

Costs in equity are discretionary. But this is not a case where a court, considering it has power to award costs in its discretion, and in view of the equities denies them. On the contrary, the equities of the case called for the award. Costs were denied because of a presumed lack of power to grant them.

Under such circumstances, if the power actually existed, the lower court should be directed to make the award.

Seibert v. Minneapolis & St. L. Ry. Co., 58 Minn. 58, 57 N. W. 1068 (1894).

The Circuit Court of Appeals has decided that such power does exist. In three separate opinions [201 Fed. 811, 210 Fed. 696, 28 Fed. (2d) 233], it has found and conclusively established the facts which entitle the Trust Company to such costs if the court may award them. If this Court be of the opinion that the District Court, in view of the character of the litigation, the relationship of the parties, and the facts as found by the Circuit Court of Appeals, could properly have decreed reimbursement as to any of the items covered by the Trust Company's claim, the decision of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed, and the District Court should be directed to hear and determine the exceptions to the Master's report going to the particular items claimed as taxable costs, and to award those items found properly taxable.

II.

Reimbursement always awarded to pledgee for defense of pledgor's title.

Solicitor and client costs are properly taxable under various circumstances, shortly to be discussed. However, upon one ground, we believe that the right of the Trust Company to be reimbursed for its attorneys' fees and expenses paid and incurred in this litigation, and the power of the District Court to effect such reimbursement, are so thoroughly recognized and established that no appeal should be necessary to the principles justifying the imposition of such costs under other circumstances.

The Belt Company became indebted to the Trust Company, and pledged with the Trust Company certain collateral, to secure that indebtedness. The Southern Company attacked the validity of the pledge, alleging that the collateral passed to it under the after acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage. The Southern Company sought, by this litigation, to recover the pledged collateral. The Trust Company is entitled to reimbursement for the costs and expenses incurred by it in defense of this litigation.

A pledge is a bailment for the mutual benefit of the parties. The pledgee, in holding, preserving and realizing upon the security is acting for the pledgor as well as in his own interest. Because of this fact, the pledgee is entitled to reimbursement for costs and expenses, including attorneys' fees, reasonably paid or incurred in preserving the collateral and subjecting it to the payment of the debt, even though such reimbursement is not expressly stipulated for. Gregory v. Pike, 67 Fed. 837, 15 C. C. A. 33 (1895); Fagan v. Thompson, 38 Fed. 467 (1889); Ballingale v. Hunsberger, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 117 (1901).

The pledgee is under an actual duty to preserve the security, using due diligence to that end; and if a third person asserting his own title or right to possession, seeks by legal proceedings to recover the security from the pledgee, the latter is authorized and empowered to defend such suit or suits, to add the cost of such defense to the original debt, and, in case he prevails over the third party, to hold the collateral as security for the repayment of such cost as well as for the payment of the original indebtedness.

Fagan v. Thompson, 38 Fed. 467 (1889).
Planters Rice Mill Co. v. Merchants National Bank, 78 Ga. 574, 3 S. E. 327 (1887).
Furness v. Union National Bank, 147 Ill. 570, 35 N. E. 624 (1893).
Ely-Walker Dry Goods Co. v. Colbert, 124 S. W. 705 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1910).
Parker v. Watkins, Johnson's Reports 133 (1858).
Sandon v. Hooper, 6 Beav. 246 (1843).
Godfrey v. Watson, 3 Atk. 517 (1747).
Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 21, p. 238.
Jones, Collateral Securities, 3d Ed., Sec. 400.
Beames, Costs in Equity (2d Ed.) (1840), p. 24.
Daniell's Chancery Practice (1st Ed.) (1837), V. 3, p. 14.

In 31 Cyc. 826, the rule is stated as follows:

"The pledgee has a lien on the property for any expenses, including the attorneys' fees, reasonably incurred by him in keeping and caring for the property pledged, protecting it against liens, taxes and assessments, or otherwise protecting the pledgor's rights, in making sale for the enforcement of the pledge, in collecting choses in action, and other expenses incurred in rendering the pledged property available for the payment of his debt."

The pledgee, in defending the pledgor's title, is really acting as agent of the pledgor. It is well settled that an agent is entitled to be reimbursed for attorneys' fees incurred in defending suits brought against him by reason of acts done in the performance of his duties.

Whitehead v. Darling, 5 S. W. 356 (Ky.) (1887).
First National Bank v. Tenney, 43 Ill. App. 544 (1891).
Selz, Schwab & Co. v. Guthman, 62 Ill. App. 624 (1895).
In re Famatina Development Corporation, Ltd., L. R. (1914) 2 Ch. D. 271.
Williams v. Lister & Co., 109 L. T. R. 699 (1913).
In re Wells & Croft, 15 Reports 169 (1894).
Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bingham 66 (1827).

The Southern Company had no standing as an intervener, and no interest in the controversy (otherwise than through its representatives and dummies), except upon its claim of title to the pledged assets. Its allegation of ownership free from the pledge constituted a direct attack upon the lien and possession of the Trust Company and a denial of the right of the Belt Company to pledge the collaterals as it had pledged them. And the Trust Company, in defending, was defending the interest of the pledgor as well as its own interest. The Southern Company alleged that it owned the securities and that the Trust Company was indebted to it for taking and retaining them. If so, this must have been for the reason that the Belt Company had no sufficient title to sustain the pledge.

This brings the case squarely within the foregoing authorities, and we can conceive of no reason why the unquestioned rule established by them should not apply, regardless of the charges of fraud, and of the good or bad faith of the litigation, and of the other relationships of the parties.

It should be noted that the petition of the Southern Company was a petition for the recovery of certain specific items of property pledged to the Trust Company, or the proceeds thereof, on the ground that they belonged to the Southern Company. Its prayer was that the court require the conveyance to the Southern Company of all the real estate and other property standing in the name of the Central Improvement Company; that the Trust Company be required to assign to the Southern Company the account of the Belt Company against the Gulf Company, and to assign to the Southern Company the capital stock of the Northern Townsite Company; that the Trust Company be required to account for and pay over the proceeds of various other assets. (Rec. V. II, p. 185.) The prayer of the amended intervening petition is the same. (Rec. V. II, p. 291.)

All of these properties and assets, or stock representing them, were held by the Trust Company as pledgee of the Belt Company, and were alleged in the petition to belong to the Southern Company. It was an unquestioned attack upon the title of the pledgor. Counsel for the Southern Company, in their last brief thus state the issues under this intervening petition (p. 11):

> "First, was the petitioner the owner of the collateral security, or the properties represented thereby? Secondly, did the Trust Company assume a relation of trust with respect to the use of the proceeds of the Union Terminal bonds; and if so, was that trust violated? Thirdly, did petitioner assume the debt of the Belt Company?"

It stands admitted, therefore, as it must be admitted, that this petition constituted an adverse claim to the pledged property. Under such circumstances, the Trust Company was not only warranted in defending the pledge, but bound to do so, and it was entitled to its outlays in so doing. It is admitted also, that the petition charged the Trust Company, as trustee under the Union Terminal mortgage, with violation of its trust, a charge which will be considered later. The third issue, as to the liability of the Southern Company was, of course, not tendered by the petition.

The fact that the Southern Company at this time owned substantially all the stock and bonds of the Belt Company, is immaterial in this connection. Its petition was not filed as such owner, but as the purchaser of the pledged securities. Even though the attack upon the validity of the pledge be made by the pledgor, the pledgee is entitled to defend, and to be reimbursed for the costs thereof, in the same manner.

Hurst v. Coley, 22 Fed. 183 (1884).
Bay Biscayne Co. v. Baile, 73 Fla. 1120, 75 So. 860 (1917).
In re Baldwin's Estate, (1900) 1 Irish L. R. 15.
Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 21, p. 238.

If the Trust Company was entitled to reimbursement for its costs and expenses, as the foregoing authorities hold, the District Court had power to make provision therefor in its final decree of May 15, 1926. That decree, reciting the payment by the Southern of the Belt indebtedness, directed the Trust Company to deliver to the Southern Company the security pledged with it by the Belt Company. The court could and properly should have made the order for the delivery of the securities conditional upon the payment by the Southern Company of the amount expended by the Trust Company in defending the litigation.

Conditional relief of this character has often been granted. See Newton v. Consolidated Gas Co., 265 U. S. 78, 44 S. Ct. 481 (1923); Page v. Rogers, 211 U. S. 575, 29 S. Ct. 159 (1909); Meyers v. Block, 120 U. S. 206 (1886).

The power to impose conditions with reference to the granting of injunctions, was commented on by this Court, in Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433, 437 (1881), as follows:

> "The court, in the exercise of its discretion, frequently resorts to the expedient of imposing terms and conditions upon the party at whose instance it proposes to act. The power to impose such conditions is founded upon, and arises from the discretion which the court has in such cases, to grant, or not to grant, the injunction applied for. It is a power inherent in the court as a court of equity, and has been exercised from time immemorial."

Relief was conditioned upon the payment of costs in Dewey v. Stratton, 114 Fed. 179, 52 C. C. A. 135 (1902).

It was held in Atlantic Trust Co. v. Chapman, 208 U. S. 360, 28 S. Ct. 406 (1908), that the appointment of a receiver could be conditioned upon the assumption of liability by the plaintiff for the expense of the receivership, in case the assets proved insufficient to meet them.

The court considered that it had no power to make the order for the delivery of the collateral conditional upon the payment of the Trust Company's costs and expenses. Not only did it have such power, but the equities of the case demanded that such a condition be imposed. Should a pledgee be required by a court of equity to return the pledged property unimpaired to the pledgor, after being forced to expend more than the face of his debt in preventing a third party or the pledgor himself from unlawfully and wrongfully taking the security from him? The fact that the indebtedness was ultimately paid in full by the Southern Company is immaterial. It was not paid until the Trust Company's expenses in defending the unwarranted litigation had been incurred. The lower court did not do equity in decreeing the payment of the debt and the return of the collateral without allowing the Trust Company reimbursement for its proper expenses in preserving the pledge.

This alone should warrant an affirmance of the judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals.

III.

Before we enter upon a discussion of the various circumstances, under which solicitor and client costs are properly taxable, let us consider two preliminary contentions made by the Southern Company.

(a) The effect of the mandate.

It is first urged that whatever the law may be with respect to the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client, such costs cannot be taxed in this case, because the proper execution of the mandate of this Court on the former appeal required the taxation of costs only as between party and party.

The mandate affirmed, "with costs," the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and directed that the Trust Company have and recover $20 for its costs "herein" expended. "Herein" evidently means "in the Supreme Court" and the $20 allowed is the docket fee, or attorney's fee, provided by law in all cases. It in no way applies to or affects the costs below, which were covered by the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, expressly affirmed by the mandate.

The Southern Company in its brief in support of its application for certiorari, cites many authorities to the effect that "costs," as used in the mandate, means ordinary taxable costs, that is, party and party costs.

We concede the soundness of the authorities cited, under the circumstances to which they apply. But how do they help the case of the Southern Company? This Court awarded the Trust Company party and party costs in this Court. But it also affirmed the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, which sent the case back to the District Court for a proper determination and taxation of costs according to the rules and practice in equity. The Supreme Court made no determination whatever as to solicitor and client costs. The right to such costs was not before the court except as involved in that decree. It was not mentioned in the assignments of error. It was not touched upon in brief or argument. Neither in the opinion nor the mandate of this Court is there any reference to solicitor and client costs. Furthermore, the claim for such costs had not yet been filed; the question had only been saved for the District Court. Is it not, under such circumstances, rather extraordinary to say that this Court considered, passed upon and denied the claim?

The mandate is, of course, controlling as to the matters regulated by it. But the lower court can pass upon any point undisposed of by the mandate. Ex parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317, 20 S. Ct. 904 (1900); In re Sanford Fork and Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247, 16

S. Ct. 291 (1895); United States v. Pan-American Petroleum Co., 24 Fed. (2d) 206 (1927). The mandate of this Court was silent as to solicitor and client costs. If a mandate makes no provision for costs, their taxation is left to the discretion of the lower court. Murphy v. Loos, 32 Ill. App. 595 (1889); Brueggemann v. Young, 128 Ill. App. 200 (1906).

The filing of the mandate in the lower court did not terminate the jurisdiction of that court. It still had power to entertain any proper proceedings, not in conflict with the directions of the mandate. Baltimore Building and Loan Association v. Alderson, 99 Fed. 489, 39 C. C. A. 609 (1900); St. Louis & San Francisco R. Co. v. Barker, 210 Fed. 902 (1914); Clark v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 105 Fed. 552 (1900); Sizer v. Many, 16 How. 98 (1853). And costs, on any such subsequent proceedings, may be taxed by the court, in its discretion, even though the mandate contained a direction as to costs. Mills v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 226 Fed. 812 (1915); Title Insurance Co. v. California Development Co., 179 Cal. 734, 178 Pac. 857 (1919); House v. Amsdell Brewing and Malting Co., 117 N. Y. S. 796, 133 App. Div. 486 (1909).

Some misapprehension is possible of the meaning of the decision in Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245, discussed and quoted on page 21 of the Southern brief in support of the application for certiorari. The court in that case did not decide that after a mandate had gone down directing an equal division of "costs," there could be no allowance made to the receiver. The decision is merely that the allowance to the receiver (apparently made after the receipt of the mandate) did not have to be apportioned between the parties under the order directing costs to be apportioned, and should have been paid out of the fund in the receiver's hands.

If the allowance to the receiver was made after the receipt of the mandate (as it apparently was, though there is no definite statement to that effect), the case is in direct conflict with the Southern Company's contention as to the effect of the mandate in the present case.

The Southern Company's argument fails to take into account the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals. This Court did not simply reverse a decree of the District Court. It affirmed a decree of the Court of Appeals. That decree reversed "with costs," the District Court decree, and remanded the case "with directions to render a decree for the Trust Company in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion of this Court." (Rec. V. 1, p. 466.) Such a direction had the effect of making the opinion a part of the decree. Gulf Refining Co. v. United States, 269 U. S. 125, 46 S. Ct. 52 (1925). A mandate or decree may be construed in the light of the opinion, even though there be no such direction. Ex parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317, 20 S. Ct. 904 (1900); In re Sanford Fork and Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247, 16 S. Ct. 291 (1895); West v. Brashear, 14 Pet. 51 (1840).

The opinion in the Court of Appeals discussed the stockholders' petition for a finding that the litigation was instituted in bad faith, and for a direction to the lower court to find and allow in favor of the Trust Company attorneys' fees and the other expenses mentioned. The court concluded that since the evidence below was not before the court, and since no evidence had been taken relative to the amount of attorneys' fees and expenses which had been paid and incurred, the taxation of such costs should be left to the lower court under the principles, rules and practice in equity. (210 Fed. 723.)

In our opinion this amounted to a direction to the lower court to tax these costs according to equity practice, and did not authorize the court to pass upon the question whether such costs were properly taxable. But whether this be the proper interpretation or not, certain it is that the decree and opinion of the Court of Appeals authorized and empowered the District Court to award solicitor and client costs. And it was this decree which the Supreme Court affirmed.

The mandate of this Court reads: "It is now ordered, adjudged and decreed by this Court that the decree of the said United States Circuit Court of Appeals in this cause be and the same is hereby affirmed." And the mandate directs such further proceedings in the cause as according to right and justice, and the laws of the United States, ought to be had, "the said appeal notwithstanding." "The said appeal" is the appeal of the Southern Company from the decision of the Court of Appeals. The mandate means, therefore, that the District Court should proceed as though no appeal had been taken from the decree of the Court of Appeals. Hawkins v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co., 99 Fed. 322, 39 C. C. A. 538 (1900); The Sydney, 47 Fed. 260 (1891).

In the latter case, the court said with respect to such a situation: "The mandate merely informs the court that the appeal is no longer pending, and directs the court to proceed as it should do in view of that fact." If no such appeal had been taken in the instant case, certainly the District Court would have had power to tax such solicitor and client costs as are properly taxable in equity.

The case of United States v. Pan-American Petroleum Co., 24 Fed. (2d) 206 (1927), is a direct authority to the effect that the mandate in the present case should be considered in conjunction with the opinion of the Court of Appeals: The court in that case said:

> "There is no express order or direction in the mandate for the payment or allowance of any interest to any of the parties to the suit. Neither is this Court prohibited by it from allowing interest herein. Its text leaves the question of interest open and unsettled. But it does require us to examine the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals and to proceed in accordance with such opinion, and the law is that in such cases the direction to proceed consistently with the opinions of the appellate courts has the effect of making such opinions a part of the mandate as though at length set out therein. See Gulf Refining Co. v. U. S., 269 U. S. 125, 135, 46 S. Ct. 52, 70 L. Ed. 195."

The court then considered the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, construed it as evidencing the Government's right to interest, and thereupon compelled the defendants to pay interest. Here the mandate of the Supreme Court was interpreted in connection with the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals under circumstances precisely the same as those existing in the present case.

The case of Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, 34 S. Ct. 979 (1913), disposes conclusively of the contention that the allowance of twenty dollars attorneys' fees in the mandate precludes a further allowance. In that case, the Larabee Flour Mills Company brought mandamus in the Supreme Court of Kansas to compel the Railway Company to continue certain switching service. A peremptory writ issued. A Kansas statute allowed attorneys' fees to the successful plaintiff in a mandamus proceeding. Pursuant to this statute, the plaintiff filed a claim for damages and attorneys' fees. In the meantime, a writ of error issued from the Supreme Court of the United States to the Kansas Court, to review the judgment granting the writ of mandamus. The judgment was affirmed (211 U. S. 612, 29 S. Ct. 214), and a mandate went down to that effect. The mandate (as in the present case) gave the plaintiff its costs, including an attorneys' fee of $20.00. Thereafter, the plaintiff filed an amended claim for damages and attorneys' fees and included therein a claim for fees incurred in the United States Supreme Court. The Railway Company resisted the claim, one objection being that the mandate, in awarding an attorneys' fee of $20.00, precluded any further allowance of such fees. The Kansas Court allowed fees, covering services in both the state court and this Court. This Court, on writ of error, held the allowance improper in so far as it concerned services in this Court, since a state statute cannot competently provide for fees or allowances in the United States Supreme Court; but the court affirmed the award in so far as it covered services in the state court. In affirming the state court award, this Court necessarily held that the provision in the earlier mandate, taxing as costs an attorneys' fee of $20.00, did not preclude a subsequent and additional award of attorneys' fees in the lower court.

(b) The Act of February 26, 1853.

The second contention is that the Act of February 26, 1853, controls the present controversy, and that therefore no attorneys' fees can be taxed or allowed in this case in excess of $20.00. To sustain this proposition, the Southern Company, in its brief in support of the application for certiorari, cities the following cases:

The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377.
Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211.
Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497.
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530.
Missouri P. R. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459.
McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66.
Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556.
Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246.
Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63.

None of the foregoing cases are in point. The nearest is perhaps The Baltimore, 8 Wall. 377, and its force is detracted from by several circumstances. The case is an admiralty, not an equity, case. Furthermore, the opinion contains no discussion of the circumstances under which the suit was brought. The attorneys' fee claimed might very properly have been denied, even though the court recognized its discretionary power to grant it. Again, no adequate consideration by the court is given to the meaning of the Act of 1853. Without any discussion, the court merely states that fees and costs are now regulated by the Act.

Oelrichs v. Williams, 15 Wall. 211, is relied upon as completely dispelling any lingering doubt as to the meaning of the Act. But the statute is mentioned at no point in the opinion of the court. Indeed, the case involves no question whatsoever, as to the taxing of costs. The action is on an injunction bond. The decision is merely that attorneys' fees, incurred in defending an injunction suit, are not a proper element of damages in a suit on the bond. The question is one of interpretation of the language of the bond, nothing more. It is now, and always has been, perfectly well settled in the Federal Courts (although the prevailing state rule is to the contrary), that attorneys' fees are not a proper element of damages in suits on injunction bonds. But we see no basis for urging that this rule is grounded upon the fee bill of 1853.

Tullock v. Mulvane, 184 U. S. 497 and Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 184 U. S. 530, are in the same category. Both are actions on injunction bonds given in the Federal Court. Both are actions at law. In neither is there any mention of the Act of 1853. Indeed, in Tullock v. Mulvane, in connection with a contention that no federal question is involved in the case, the court takes note of the fact that there is no federal statute regulating injunction bonds in federal court proceedings.

Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459, is even further removed from the issue. This is the case, mentioned above in another connection, where the Supreme Court of Kansas sought to allow attorneys' fees for services in the Supreme Court of the United States, under a state statute giving the successful plaintiff in a mandamus proceeding the right to attorneys' fees. The case held that the state statute could not regulate the practice in this court. The Southern Company, in its brief, states that in this case "the prior interpretation of the Act of 1853 is reaffirmed." But the opinion at no point mentions the Act of 1853.

Furthermore, the action is one at law. All the cases cited by the court (with the exception of Oelrichs v. Williams, supra) were law actions. There is no discussion of any kind with reference to the power of a court of equity over costs. The sole question in the case is the validity of the Kansas statute in so far as it applied to the proceedings in this court. This is the express statement of the court, made in framing the issue to be decided:

> "The court placed its action in making the allowances in question, not upon the supposed authority of any act of Congress, nor of any practice of this court or rule thereof sustaining the same, nor upon any principle of general law, but solely upon the theory that a state statute gave the power to make the allowances."

McIntosh v. Ward, 159 Fed. 66, is not so obviously beside the point as the cases last mentioned, but we deem it to be no authority for the Southern Company's contention. In the quotation from the opinion of the court, set out in the Southern's brief, certain very pertinent observations are carefully omitted. For example: "And in Trustee v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, it was said that costs as between party and party are confined to the matters allowed by the fee-bill act." The Southern Company cites the case as authority for the proposition that the Act of 1853 controls the allowance of solicitor and client costs; and yet the court cites and discusses, with apparent approval, a controlling decision of the Supreme Court to the effect that the Act governs only party and party costs. The court comments fully upon the broad discretion vested in the chancellor respecting the allowance and apportionment of costs in equity cases; upon the fact that allowances may be made from a fund for services and expenses in conserving and administering the fund; and upon the power, in certain cases, to impose those costs for services and expenses upon the party personally, where the fund proves insufficient to pay them. Pretty clearly, the court does not consider itself foreclosed as to such matters by the Act of 1853. The case seems to hold, merely, that the circumstances were not such as to justify, on equitable principles, an imposition of the allowances in question upon the defeated party.

In substance, the action was one at law, brought by one partner against the other, for money due. Furthermore, as we read the facts, no question of the allowance of attorneys' fees was involved, but, rather, a sum of $2,000, borrowed by the receiver to pay labor bills, and a sum of $13,005.81, which the receiver took from the assets of the firm as and for his compensation. Nothing is said about attorneys' fees, incurred either by the plaintiff or by the receiver.

The Act of 1853 is not mentioned in Fraser v. Cole, 214 Fed. 556, Leary v. United States, 257 Fed. 246, Motion Picture Patents Co., v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63, or Marks v. Leo Feist, 8 Fed. (2d) 460; nor do any of these cases have any bearing upon the interpretation of the Act.

It must be apparent, therefore, that very little, if any, authority supports the Southern Company's contention that the Act of 1853 is controlling.

On the other hand, the decisions of this court and the lower federal courts conclusively establish that the Act regulates party and party costs only.

It has always been more or less customary, in most states in this country, to allow certain small items of attorneys' fees to be taxed as ordinary costs between party and party. These small items of attorneys' fees were and are allowed at law, as well as in equity, and often in criminal, as well as civil, proceedings. At law, their allowance is not discretionary with the court, but they are taxed, as of course and as a matter of right, in favor of the prevailing party.

That the Act of 1853 dealt with such fees only is wholly apparent from an examination of the prior legislation of Congress, and the other circumstances attendant upon the passage of the bill.

The Act of Congress of September 29, 1789, provided that the fees allowed in the Circuit and District Courts, at law, in equity and in admiralty, should be the same as those allowed in the Courts of the respective states.

The Act of May 8, 1792, fixing the compensation of officers of the courts of the United States, entitled the district attorneys to the fees allowed in their respective states.

The Act of March 1, 1793, fixed the fees of the counsellor or attorney in the District Court, in admiralty proceedings only, as follows: For drawing libel, claim or answer, $3.00; for drawing interrogatories $3.00; for all other services in any one cause, $3.00. The Act provided that in all causes other than in admiralty, such attorneys' and counsellors' fees should be allowed and taxed as are allowed in the courts of the respective states.

The Act of February 28, 1799, fixed the fees to be allowed to district attorneys as follows: For drawing interrogatories, $5.00; for drawing libel, claim or answer, $6.00; and for all other services in any one cause, $6.00.

The Act of March 3, 1847, "for the reduction of costs and expenses of proceedings in admiralty," provided that in cases where the libellant should recover $100 or less, no attorney's or proctor's fee should be allowed or taxed.

The Act of 1853 provided "that in lieu of the compensation now allowed by law to attorneys, solicitors and proctors in the United States Courts," the amounts therein specified should be taxed and allowed.

The Act begins as follows:

> "An Act to Regulate the Fees and Costs to be Allowed Clerks, Marshals and Attorneys of the Circuit and District Courts of the United States, and for other purposes.
>
> Be it Enacted by the Senate and House of Rrepresentatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That in lieu of the compensation now allowed by law to attorneys, solicitors, and proctors in the United States courts, to United States District Attorneys, clerks of the District and Circuit Courts, marshals, witnesses, jurors, commissioners and printers, in the several States, the following and no other compensation shall be taxed and allowed. But this fact shall not be construed to prohibit attorneys, solicitors and proctors from charging to and receiving from their clients, other than the Government, such reasonable compensation for their services, in addition to the taxable costs, as may be in accordance with the general usage in their respective States, or may be agreed upon between the parties."

Very evidently, the reference is to the earlier statutes above referred to; and the $20.00 docket fee is made to take the place of the miscellaneous small fees allowed attorneys under the earlier statutes and under the practice of the respective states, adopted by said statutes.

The debates and proceedings in Congress, attendant upon the passage of the Act of 1853, emphasize as the purposes sought to be accomplished by the Act, the following: (1) the establishment of uniformity as to fees throughout all the districts; (2) the abolition of the padding of cost accounts by the unnecessary and fraudulent multiplication of the various proceedings giving rise to fees. Under many of the state fee bills there was no limit on the amount of fees which could be taxed in any one case; and it was asserted in Congress that in many cases, even those involving small amounts and simple issues, fees had been run up into thousands of dollars. (Congressional Globe, Volume 22, Appendix, p. 207).

The New York statute, often referred to in the debates in Congress, was typical. It allowed the following counsellors' or solicitors' fees: A retaining fee of $5.00; for perusing and signing every bill, answer, plea, demurrer, and all interrogatories and exceptions, $2.50; for perusing and settling decree, $2.50; for preparing every special motion, $2.50; for arguing every plea, demurrer and exceptions, $5.00. See Blake, Practice of the Court of Chancery of the State of New York, 2d Ed. (1824), p. 558; also Walworth, Rules and Orders of the Court of Chancery of the State of New York (1839), p. 193.

Senator Bradbury of Maine, in charge of the fee bill of 1853 in the Senate, thus outlined the evils to be remedied by the Act (Congressional Globe, V. 22, Appendix, p. 207):

> "When this system (as established by the prior Acts of Congress) was adopted, it had the semblance of equality, which does not now exist. There were then but sixteen states, in all of which the laws prescribed certain taxable costs to attorneys for the prosecution and defense of suits. In several of the states which have since been added to the union, no such cost is allowed; and in others the amount is inconsiderable. As the state fee bills are made so far the rule of compensation in the federal courts, the Senate will perceive that totally different systems of taxation prevail in the different districts. In some, the district attorney receives no compensation beyond his small salary and per diem for a large > portion of his most important services; while in others his fees are enormous, and the amount of cost which the losing party is made to pay the attorney on the other side in civil suits is so large as to be flagrantly oppressive."

The Act does not cover merely the fees of attorneys, but of clerks, marshals, witnesses, jurors, commissioners and printers. And, as stated by the court in Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2 (1883), it "mentions the fees due the attorney in the same connection with those due the clerk and marshal, and requires them to be taxed by the same words it requires the fees of those officers to be taxed." This circumstance indicates clearly that the attorneys' fees referred to are those taxable, along with clerk's and marshal's fees, as between party and party. Furthermore, the Act authorizes the fees to be taxed by judge or clerk. The Act reads:

> "The bill of fees of clerk, marshal and attorneys, and the amount paid printers, and witnesses, and lawful fees for exemplifications and copies of papers necessarily obtained for use on trial in cases where by law costs are recoverable in favor of the prevailing party, shall be taxed by a judge or clerk of the court, and be included in and form a portion of a judgment or decree against the losing party."

Certainly therefore the statute cannot refer to those costs which are to be awarded within the discretion of a court of equtiy.

The very fact that the Act does not refer to the $20.00 allowance as an attorney's fee, but as a docket fee, is some indication that it is an ordinary item of costs, taxable, like clerk's fees, as between party and party.

This court has held, on numerous occasions, that the Act of 1853 covers only party and party costs. In In Re Paschal, 10 Wall. 483 (1870), the court said:

> "And whilst, as between party and party in a cause, the statutory fee bill fixes the amount of costs to be recovered, as between attorney or solicitor and client a different rule obtains."

Likewise in Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527 (1881):

> "The fee bill is intended to regulate only those fees and costs which are strictly chargeable as between party and party, and not to regulate the fees of counsel and other expenses and charges as between solicitor and client."

In United States v. Waters, 133 U. S. 208 (1889), it was stated that

> "Both before and since the enactment of the statute of 1853, courts in the exercise of their discretion have allowed counsel fees in many cases, without question when reviewed by this court."

People of Sioux County v. National Surety Co., 276 U. S. 238, 48 S. Ct. 239 (1928), held that under a state statute allowing attorneys' fees to be taxed as costs in actions on insurance policies, such a fee might be taxed in an action brought in the state court and subsequently removed to the Federal Court. The court said:

> "That the statute directs the allowance, which is made to plaintiff, to be added to the judgment as costs are added does not make it costs in the ordinary sense of the traditional, arbitrary and small fees of court officers, attorneys' docket fees and the like, allowed to counsel by R. S. Secs. 823, 824."

See also to the same effect:

Business Mens' Assurance Co. v. Campbell, 18 Fed. (2d) 223, (C. C. A. 8th Cir.) 1927.
National Surety Co. v. Lyons, 16 Fed. (2d) 688, (C. C. A. 8th Cir.) (1926).
Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 132 Fed. 570 (1904).
Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2 (1883).
Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Clark, 16 Fed. 20 (1883).
Ex parte Jaffray, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7170 (1869).

These cases state the rule in the following terms:

"It is contended in behalf of the defendant that as the statute of the state requires this allowance to be taxed as costs, it is unenforceable in a court of the United States, as Congress provided for costs in that court, and none other can be taxed in a court of the United States.

In our opinion this applies only to ordinary costs, and not to allowances for attorneys' services." (Business Men's Assurance Co. v. Campbell, 18 Fed. (2d) 223, 224.)

"Reading the whole statute together * * * in the light of previous legislation and the practice under that legislation, and the law of costs at law, in equity, and in admiralty * * * it is plain that these 'docket fees' * * * are a lump sum substituted for the small fees allowed attorneys and solicitors under the old system." (Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2.)

"The fee bill is intended to regulate only those fees and costs which are strictly chargeable as between party and party, and not to regulate the fees of counsel and other charges and expenses as between solicitor and client." (Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Clark, 16 Fed. 20, 21.)

See also Beach, Modern Equity Practice (1894), Vol. 2, Sec. 1015; and Street, Federal Equity Practice (1909), Vol. 2, Sec. 2034. The latter treatise discusses the $20.00 docket fee allowed by the Act of 1853, as follows:

> "The ordinary docket fee, or solicitor's fee, of twenty dollars, allowed by statute to be taxed in every cause that comes to a final hearing, is not variable in amount, and when taxable is not dependent on the discretion of the court. This item is therefore taxable as between party and party, and though it represents a solicitor's fee, it is not an item of costs as between solicitor and client, in the sense in which this expression is commonly used."

In addition to the foregoing direct authorities to the effect that the Act of 1853 covers party and party costs only, may be cited the following cases stating in more general terms that costs in equity are not regulated by statute:

Newton v. Consolidated Gas Co., 265 U. S. 78, 44 S. Ct. 481 (1923).
In re Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543 (1919).
Stallo v. Wagner, 245 Fed. 636, 158 C. C. A. 64 (1917).
In re Schocket, 177 Fed. 583 (1910).
The Gordon Campbell, 131 Fed. 963 (1904).
Tesla Electric Co. v. Scott, 101 Fed. 524 (1900).

In In re Schocket, supra, the court said:

> "A court of equity in extending an order for the taxation of costs so that it may include charges and expenses properly incurred, seems to proceed rather upon considerations of the substantial equities of the parties than upon ordinary statutory provisions concerning costs. 3 Daniell's Chancery, (1st Am. Ed.) p. 1586."

Attention may be called also to the fact that the Act, regulating, as it does, party and party costs only, deals merely with costs in the District Court, and makes no provision for costs or allowances for services or proceedings in the Circuit Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court. The act is one "to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals and attorneys of the Circuit and district courts of the United States."

Inasmuch as the Act regulates party and party costs only (and those costs only in the district court), it has no bearing upon the power of a court of equity to award, in proper cases, costs as between solicitor and client. Indeed, even as to party and party costs, the Act controls only as regards the items of costs mentioned. In many cases items have been taxed as costs which are not provided for in the statute. See to this effect:

In re Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543 (1919).

Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 208 Fed. 581 (1913).

Matheson v. Hanna-Schoelkopf Co., 128 Fed. 162 (1904).

Kaempfer v. Taylor, 78 Fed. 795 (1897).

Jerman v. Stewart, Gwynne & Co., 12 Fed. 271 (1882).

Spaulding v. Tucker, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13221 (1871).

Jordan v. Agawam Woolen Co., 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7516 (1869).

State statutes allowing attorneys' fees to be taxed as costs in certain cases, have often been given effect in actions brought in the federal courts. This has been done on the theory that where Congress has not regulated the subject of costs, the Federal Courts, in legal actions, follow the state rule. The cases holding such fees properly taxable are really decisions to the effect that the Act of 1853 does not cover such allowances. The following cases are examples:

National Surety Co. v. Lyons, 16 Fed. (2d) 688 (C. C. A. 8th Cir.) (1926).

Globe Indemnity Co. v. Sulpho-Saline Bath Co., 299 Fed. 219 (C. C. A. 8th Cir.) (1924), Certiorari denied, 266 U. S. 606.

Michigan Aluminum Foundry Co. v. Aluminum Co. of America, 190 Fed. 903 (1911).

Williamson v. Liverpool & London Ins. Co., 141 Fed. 54 (C. C. A. 8th Cir.), 1905.

The Southern Company admits that notwithstanding the Act, allowances for expenses and counsel fees within the rule of Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527, may be made. (Brief in support of application for certiorari, p. 32.) But if the Act is to be interpreted in accordance with the Southern Company's contention—that is, as covering solicitor and client costs—it is difficult to sustain the allowance in Trustees v. Greenough. There is nothing unique about the fees taxed in Trustees v. Greenough. That case is merely one example of the allowance of solicitor and client costs. So far as concerns the controlling effect of the Act of 1853, the situation in Trustees v. Greenough is precisely the same as in the present case. Trustees v. Greenough, and every other case since 1853 in which costs as between solicitor and client have been awarded, establish beyond question that the Act of 1853 has no bearing upon the present controversy.

IV.

The power of the Federal Courts in equity cases.

There being then no statute bearing upon the power of the District Court to allow solicitor and client costs in this case, the power to award such costs is dependent upon general equitable principles.

Article III, Section 1 of the Constitution vests the "judicial power of the United States" in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may establish. The distinction between law and equity is referred to in Article III, Section 2. It is elementary that the Constitution vested in the Courts of the United States the common law powers of the English law courts, and the equity powers of the then High Court of Chancery in England.

The following authorities conclusively establish that the equity jurisdiction of the Federal Courts is the same as that possessed by the High Court of Chancery in England at the time of the adoption of our Constitution:

Waterman v. Canal-Louisiana Bank and Trust Company, 215 U. S. 33, 30 S. Ct. 10 (1909).
Mississippi Mills v. Cohn, 150 U. S. 202 (1893).
Kirby v. Lake Shore & M. S. R., 120 U. S. 130 (1886).
Russell v. Farley, 105 U. S. 433 (1881).
Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425 (1868).
State of Pennsylvania v. Wheeling Bridge Co., 18 How. 460 (1855).
Fontain v. Ravenel, 17 How. 369 (1854).
Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. 359 (1839).
Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. 212 (1818).
Childs v. Ferguson, 181 Fed. 795, 104 C. C. A. 305 (1910).
Karns v. Imlay Rapid Cyanide Process Co., 181 Fed. 751 (1910).

Matheson v. Hanna-Schoelkopf Co., 128 Fed. 162 (1904).
Loring v. Marsh, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8515 (1863).

In the rules promulgated by the Supreme Court in 1822, we find the following:

> "Rule 33. In all cases where the rules prescribed by this court or by the Circuit Court do not apply, the practice of the Circuit Court shall be regulated by the practice of the High Court of Chancery in England."

Rule 90, originally adopted in 1842, and revised in 1866, was as follows:

> "Rule 90. In all cases where the rules prescribed by this court or by the Circuit Court do not apply, the practice of the Circuit Court shall be regulated by the present practice of the High Court of Chancery in England, so far as the same may reasonably be applied consistently with the local circumstances and local conveniences of the district where the court is held, not as positive rules, but as furnishing just analogies to regulate the practice."

Rule 90, though not carried forward into the present equity rules, adopted in 1912, has been expressly held to continue in full force and effect, its omission from the present rules being due to the fact that the rule had become so imbedded in the jurisprudence of the Federal Courts as to make its inclusion no longer necessary. Individual Drinking Cup Co. v. Union News Co., 250 Fed. 625, 162 C. C. A. 641 (1918); Lindley v. Denver, 259 Fed. 83, 170 C. C. A. 151 (1919).

V.

The Federal Courts in equity cases have power to allow solicitor and client costs.

The Circuit Court of Appeals, after reviewing the English decisions dealing with the taxation of solicitor and client costs, concluded that they authorized such costs in the following types of cases:

> (a) Where gross charges of fraud and misconduct have been made and not sustained;
>
> (b) Where the main ground of the suit is false, unjust, vexatious, wanton or oppressive, and so shown to be;
>
> (c) Where a fiduciary relation exists, such as trustee and cestui que trust, pledgor and pledgee, or principal and agent, and the fiduciary is put to expense, either in defending an unfounded suit, or in administering or protecting and preserving the trust property or pledged property. (See Rec. V. 1, p. 738, 28 Fed. [2d] 241.)

(a) The English authorities undoubtedly authorize the imposition of solicitor and client costs in the first type of case. See to this effect the following:

> Ex parte Simpson, 15 Ves. Jr. 476 (1809).
> Passingham v. Sherborn, 9 Beavan 424 (1839).
> Ibberson v. Worth, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 440 (1855).
> D'Oechsner v. Scott, 24 Beavan 239 (1857).
> Forester v. Read, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 40 (1870).
> Kevan v. Crawford, L. R. 6th D. 29 (1877).
> Fane v. Fane, L. R. 13 Ch. D. 228 (1878).
> Bruty v. Edmundson, L. R. (1917) 2 Ch. 285.

There is no fiduciary relationship in these cases. Nor is there any fund in court to be administered. The cases seem to evidence a policy for the discouragment of scandalous and impertinent charges. In Ex parte Simpson, supra, Lord Eldon said:

> "There would be much reason to regret that a court should not be armed with the power to protect parties from the expense, and its records from the stain, which too frequently arises from the introduction of irrelevant and scandalous matter."

The English rule does not impose solicitor and client costs in every case where fraud is alleged and not substantiated. The imposition of all costs in equity is of course discretionary. In most of the cases where unproven charges of fraud or misconduct have called forth the exercise of the discretion, the charges have been patently unwarranted and recklessly made or else without bearing on the issues of the case, and inserted with the evident purpose of creating prejudice.

We have found no American case imposing solicitor and client costs upon a plaintiff merely because he has made baseless and unwarranted charges of fraud or misconduct against the opposing party, there being no fiduciary relationship involved. Nor is there any case, we believe, which criticizes or repudiates the doctrine of the foregoing English authorities. It has been held, however, that party and party costs will be denied to the prevailing party in an equity case, where, wholly without foundation, he makes charges of gross misconduct against the other party. Mayhew v. Phoenix Insurance Co., 23 Mich. 105 (1871).

It is submitted that, in a flagrant case, a power in a court of equity to discourage reckless and prejudicial charges of misconduct by the imposition of solicitor and client costs upon the offending party, can be exercised to the betterment of judicial administration.

(b) The second type of case in the classification made by the Court of Appeals, is one where the suit is false, unjust, wanton or oppressive. The mere fact that the defendant prevails in the litigation does not fix the suit within this category. In most of the English cases where solicitor and client costs have been imposed in situations of this character, the action was so obviously baseless and unwarranted that bad faith in the institution of the action was reasonably apparent. See Dungey v. Angove, 2 Ves. Jr. 304 (1794).

Simpson v. Malherbe, 4 Gifford 707 (1865).
Palmer v. Walesby, L. R. 3 Ch. A. C. 732 (1868).
Turner v. Collins, L. R. 12 Eq. Cas. 438 (1871).

In Simpson v. Malherbe, supra, the court said:

> "When the court finds that a suit is instituted, not bona fide for the direct ostensible purpose, but with a view to some ulterior and improper purposes, its duty is to see that those who are improperly sued in such a manner have justice done to them by a full and proper indemnity against all the expenses which they have unjustifiably been obliged to incur."

On the same basis, such costs have been imposed in England for the making of excessive and frivolous amendments.

Deggo v. Colebrook, 1 Atk. 395 (1738).
Rennett v. Green, 1 Cox Ch. Cas. 253 (1786).
Masserne v. Lyndon, 2 Brown 291 (1788).

As prefatory to a discussion of the American cases dealing with the right to solicitor and client costs in connection with baseless and unwarranted litigation, a brief consideration of party and party costs in such cases may be helpful.

Originally, no costs of any kind were awarded, either at law or in equity. Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363 (1851). "But the plaintiff who made a false clamor, and either failed to try his case, or trying it, failed to sustain it, was amerced heavily, and the fine went to the King as a penalty for his invasion of a court of justice." Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2, 9 (1883). The statutes of Marlbridge (1267) and Gloucester (1278), and later statutes, "by constantly increasing severity, sought to discourage false suits by giving a defendant full costs against a plaintiff who failed in his action, and were especially severe on one who discontinued his suit, or was nonsuited for his own default without a trial; these costs to the defendant taking the place of the former fine to the King." Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2, 10 (1883). The statute of 17 Richard II, c. 6 (1394), is said to be the foundation of costs in equity. Beames, Equity Costs, 4. It provided "forasmuch as people can be compelled to come before the King's council, or in the chancery, by writs grounded upon untrue suggestions, that the chancellor for the time being, presently after that such suggestions be duly found and proven untrue, shall have power to ordain and award damages according to his discretion to him which is so troubled unduly." Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2, 10 (1883); Stallo v. Wagner, 245 Fed. 636, 158 C. C. A. 64 (1917). The statute of 15, Henry VI, c. 4, recited that "divers persons were greatly vexed and grieved by writs of subpoena," and enacted that "surety be found to satisfy the party so grieved and vexed, for his damages and expenses, if so be that the matter cannot be made good which is contained in the bill." Beames, Equity Costs, 7. The statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, No. 23 (1706), "for preventing vexatious suits in courts of equity," enacted "that upon the plaintiff's dismissing his own bill, or the defendant's dismissing the same for want of prosecution, the plaintiff in such suit shall pay to the defendant or defendants his or their full costs, to be taxed by a master." Beames, Equity Costs, 85.

Costs at law and in equity, therefore, arose out of and were grounded upon a policy, either for the punishment of a plaintiff who made a "false clamor," or for the protection and indemnification of the party unjustly proceeded against, or both. That the principle has remained predominant in legal actions is proven by the rule that costs at law follow the event of the suit. The losing party pays, and the winner is entitled to recover costs.

In equity, however, costs are discretionary. Newton v. Consolidated Gas Co., 265 U. S. 78, 44 S. Ct. 481 (1923). The court need not award them to the prevailing party. Indeed, it may award them against the prevailing party. The rule, that equity costs are discretionary, means that they are awarded according to the conscience of the court. Stallo v. Wagner, 245 Fed. 636, 158 C. C. A. 64 (1917). That is to say, they are awarded as the equities of the case may require. In re Schocket, 177 Fed. 583 (1910). And what are the "equities" of the case?

If the claim or defense prosecuted or urged is clearly without foundation, this fact will be taken into account in taxing costs. The Robert Jenkins, 22 Fed. 797 (1885); Johnson v. Blanchard, 7 Fed. 597 (1885); The Boston, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1672 (1846); In re Clark, 174 Ia. 449, 154 N. W. 759 (1915); Geer v. Finn, 196 Mich. 738, 163 N. W. 20 (1917).

One making a fraudulent claim will be taxed with costs. In re Schocket, 177 Fed. 583 (1910).

An assignee for creditors, with notice of facts which should put him on inquiry as to fraud in connection with the assignment, is not entitled to his costs. Hastings v. Spenser, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6201 (1853).

A party who takes a frivolous appeal, or makes a frivolous exception, for purposes of delay, is taxable with costs in connection therewith. Chicago Terminal Transfer Co. v. Bomberger, 130 Fed. 884, 65 C. C. A. 64 (1904); Equity Rule 67.

One who seeks relief to which he is clearly entitled, but with the ulterior motive and purpose of injuring the other party, will be denied his costs. The Ellen Holgate, 30 Fed. 125 (1887); Corkery v. Dorsey, 223 Mass. 97, 111 N. E. 795 (1916).

A complainant will be decreed his costs though no recovery is had, if he is misled into bringing suit by the misconduct or misrepresentations of the defendant. Case of Pettit, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11047; Twist v. Babcock, 48 Mich. 513, 12 N. W. 680 (1882); McCloskey v. Kirk, 243 Pa. 319, 90 At. 73 (1914).

A plaintiff who brings an unnecessary suit, when his claim is admitted and could be adjusted without litigation, is denied his costs. Wilcke v. Duross, 144 Mich. 243, 107 N. W. 907 (1906); Allen v. City of Detroit, 167 Mich. 464, 133 N. W. 317 (1911); McCloskey v. Bowden, 82 N. J. E. 410, 89 At. 528 (1914); Stafford v. Mott, 3 Paige 100 (1832); Gates v. Parmly, 93 Wis. 294, 67 N. W. 739 (1896).

The foregoing cases deal with chancery costs as between party and party. They seem to evidence a broad equitable doctrine that a court of equity will exercise its discretionary power over costs to effect, as far as may be, justice between the parties. Unwarranted, unnecessary, fraudulent and oppressive litigation will entail, upon the party responsible therefor, the duty of indemnifying the injured party, in so far as party and party costs can indemnify.

The American courts also impose solicitor and client costs in such cases.

In The Apollon, 9 Wheat. 362 (1824), attorneys' fees were awarded to the plaintiff in a suit in admiralty for the illegal seizure of a ship. Justice Story, delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> "The fifth item, allowing $500 as counsel fees, is, in our opinion, unexceptionable. It is the common course of the admiralty to allow expenses of this nature, either in the shape of damages, or as part of the costs. The practice is very familiar on the prize side of the court; it is not less the law of the court in instance causes, it resting in sound discretion to allow or refuse the claim."

Patterson v. Ball, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10, 823 (1809), was an action brought in the District of Columbia by a foreign executor, the action there being wholly unjustifiable. Upon dismissal of the bill, the defendant was awarded an attorneys' fee, taxable as costs against the plaintiff.

In The Elizabeth Frith, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4361 (1831), it is stated that in an action for seaman's wages, counsel fees will be allowed as costs if the defense is merely vexatious. The case does not involve solicitor and client costs to the defendant in an unwarranted suit, but, rather, solicitor and client costs to the plaintiff in connection with an unwarranted defense. The same principle, however, applies. In In re Wright, 16 Fed. 482 (1883), the court said:

> "Where an action has been unreasonably, unjustifiably, or improperly defended, so that unnecessary expenses have been incurred, I have no doubt > a court of admiralty may, in its discretion, as a court of equity may do in analogous cases, order the costs or any part of them, as may be proper, to be paid personally by the litigating parties."

In Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Walker, 104 Miss. 363, 61 So. 458 (1913), an attorneys' fee was awarded to the defendant in an unwarranted injunction suit, brought to restrain the prosecution of certain actions at law. To the same effect is Joslyn v. Parlin, 54 Vt. 670 (1881).

Spring Garden Insurance Co. v. Amusement Syndicate Co., 178 Fed. 519, 102 C. C. A. 29 (1910), though not involving precisely the same point, is of value in this connection. There actions at law had been brought in the state court on certain insurance policies. A state statute authorized the allowance of attorneys' fees to the plaintiff in such cases, to be taxed as costs. The actions were subsequently removed to the federal court. This was a suit in equity, by the insurance companies, to enjoin the prosecution of the actions at law. The court held that there was no equity in the bill, that the actions at law on the policies were entirely proper, and that the plaintiff should be required to pay the costs in those actions, including the attorneys' fee provided by the statute.

J. E. North Lumber Co. v. Gary, 83 Miss. 640, 36 So. 2 (1904), and Bank of Philadelphia v. Posey, 130 Miss. 530, 92 So. 840 (1922), hold that upon the dissolution of an injunction, improvidently granted, the defendant is entitled to an allowance for attorneys' fees.

In O'Neal v. Spivey, 145 S. E. 71 (Ga.) (1928), attorneys' fees were allowed to the plaintiff in an equity case, under a statute allowing them "if the defendant has acted in bad faith, or has been stubbornly litigious, or has caused the plaintiff unnecessary trouble and expense." The court held that the statute was merely a codification of the common law rule.

North Missouri Railroad Co. v. Lackland, 25 Mo. 515 (1857), was a condemnation proceeding, brought by a railroad company to acquire a right of way across defendant's land. After the filing of the Commissioner's report assessing damages, the company changed its proposed route and sought to dismiss the proceeding. The condemnation statute provided that the court should adjudge the costs of the proceeding according to equity. The court held that the company had the right to dismiss only upon indemnifying the defendant for all costs and expenses, including attorneys' fees, both in the trial and appellate courts, incurred by him. North Missouri Railroad Co. v. Reynal, 25 Mo. 534 (1857), is a companion case to the same effect.

A plaintiff who improvidently and without warrant secures the appointment of a receiver is personally liable for the receiver's costs and expenses, including attorneys' fees, when, upon final hearing or appeal, the appointment is held unwarranted and the receivership terminated.

Beach v. Macon Grocery Co., 125 Fed. 513, 60 C. C. A. 557 (1903).

In re Lacov, 142 Fed. 960, 74 C. C. A. 130 (1905).

In re Wentworth Lunch Co., 191 Fed. 821, 112 C. C. A. 335 (1911).

Myers v. Frankenthal, 55 Ill. App. 390 (1894).

City of St. Louis v. St. Louis Gas Light Co., 11 Mo. App. 237 (1881).

Weston v. Watts, 45 Hun. 219 (1887).

Hernandez v. Brookdale Mills, 232 N. Y. 552, 134 N. E. 568 (1921).

Anderson v. Marietta National Bank, 93 Okla. 241, 220 Pac. 883 (1923).

Delcambre v. Murphy, 5 S. W. (2d) 789 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1928).

The point is fully discussed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in In re Lacov, supra. as follows:

> "The question presented for review is whether petitioning creditors are liable for the expenses of a receivership in a case where upon commencing a proceeding against a debtor to have him adjudicated a bankrupt they have applied to the court and obtained the appointment of a receiver of his property, and the proceeding is subsequently dismissed as unfounded; the receiver meanwhile having entered upon his duties, taken charge of the property, and incurred expenses.
>
> There is no express provision in the bankruptcy act, which authorizes the court of bankruptcy to compel petitioning creditors to pay the costs of a receivership under such circumstances, and the power of the court must therefore rest upon its implied authority to require those to bear the expenses of a proceeding, which they have instituted without sufficient cause, and in the course of which they have invoked its assistance and asked it to put its machinery in motion for their benefit, in such a way that expenses will accrue, which must be borne either by them or the adverse party. Courts of equity frequently exercise this power in advance of taking action, and in the absence of any statutory authority. Thus, in granting an injunction, it is common practice to require the plaintiff to give a bond or make a deposit in the registry to secure the adverse party against loss if the process be subsequently vacated. The precise question, however, has been considered frequently and determined by the courts.
>
> In Knickerbocker v. McKindley Coal Co., 172 Ill. 535, 50 N. E. 330, 64 Am. St. Rep. 54, it was decided that where the property that comes into the possession of the court is insufficient to pay the expenses necessarily incurred by the receiver in its management, the deficiency may be taxed against the applicant for the receiver.

Couper v. Shirley, 75 Fed. 168, 21 C. C. A. 288, was an action to foreclose a mortgage in which, at the instance of the plaintiff, a receiver of the rents and profits of the mortgaged premises was appointed, and subsequently, upon the ground that the defendant was entitled to the rents and profits during the pendency of the action, the court required the receiver to pay them over, without compensation for his expenses and services, to the defendant. Upon an appeal by the receiver the Circuit Court of Appeals said:

'It may be that some provision ought to have been made for his pay, but it is clear to our minds that upon the facts presented in this case the party who improperly procured the appointment of the receiver should have been required, if the receiver was entitled to anything, to pay his expenses and services.' "

This court fully recognized the power of a court to impose upon the plaintiff costs of a receivership improvidently granted, in Atlantic Trust Co. v. Chapman, 208 U. S. 360, 28 S. Ct. 406 (1908). In that case, however, the imposition of such costs was denied, on the ground that the application for the receiver was reasonable under the circumstances.

The plaintiff has also been decreed to pay the expenses of a receivership, including attorneys' fees, when the receivership estate has been insufficient in amount to meet such costs. Buell v. Kanawha Lumber Corp., 201 Fed. 762 (1912); Ephriam v. Pacific Bank, 129 Cal. 589, 62 Pac. 177 (1900).

In re Schockett, 177 Fed. 583 (1910), though not precisely in point, is persuasive in this connection. The claimant of property in the hands of a trustee in bankruptcy filed a reclamation petition against the trustee.

The petition was dismissed as fraudulent and wholly unwarranted. The trustee was awarded, as part of the costs, charges and expenses incurred by him in preserving the property during the pendency of the petition. Note the language of the court:

> "The petitioner in reclamation having made application to a court exercising chancery powers in the administration of the bankrupt's assets, seeking a determination of his right to have returned to him specific property held by the trustee for the benefit of the creditors, is justly chargeable for such necessary expenses in the custody of the goods as were occasioned by the proceedings instituted by him, and which would not have been incurred, but for his intervention. To cast upon the property belonging to the creditors the costs of preservation pending the fraudulent claim of an intervener is contrary to equity. I am of the opinion that the court has authority to so extend an order for the taxation of costs against the intervener as to include a direction to tax charges and expenses of custody, as well as ordinary costs. * * * "

A public policy in favor of the imposition of solicitor and client costs against one who instigates an unwarranted and baseless suit, is evidenced by various statutes and rules of court imposing costs and attorneys' fees in certain cases where unreasonable or unwarranted claims or defenses are insisted upon. State statutes are very common providing for the allowance of attorneys' fees in action on insurance policies and on claims against common carriers, not paid or settled within a certain time after the cause of action accrues. In the following cases, statutes of this character were given effect:

> Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Nye-Schneider-Fowler Co., 260 U. S. 35, 43 S. Ct. 55 (1922).

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Harris, 234 U. S. 412, 34 S. Ct. 790 (1913).
Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Cade, 233 U. S. 642, 34 S. Ct. 678 (1914).
Farmers & Merchants Insurance Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 23 S. Ct. 565 (1902).
Home Life Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 188 U. S. 726, 23 S. Ct. 380 (1902).
Iowa Life Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 187 U. S. 335, 23 S. Ct. 126 (1902).
Fidelity Mutual Life Assn. v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 S. Ct. 662 (1901).

The purpose of such statutes is well indicated by the following statement of the court in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Cade, supra:

> "Manifestly, the purpose is merely to require the defendant to reimburse the plaintiff for a part of his expenses not otherwise recoverable as 'costs of suit.' So far as it goes, it imposes only compensatory damages upon a defendant who, in the judgment of the legislature, unreasonably delays and resists payment of a just demand. The outlay for an attorney's fee is a necessary consequence of the litigation, and since it must fall upon one party or the other, it is reasonable to impose it upon the party whose refusal to pay a just claim renders the litigation necessary. The allowance of ordinary costs of suit to the prevailing party rests upon the same principle. 2 Bacon Abr. Title Costs. Numerous cases in the state courts have sustained similar legislation. Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 339, 334, 346, 30 L. R. A. 491, 42 N. E. 386; Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 82 Iowa 312, 340, 12 L. R. A. 436, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 584, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477, 48 N. W. 98; Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 63 Minn. 384, 388, 31 L. R. A. 553, 65 N. W. 652; Wortman v. Kleinschmidt, 12 Mont. 316, 330, 30 Pac. 280. If a reasonable penalty may be imposed for failure to satisfy a demand found to be just, it follows a fortiori that costs and an attorney's fee may be. See Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 105, 43 L. Ed. 909, 913, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 304, 47 L. Ed. 821, 825, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 565."

Title 49, Sections 8 and 16 (2), United States Code Annotated, provides for an allowance of attorneys' fees, to be taxed as costs, in both trial and appellate courts, in certain cases under the Interstate Commerce Act, where the defendant carrier fails, for a stated period, to comply with the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Louisville & N. R. Co., v. Dickerson, 191 Fed. 705, 112 C. C. A. 295 (1911). The provision was upheld by this court, in Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 U. S. 412, 35 S. Ct. 328 (1914), in the following terms:

"The contention that the provision for an attorney's fee for services in the suit is invalid as being purely arbitrary, and as imposing a penalty for merely failing to pay a debt, is without merit. The provision is leveled against common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, a quasi public business, and is confined to cases wherein a recovery is had for damages resulting from the carrier's violation of some duty imposed in the public interest by the act to regulate commerce. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 208, 55 L. Ed. 167, 183, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 7, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164. One of its purposes is to promote a closer observance by carriers of the duties so imposed; and that there is also a purpose to encourage the payment, without suit, of just demands, does not militate against its validity. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co.

v. Cade, 233 U. S. 642, 651, 58 L. Ed. 1135, 1138, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 678, and cases cited. It requires that the fee be reasonable and fixed by the court, and does not permit it to be taxed against the carrier until the plaintiff's demand has been adjudged upon full inquiry to be valid. In these circumstances the validity of the provision is not doubtful, but certain."

Mangnetto v. Crankshaw, 26 R. I. 453, 59 At. 309 (1904), gives effect to a state statute allowing a counsel fee to the opposing party when a demurrer is overruled. Title 28, Section 824, United States Code Annotated, provides that if any informer on a penal statute, to whom the penalty or any part thereof, if recovered, is directed to accrue, discontinues his suit or prosecution, or is nonsuited therein, or if upon trial judgment is rendered in favor of the defendant, such informer shall be liable to the clerk, marshal and attorney for the fees of such prosecution. Title 28, Section 819, United States Code Annotated, provides that if in any suit against officers making seizures under any act regulating duties on imports, the plaintiff is nonsuited, or judgment is passed against him, the defendant shall recover double costs. Statutes and court rules penalize the multiplication of proceedings in a cause, increasing costs unreasonably and vexatiously. Title 28, Sections 825, 829, United States Code Annotated; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Steiner, 201 Fed. 63, 119 C. C. A. 401 (1912); Equity Rules 67, 76. Statutes are common imposing attorneys' fees upon or otherwise penalizing, parties taking frivolous appeals. Wittenberg v. Fisher, 183 Mo. App. 347, 166 S. W. 1106 (1914); Syndicate Imp. Co. v. Bradley, 6 Wyo. 171, 43 Pac. 79, 44 Pac. 60 (1896).

Attorneys' fees (in addition to the $20 fee provided by the Act of 1853) are also allowed the successful party in patent and copyright infringement cases, under the laws of the United States. Title 17, Section 40, United States Code Annotated; E. G. Staude Mfg. Co. v. Labombarbe, 243 Fed. 362, 156 C. C. A. 142 (1917).

The foregoing American authorities indicate that in this country, as well as in England, a public policy in favor of the discouragement of and indemnification for litigation which is wholly baseless and unwarranted, justifies a court of equity in imposing solicitor and client costs upon parties offending in that behalf. The statutes, as a matter of course, cannot warrant any action not within their terms; but they certainly represent the extension of a principle already established by courts of equity under similar circumstances.

(c) The third type of case discussed by the Court of Appeals, in which the court considered the pertinent authorities to allow solicitor and client costs, concerned the fiduciary relationships of trustee and beneficiary, pledgor and pledgee, and principal and agent, where the fiduciary is put to expense, either in defending an unfounded suit, or in administering or protecting and preserving the trust or pledged property.

The Southern Company, in its brief supporting the application for certiorari, seeks to explain away all the numerous cases in this third classification, as follows (p. 32):

> "It is a general principle that the trust estate must bear the expenses of its administration. It is also a general principle that where one of many parties having a common interest in the trust fund, at his own expense takes proper proceedings to save it from destruction and to restore it to the purposes of the trust, he is entitled to reimbursement, either out of the fund itself or by a proportionate contribution from those who accept the benefit of his efforts.

> This rule, however, has, we contend, no application whatsoever to the present case."

The implication is that solicitor and client costs are payable only out of a fund, either held by an express trustee or recovered from a constructive trustee. The right to recover such costs is not, however, so limited.

A trustee, guilty of no misconduct and reasonably defending an action brought against him by the cestui to compel a conveyance of trust assets, is entitled to an allowance for attorneys' fees, payable out of the trust fund, if one be available. Fleming v. Wilson, 6 Bush (69 Ky.) 610 (1869); Clark v. Anderson, 13 Bush (76 Ky.) 111 (1877); In re Starr, 103 At. 392 (N. J.) (1918); Biddle's Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 340 (1877); Lycan v. Miller, 56 Mo. App. 79 (1894). He has this right, in the ordinary case, even though the cestui prevails in the litigation. Darby v. Gilligan, 37 W. Va. 59, 16 S. E. 507 (1892).

But if there be no fund out of which such an allowance can be paid, or if, though such a fund exists, the action by the cestui is wholly baseless and unwarranted, or recklessly brought, then the allowance of attorneys' fees to the trustee will be taxed as costs against the cestui personally. Minuse v. Cox, 5 Johns. Ch. 441 (1821); Thome v. Allen, 24 Ky. L. R. 987, 70 S. W. 410, 71 S. W. 431 (1903); Turner v. Collins, L. R. 12 Eq. Cas. 438 (1871). Or, in certain instances, the fees allowed will be taxed against the plaintiff's share of the trust estate. Patterson v. Northern Trust Co., 286 Ill. 564, 122 N. E. 55 (1919); In re Chenell, L. R. 8 Ch. D. 492 (1877).

The rule is so stated in Halsbury, Laws of England, V. 28, p. 161:

> "And the cestui que trust or his solicitor may be ordered to bear the cost of the proceedings personally, if they have been commenced wrongfully or too hastily."

A similar statement appears in the three leading treatises on the law of trusts (two by American authors, and one English). In Perry, Trusts and Trustees, 7th Ed. (1929), V. 2, Sec. 894, it is said:

> "The general rule is, that trustees shall have their costs either out of the trust fund, or from the cestuis que trust personally (upon the principle that he should be reimbursed all the expenses to which he has been put without his own fault by reason of his being a trustee). If there is a fund within the control of the court, they may have their costs as between solicitor and client. Where there is no fund within control of the court, if the cestuis que trust bring the trustees before it to obtain a direction as to the rights of the parties, or the mode of administration, and the trustees are free from all blame or fault, they are entitled to costs against the cestuis que trust personally, to be taxed as between solicitor and client."

See also Hill on Trustees, (1867) p. 566, and Lewin on Trusts, 8th Ed. (1891), V. 3, p. 987, to the same effect.

In a proper suit by the cestui que trust against the trustee, to enforce the fiduciary obligation, whether the defendant be an express or constructive trustee, the prevailing cestui is entitled to solicitor and client costs. In re Clark, 174 Ia. 499, 154 N. W. 759 (1915); Attorney General v. Old South Society, 13 Allen 474 (1866); McGaw v. Acker, Merrall and Condit Co., 111 Md. 153, 73 At. 731 (1909); Woodworth v. Old Second National Bank, 154 Mich. 459, 118 N. W. 581 (1908); Madden v. Rosseter, 192 N. Y. S. 113, 117 Misc. Rep. 244 (1921); American National Bank v. Warner, 176 S. W. 863 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1915).

In McGaw v. Acker, Merrall and Condit Co., Woodworth v. Old Second National Bank, and Madden v. Rosseter, supra, the allowance was not out of any fund in the hands of the trustee, or of the court, but was imposed personally against the trustee, over and above and in addition to his obligation as a fiduciary.

Cases of the type referred to by the Southern Company, where one who recovers or preserves a fund for the benefit of himself and others is held entitled to an allowance of attorneys' fees out of the fund, are quite numerous. Trustees v. Greenough, 105 U. S. 527 (1881), is the leading case. There are many other cases of the same type, mostly creditors' and stockholders' bills, a late decision being Hutchinson Box Board & Paper Co. v. Van Horn, 299 Fed. 424 (C. C. A. 8th Cir.) (1924).

A fund is recovered or preserved in such cases, and attorneys' fees are paid out of the fund. But the existence of the fund, as such, is not the basis of the court's power to award the fees. There is no magic in the word "fund." The mere fact that there is a fund does not empower a court to pay attorneys' fees out of it. The allowance of attorneys' fees in such cases is justified on the ground that the plaintiff, in recovering or preserving the fund, is acting in a fiduciary capacity toward those entitled to share in the fund. That this is the real basis of the doctrine is clearly indicated by the following excerpt from the opinion in Trustees v. Greenough, supra:

> "As to the point made by the appellants, that the complainant is only a creditor, seeking satisfaction of his debt, and cannot be regarded in the light of a trustee, and therefore is not entitled to an allowance for any expenses or counsel fees beyond taxed costs as between party and party, a great deal may be said. In ordinary cases the position of the appellants may be correct. But in a case like the present, where the bill was filed not only in behalf of the complainant himself, but in behalf of the other bondholders having an equal interest in the fund; and where the bill sought to rescue that fund from waste and destruction arising from the neglect and misconduct of the trustees, and to bring it into court for administration according to the purposes of the trust; and where all this has been done; and done at great expense and trouble on the part of the complainant; and the other bondholders have come in and participated in the benefits resulting from his proceedings—if the complainant is not a trustee, he has at least acted the part of a trustee in relation to the common interest. He may be said to have saved the fund for the cestuis que trust, and to have secured its proper application to their use."

It is to be observed that the term "fund," as used in the foregoing cases, does not refer to a fund in the hands of the court, or a fund being administered by the court. It is a fund in the possession of the defendant. Indeed, in many of the cases, there is no "fund" at all, in the ordinary sense. No particular property is sought to be recovered in many stockholders' and creditors' bills, but a money judgment is asked, and obtained, against defaulting directors or parties to whom property has been conveyed in fraud of creditors. To be sure, the liability of the defendant is, in a sense, a fund, in that it is realized upon for the benefit of the corporation or the creditors. But in none of these cases is there any estate in the process of administration by the court.

There are cases where a fund is in court, in process of administration. Instance the partition cases, and the receivership proceedings and the mortgage foreclosure cases. In all of these, attorneys' fees may be, and in regular course are, allowed, payable out of the fund in court. But the court's power to make the allowance does not grow out of or depend upon the existence of the fund.

In suits to construe or establish wills, brought by trustees or executors, there is, or may be, no fund of any kind in court; yet attorneys' fees are properly allowed and taxed as costs in such cases. Williams v. MacDougall, 39 Cal. 80 (1870); Abbott v. Bradstreet, 3 Allen 587 (1862); Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 291 (1866); In re Neil's Will, 172 N. Y. S. 79, 184 App. Div. 507; Re Davies; Jenkins v. Davies, 64 L. T. R. 824 (1891); Perry, Trusts and Trustees, 7th Ed. (1929), Vol. 2, Sec. 891. The power of the court to award attorneys' fees in all the foregoing types of cases, is an incident of the control of a court of equity over trusts and of its jurisdiction to protect and indemnify trustees. In all of the cases mentioned, the party to whom the award was made was acting in a fidudiary capacity.

Attorneys' fees to the petitioning creditors in involuntary bankruptcy are allowed on the same theory. In re Mead, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9364 (1871); Ex parte Jaffray, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7170 (1869). (These cases arose under the Bankruptcy Act of 1867, which contained no provision for such fees.) Likewise, attorneys' fees incurred by an assignee for creditors are a proper charge in his favor. Randolph v. Scruggs, 190 U. S. 533, 23 S. Ct. 710 (1902); Bramble v. Brett, 230 Fed. 385, 144 C. C. A. 527 (1916); In re Stewart, 179 Fed. 222, 102 C. C. A. 348 (1910).

The plaintiff in an interpleader suit is entitled to such an allowance. Louisiana State Lottery Co. v. Clark, 16 Fed. 20 (1883). Also an heir successfully resisting the allowance of a claim against the decedent's estate. Koelble v. Runyan, 158 N. E. 179 (Ohio) (1927). Likewise an heir, and an administrator, setting aside fraudulent conveyances by the decedent. Niday v. Graef, 279 Fed. 941 (C. A. C., 9th Cir.) (1922); Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 311, 18 S. Ct. 129 (1897). And a creditor successfully resisting the claim of a mortgagee to the proceeds of a vessel sold in a mechanic's lien suit. Shannon v. Angelique, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12, 705 (1856). A partial assignee of a claim suing to adjust rights between himself and a subsequent assignee is entitled to attorneys' fees out of the proceeds of the claim. Pickett & Sexton v. School District of Kansas City, 193 Mo. App. 519, 186 S. W. 533 (1916).

Taxpayers who bring a bill to enjoin a municipality from paying a void note, are allowed their counsel fees, taxed as costs. Frost v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 6 Allen 152 (1863). An attaching creditor whose lien, on the subsequent bankruptcy of the debtor, is preserved for the benefit of the estate, is entitled to an allowance for attorneys' fees. Receivers of Virginia Iron, Coal & Coke Co. v. Staake, 133 Fed. 717, 66 C. C. A. 547 (1904). In a suit by a surviving partner against the widow and heirs of the deceased partner, for an accounting, attorneys' fees are allowable. Patrick v. Patrick, 71 N. J. E. 347, 63 At. 848 (1906).

In all the foregoing cases a fiduciary relation exists or is enforced. One party, though generally acting in his own interest as well, at the same time acts as trustee for others. If he performs that office properly, he will not be penalized and put out of pocket by being compelled to pay the cost of the litigation.

From the foregoing discussion it is apparent that the authorities fully sustain the power of the court to tax costs as between solicitor and client in the third type of case considered by the Court of Appeals.

We wish to cite, in addition, on the right to such costs in general, the following:

Canter v. American & Ocean Ins. Co., 3 Pet. 307 (1830).

Beames, Costs in Equity (2d Ed.) (1840), Chap. 10.

Barbour, The Practice of the Court of Chancery (2d ed.) (1875), V. 2, pp. 336-339.

Daniell, Chancery Practice (1st Ed.) (1837), Sec. 4, Chap. 27.

Smith, Chancery Practice (2d Ed.) (1837), V. 1, pp. 697-700.

Street, Federal Equity Practice (1909), V. 2, Sec. 2040.

Turner, Practice and Costs in the High Court of Chancery (3d Ed.) 1804).

The treatises cited discuss the taxation of solicitor and client costs, both in this country and in England. The authoritative nature of the books by Daniell and Smith are well indicated by the following note by this court in Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 104 (1884):

> "Reference is made to the 1st edition of Daniell (pub. 1837) as being, with the 2d edition of Smith's Practice (published the same year), the most authoritative work on English Chancery Practice in use in March, 1842, when our Equity Rules were adopted. Supplemented by the General Orders made by Lords Cottenham and Langdale in August, 1841 (many of which were closely copied in our own Rules), they exhibit that 'present practice of the High Court of Chancery in England,' which by our 90th Rule was > adopted as the standard of equity practice in cases where the Rules prescribed by this court, or by the Circuit Court, do not apply."

Beames, Costs in Equity, supra, is relied upon in many of the cases heretofore referred to. In Goodyear v. Sawyer, 17 Fed. 2 (1883), the author is spoken of as "Mr. Beames, who wrote a little before our equity rules were promulgated of the practice as it was then understood."

There are, in addition, a number of cases which, by analogy, bear upon the issue. In Burns v. Rosenstein, 135 U. S. 449 (1890), though no statutory authority existed therefor, expense incurred by the plaintiff in preserving attached property, was taxed as costs in plaintiff's favor in a suit for an accounting between partners. This court said:

> "The allegations of the original bill justified the issuing of the attachment. It was right that the property taken under it should be cared for, and as the court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree against the defendants, a judgment for costs properly followed; and we perceive no reason why the plaintiffs should not have been allowed, as part of their costs, a reasonable amount for the expenses incurred in preserving the attached property, and for which they became primarily liable to the officer keeping it."

In re Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 40 S. Ct. 543 (1919), taxed as costs the compensation of an auditor, though no statute or rule of court made provision therefor. Premiums paid on surety bonds of various kinds have been taxed as costs. Newton v. Consolidated Gas Co., 265 U. S. 78, 44 S. Ct. 481 (1923); The Walter Adams, 271

Fed. 358 (1921); The Hurtsdale, 171 Fed. 607 (1909); The John D. Dailey, 158 Fed. 642 (1907); Jacobsen v. Lewis Klondike Expedition Co., 112 Fed. 73, 50 C. C. A. 12 (1901); The South Portland, 95 Fed. 295 (1899). In Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 208 Fed. 581 (1913), a docket fee of $10 was allowed to plaintiff's attorney on the remanding of a cause to the state court after a wrongful removal; and in Kaempfer v. Taylor, 78 Fed. 795 (1897), a solicitor's docket fee of $5 was allowed upon a discontinuance. In neither case was there any statutory authority for the allowance.

Cases may of course be found where a requested allowance of attorneys' fees has been denied. This is to be expected, since such an allowance is discretionary, and should be made only in special cases. Most of the cases cited in the brief of the Southern Company, in which solicitor and client costs have been denied, are not at all in opposition to the Trust Company's position. Many of those cases are actions at law, in which admittedly there is no right to allow such costs. Arcambel v. Wiseman, 3 Dall. 306 (1796), holds that counsel fees cannot be allowed as a part of the damages (apparently on an injunction bond). Day v. Woodworth, 13 How. 363 (1851), is an action at law for trespass.

(d) The present state of the law upon these three points may be, therefore, summarized as follows:

As to point (a), the English authorities sustain the power of the court in equity cases to tax solicitor and client costs. In the absence of American cases to the contrary, it would seem that the English rule should prevail in the Federal Courts.

As to points (b) and (c), there are ample American authorities to support the principles laid down by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

If this be true, the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals should be affirmed and the decree of the District Court reversed, for the only question passed upon by the trial court was as to its power to act. The case should be remanded with instructions to the trial court to exercise that power in accordance with the rules and practise in equity. There seems to be no doubt that the District Court believed that the facts of the present litigation brought it within the terms of the principle, if the court had the power to apply the principle.

What are those facts?

VI.

Were gross charges of fraud and misconduct made?

The answer to this question is to be found in the bills filed by the Southern Company and by those who were acting in its behalf in the litigation. Only a reading of the bills can give a true picture of the accusations and innuendoes with which they are made up. A few references will suffice to disclose their general character.

The intervening petition of the Southern Company, after alleging the absolute dominion and control by the Trust Company of the acts of the Belt Company and its subsidiaries and associated companies, alleged that the plan and purpose of the Trust Company was to "gather unto the Trust Company all the profits and other advantages," and to "foist upon the said railroad companies so utilized any and all losses, burdens or other liabilities" (Rec. V. II, p. 174); that the Trust Company used these companies for its own interests and for its own benefit and advantage instead of their own (Rec. V. II, p. 175); that it took and converted to its own use stocks and bonds belonging to the Belt Company valued at approximately $870,000 (Rec. V. II, pp. 179-180); that it did not use its control of the Belt Company for the benefit of the stockholders and bondholders of the Belt Company, but for its own interest and in the same manner used its position as trustee under the Belt mortgage "in violation of its trust" (Rec. V. II, p. 182); that "in violation of its duty as trustee in said mortgage and with a view of appropriating to itself whatever of value there was remaining in the possession of said companies," it "contrived the plan of requiring said companies to turn over to it all of the personal property owned by said companies of every nature and description" (Rec. V. II, p. 182); that it caused the Belt Company to pretend to hold a directors' meeting for this purpose (Rec. V. II, p. 183); and that it used its knowledge of the Belt Company to its own advantage "all in violation of its duties as trustee." (Rec. V. I, p. 184.)

It may be that, as stated in petitioner's last brief (p. 11), these allegations charge something "in the nature of constructive fraud." But we respectfully submit that more than a "constructive" fraud is charged when a trustee is alleged to have "foisted" upon others losses, burdens and liabilities which are in fact his own; to have taken and converted to his own use the property of others to the amount of $870,000; to have "appropriated" to himself all the remaining assets of corporations alleged to be in his control, by "contriving" a plan and causing "pretended" directors' meetings to be held; to have misused the knowledge obtained by him as trustee; and all for his own advantage and in violation of his trust. One may be guilty of a "constructive" fraud when he innocently does something forbidden by law. But one cannot constructively have a "plan and purpose" (Rec. V. II, p. 173) to "foist" his own debts upon another; he cannot con- structively cause things to be done for his own benefit and advantage; he cannot constructively "contrive" to "appropriate" to himself the property of others; he cannot constructively "pretend" to hold directors' meetings; he cannot constructively misuse knowledge obtained by him as trustee.

We submit that no graver charge can be made against a man than to assert that as trustee he has contrived to misuse his position to his own benefit and to the detriment of his trust. Here is no constructive fraud. It is as if one should charge a court of exercising its functions for its own ends rather than in the interests of the litigants for whom the court holds its power in trust. No relationship has been so jealously guarded by the law as that between trustee and cestui que trust.

In its amended petition the Southern Company, for good measure, charges that the Trust Company "unlawfully and improperly" used the proceeds of bonds sold by it as trustee, "wrongfully and unlawfully" refused to use the proceeds properly, and even sold bonds after the railroads were completed and the occasion for such sale had passed, appropriating to itself the avails of such transactions. (Rec. V. II, p. 289.)

So much for the petitions filed directly by the Southern Company. It should be remembered, however, that the Court of Appeals has held upon a former appeal—and was clearly justified in so holding—that the original bill filed by the Cambria Company in this cause was, in effect, the bill of the Southern Company and that the ancillary bill filed by the Belt Company and all the amended and supplemental bills filed by it were filed on behalf and at the instance of the Southern Company. We may properly, therefore, look into these pleadings also in ascertaining what the character of the litigation was.

Even more numerous and more exaggerated were the charges in these bills to the effect that the Trust Company was guilty of active fraud and intentional breach of trust. Some of the allegations are in the exact language used in the Southern Company's petition. (For example, see: Rec. V. II, pp. 5-6.) But there were many others. It was asserted that the Trust Company received $4,000,000 of securities of the Union Company, and accounted for only $865,000 thereof (Rec. V. II, p. 9); that it received $850,000 of securities of the Air Line, and accounted for only $200,000 thereof (Rec. V. II, p. 9); that the Trust Company "went through the form of giving said Belt Company credit" (Rec. V. II, p. 11; "that the act of said Trust Company in undertaking to charge the said loss (on the Connecting Company road) to the said Belt Company * * * was, as to the creditors of the said Belt Company, fraudulent in fact and in law" (Rec. V. II, p. 12); that the Trust Company failed to account for $1,000,000 of securities of the Suburban Company (Rec. V. II, p. 100), $750,000 of securities of the Consolidated Company (Rec. V. II, p. 101), $2,000,000 of securities of the Union Company (Rec. V. II, p. 102), and $800,000 of securities of the Air Line (Rec. V. II, p. 103); that the Trust Company "took out of the earnings and assets of said Belt Company, large sums of money which it pretended to expend for and on behalf of said Belt Company" (Rec. V. II, p. 105); that the Belt Company furnished the Trust Company large sums of money for the purchase of property, for which the Trust Company never accounted (Rec. V. 2, pp. 105-108); that the Trust Company "devised a plan or scheme to resell and unload upon the Belt Company" certain second mortgage Air Line bonds, and "to carry out said plan, caused the Belt Company to enter into a pretended agreement" and "caused entries to be made upon its books and upon the books of the Belt Company" charging the Belt Company with said bonds (Rec. V. II, p. 252); "that it was the habit and practice of the Trust Company, in the disposition of bonds and stocks of the Belt Company, the Consolidated Company, the Air Line and the Union Company, to make sales of said bonds and stocks at such prices as the Trust Company should decide upon, and then when such sales had been made to credit the Belt Company with a less amount, representing to the Belt Company that the sale so made by the Trust Company as aforesaid, had been made at and for a much less price than the amount or rate at which the sale had actually been made." (Rec. V. II, p. 256.)

All of the bills bristle with similar charges of active misconduct. They contain little else. We dislike to burden the brief with too much detail. But in view of the contention seriously made that only constructive fraud was alleged, we feel constrained to point out some of the more striking allegations of these pleadings which cover more than two hundred pages of the printed record. The charges are repeated in all the bills and hardly a page can be found which does not contain such words as "pretended indebtedness," "pretended notes," "pretended purpose," "go through the form," "contrive a scheme," "appropriate to itself," and innumerable allegations of intentional conversion, falsification of accounts and acts practically amounting to embezzlement. Even a cursory glance through these pages will convince the court that the pleader had no thought of a mere constructive fraud.

Whether or not this court shall say that the federal courts of equity have the power, established in the English Court of Chancery, to tax solicitor and client costs in cases of gross and unsustained charges of fraud, it would seem impossible for the court to say that gross fraud was not charged.

VII.

Was the main ground of the suit false, unjust, vexatious, wanton or oppressive?

That the main ground of the suit was false and unjust —that is to say, utterly without equity—sufficiently appears from the report of the master itself and from the action of the Circuit Court of Appeals on the former appeals. The master does not say in words that the suit was baseless, but he does say in his report, under the heading, "A Few Controlling Facts," that > "There either appear on the face of the bill, or are practically undisputed in the proofs, the following facts which serve to materially distinguish the case at bar from any cited by learned counsel in support of the complaints in the bill." (Rec. V. II, p. 647.)

He then recites in substance (a) that the action was instituted on behalf of a creditor who became such long after the transactions complained of and that no creditor was before the court whose claim existed before such time; (b) that no excuse was attempted for the long delay in seeking an accounting; (c) that no stockholder had ever complained; (d) that the sole stockholder, when the bill was filed, was the Southern Company which had acquired all the Belt stock in the execution of a plan of reorganization; (e) that no stockholder had been named in the record who, if ignorant of the transactions, did not participate or acquiesce in or approve them; (f) that the transactions were open, not secret and concealed, and were known or might readily have been known to the stockholders, as they were large transactions, spread over a long period of time, and were set forth in much detail both on the books of the Trust Company and on those of the Belt Company; (g) that the transactions were expressly ratified by the stockholders.

He further recites (h) that the statute of limitations had run against the transactions; (i) that they were fully executed years before the bill was filed and the accounts settled from time to time, the Belt Company giving notes for the balances due; (j) that the bookkeeping was full, complete and accurate, and the accounts were regularly stated and audited; (k) that the Belt stockholders repeatedly re-elected the same directors, this being the strongest evidence of acquiescence on their part in the management, which is now for the first time attacked; (l) that the Belt Company had received benefits and advantages from the transactions which the complainants never offered to return and could not return, and that no fraudulent intent or actual fraud on the part of the Trust Company was shown; (m) that neither the Trust Company nor the directors in question ever at any time held even a substantial minority of the stock of the Belt Company, so that there was no basis for the charge of "domination." (Rec. V. II, pp. 647-649.)

This report, confirmed by the District Court, and made the basis of the action of the Circuit Court of Appeals, justifies us in affirming that the suit has been judicially determined to be baseless and unwarranted.

Was it also vexatious, wanton and oppressive? The answer to this question should be found, and may be found, not in any independent proofs, offered by the Southern Company as to its good faith, but in the pleadings, the circumstances under which the suit was filed and the procedure adopted by the complainants. They speak for themselves.

(a) The circumstances.

First, as to the circumstances. In March, 1900, the Southern Company was formed, by interests hostile to the Trust Company. It bought at foreclosure sale the property of the Gulf Company. It acquired, by deposits made under the Reorganization Plan, substanitally all the stock and bonds of the Belt Company. After April 1, 1900, the Belt Company was but an arm of the Southern Company.

The Belt Company was indebted to the Trust Company on promissory notes executed by it in the face amount of $360,000, on which approximately $400,000 was due. There is not, and never was, the slighest doubt as to the genuineness of that indebtedness. The Belt Company books showed that amount to be due. Prior to the filing of the Cambria bill, no intimation had been made by anyone that the Belt notes were not genuine. In the 36,000 pages of testimony before the Master there was no evidence, nor was there any attempt to introduce evidence, attacking the validity of these notes. The offer of the Southern Company to introduce evidence of good faith in instituting the litigation (Rec. V. 1, p. 33), contained not the slightest suggestion that these Belt notes were not real, bona fide obligations, representing an actual indebtedness, due and unpaid.

The Trust Company held a large amount of collateral to this debt, described in the bill of the Cambria Company (Rec. V. II, pp. 14-15) and elsewhere in the record. It consisted chiefly of stocks and bonds of subsidiary companies which owned properties and possessed rights essential or important to the Belt System. It would be an advantageous thing to the Southern Company if the Belt assets could be freed from this debt and the collateral or the properties of the companies whose stock and bonds were pledged, secured by the Southern Company at the lowest possible cost. The Belt assets were subject to mortgages, the foreclosure of which might—and very nearly did—put these assets in the hands of the Southern Company without payment of any debts. The stocks, bonds and properties of the subsidiaries presented a more troublesome question.

On September 1, 1900, the Trust Company gave notice that it would on September 7 proceed to sell, under the terms of the pledge, the securities held by it. On September 6, 1900, the day before the proposed sale, six suits were filed to carry out the purpose of the Southern Company. Four foreclosure suits were filed, covering constituent parts of the Belt System, in which receivers were on the same day appointed for the mortgaged property. The Cambria Company filed its suit against the Belt Company, got judgment, had execution issued and returned unsatisfied, all on September 6, 1900, and on the same day filed its creditor's bill, the beginning of the present litigation, against the Trust Company, the Belt Company and its subsidiaries, asking that the sale of the collateral be enjoined. On the same day the injunction was granted, without notice to the Trust Company, and the receivership created in the foreclosure suits was extended over all the assets of the Belt Company generally.

If these suits could be brought to a successful termination, the purpose of the Southern Company would be accomplished. And it required some such suits to accomplish that purpose. A mere contest of the three items which counsel say were erroneously charged to the Belt Company and therefore justify the litigation, would still have left substantially all the debt to the Trust Company unpaid and the collateral still liable to sale. It was necessary to attack the entire debt and a means was sought for such attack.

An accounting suit by the Belt Company was considered and it is said that a petition was prepared in August, 1900. But it was not filed and no explanation of the change in plan is offered. It may well be considered whether the reason was not that in such a suit no receivership was possible, whereas the Southern Company, desiring to overwhelm the Trust Company with litigation, desired to bring about all the receiverships possible. Certainly the statement, coming from the Southern Company, goes far to substantiate, if substantiation be necessary, the conclusion of the Circuit Court of Appeals that "it is difficult to wink so hard as not to see that the Cambria suit was in reality the suit of the Southern Company" (210 Fed. 717). For instead of the accounting suit, a creditor's bill was shortly filed in the name of the Cambria Company, in which the first act was the appointment of receivers for the Belt Company, to be followed by the appointment of receivers for the Belt subsidiaries.

In its offer of proof as to its good faith, the Southern Company says:

> "Thereupon counsel for your petitioner and for the Belt Company advised the officers of the Cambria Company, which was then a creditor of the Belt Company in a large amount, of the situation as it then existed and pointed out to them certain assets of the Belt Company, then held as collateral by the Trust Company, which would be released and become subject to the demands of creditors if an accounting > between the Belt Company and the Trust Company were had and should result in substantially reducing or altogether wiping out said alleged indebtedness of the Belt Company to the Trust Company."

In other words, the Southern Company now confesses that it induced a creditor of the Belt Company to obtain judgment against it and proceed by creditor's bill to have receivers appointed.

But though the Cambria Company was willing to be induced to file this bill at the instance of the Southern Company, it was apparently unwilling to undertake the expense and incur the fees incident to the taking of a complete account. An ancillary bill was therefore filed on behalf of the receivers of the Belt Company, a then partner of the counsel for the Southern Company signing the bill as attorney for the receivers. Later replications were filed by the receivers, signed by the firm of which both these lawyers were members. (Rec., V. II, pp. 113, 159, 160.)

On February 2, 1905, the Cambria Company withdraws from active participation in the case, leaving the accounting for which it had asked in its brief wholly in the hands of the Belt Company, its attorney stating that the Cambria Company is practically "out of it until this accounting is all ended." (Rec., V. II, p. 940.) On February 27, 1905, the Southern Company comes into the case. On March 22, 1905, the Belt receivers file an amended and supplemental bill, signed by the counsel of the Southern Company. On May 1, 1905, the Southern Company files an amended intervening petition. On July 6, 1906, said receivers file a second amended and supplemental bill, again by the counsel of the Southern Company.

What was the purpose of all this litigation? The Cambria Company was a creditor of the Belt Company and its claim was undisputed. The latter never contested either suit brought by the former and, indeed, suggested the filing of the suit. The plan of reorganization provided for the payment of floating debts of the Belt Company in a large amount, which must have included this acknowledged obligation. The Cambria Company needed no creditor's bill or accounting to obtain its money, and it knew it. The suits were filed at the instance and for the accommodation of its friend, the Southern Company. They were not brought in good faith to obtain the relief asked for in their bills.

Nor was there any occasion for the foreclosure suits against the Belt properties. The Southern Company held substantially all the stock and bonds of the Belt Company, and the foreclosure decree and sale was, as held by the Circuit Court of Appeals on the former appeal (210 Fed. 704), "in effect by itself as trustee to itself as trustee." These suits were not brought in good faith to obtain the relief asked for therein.

Then the Belt receivers, acting either through the attorneys of the Southern Company or their associates, filed three successive bills, which could be of no possible benefit to anyone except the Southern Company. The creditors of the Belt Company, except the Trust Company, were provided for and the Southern Company was practically the only stockholder. Evidently, the counsel of the Southern Company, having thought it unwise to file an accounting suit against the Trust Company in August, 1900, decided in November, 1901, that the time had come for the application of more pressure.

At last, in 1905, the Southern Company intervened in person and the real purpose of the litigation comes to light. The Southern Company claims title to all the valuable part of the pledged assets, free from the debt to the Trust Company. There can be no possible doubt that this was the intent from the beginning—to obtain the pledged Belt assets without paying the Trust Company debt. The suit of the Cambria Company, induced by the Southern Company, and called by the Circuit Court of Appeals "the baseless suit of the Cambria Company, a suit based on a judgment to which the Southern Company consented in the name of the Belt Company"—that suit appears as a mere club, used by the Southern Company to keep the Trust Company from enforcing its rights. And the bills for accounting become mere attempts to smother the Trust Company under the weight of ruinous expenses into an abandonment of those rights.

(b) The pleadings.

We submit further that the pleadings themselves conclusively establish the vexatious, wanton and oppressive character of the litigation.

After months of examination by auditors of the books of the Belt Company, the Southern Company induced a creditor to file a bill, demanding an accounting as to all transactions between the Belt Company and the Trust Company, based upon charges of domination and fraud. The creditor chosen was one whose claim had arisen long after the transactions complained of, who had no right to impeach such transactions, as is well understood.

> Graham v. Railroad Co., 102 U. S. 148, 153.
> Porter v. Steel Co., 120 U. S. 649, 673.

The transactions complained of were not only fully executed before the claim arose, but any claims thereunder were barred by the statute of limitations. The accounting demanded by the creditor was of accounts fully, completely and accurately kept by both parties, and accurately settled from time to time. And the domination and control, which furnish so large a part of the alleged equity of the Cambria bills, is charged against a stockholder who "never at any time held even a substantial minority of the stock of the Belt Company."

The bill was filed, evidently on information furnished by the Southern Company, with all the books of the Belt Company available and thoroughly examined, in spite of the fact that those books showed complete settlement of accounts and a patent absence of any power to control or dominate. Under such circumstances, are we not justified in saying that there was an ulterior motive?

The bills of the Belt receivers are made by the same pattern. They are based on transactions fully executed years previously, ratified by the stockholders and participated or acquiesced in by them; open, not secret; well known, not concealed; spread over a long period of time and set forth on the books in detail; and they were barred by the statute of limitations. The accounts attacked were fully and accurately kept and shown on the books of the Belt Company, and had been settled time and again. The various accusations of domination were directed against a small minority stockholder. The Belt Company had received large benefits from the attacked transactions, but there was no offer to return any part of them. And the books of the Belt Company, in the possession of the receivers or the Southern Company and examined for months, contained the evidence of the falseness of the charges.

No one can reasonably doubt that the Southern Company examined and re-examined those books in an endeavor to find grounds for contesting the Trust Company's debt and pledge; that it was utterly unable to find any such grounds within the term of the statute of limitations that would even sustain an argument; that it thereupon went back to the early history of the companies, their organization, the issuance and sale of bonds, their construction contracts—not with the idea of recovering upon an outlawed transaction, but with the purpose of drawing the Trust Company into a ruinous contest.

Evidence may be abundant to show that the various defendant companies were co-operating, that they were all engaged on different parts of the same plan, that there were many transactions between them, that all agreed to what each was doing and each did what the others desired and approved. But this is far from domination or control. It is self-evident, as the master found, that the holder of a small minority of stock, such as the Trust Company was known to be, cannot be guilty of unlawful domination.

The Southern Company, in its last brief, refers to two items that "afforded ample justification for the proceeding" (p. 67): The DeGoeijen item and the Stilwell contract item. The master found in favor of the Trust Company on both items, and the correctness of his finding is not before the court. We understand that the items are referred to in the brief only as proof that the attack upon them was not vexatious. Let us examine these examples, which the Southern Company has picked out as justifying its course.

The findings and conclusions of the master are set out on pages 682 to 694 of Volume II of the Record. The facts are somewhat complicated, but it sufficiently appears that about October, 1897, DeGoeijen purchased of the Belt Company a large amount of bonds for which he did not pay in cash. The Trust Company was requested to handle the collection from him, and for convenience credited the Belt Company with the full amount on its books and charged against the account subsequent collections made from DeGoeijen. By March 31, 1899, the amount had been reduced to $89,333.33. The agreement between the Belt Company and the Trust Company, was that the latter should pay over to the former only such amounts as were paid by DeGoeijen. As the account was very slow, the Trust Company charged it back to the Belt Company in March, 1899.

If this were the whole story, the point might be well taken that the item deserved investigation. But it is not the whole story. This charge was on the Belt Company books when they were examined by the Southern Company in 1900, and was then known to the Southern Company. It was, however, not included in the charges of the Cambria bill. It does not appear in the ancillary bill filed by the Belt receivers in 1901. It appears for the first time in the amended and supplemental ancillary bill filed in 1905.

The reason for this, as shown by the report, is most enlightening. It seems that in 1899, DeGoeijen filed a claim for a large amount in the Gulf foreclosure suit and that thereafter the reorganization committee and the Southern Company were negotiating a settlement. This settlement involved also the $89,333.33 item, as a claim of the Belt Company against DeGoeijen. In 1900, an adjustment was agreed upon, and in 1902 the Southern Company and the reorganization committee released DeGoeijen from the debt. The master says that "the reorganization committee had been more or less pursuing DeGoeijen on this $89,333.33 claim most of the time since it was organized."

He further says: "Stuart R. Knott, then president of these companies (the Southern and the Belt), and who signed the release on behalf of the Southern, was one of the then receivers of the Belt, and a complainant in this cause."

As a final light on this subject, the master says:

> "The Belt Company, having regularly collected interest on these notes from DeGoeijen (Rec. 50-30317), and having shown on its books and on the stated financial reports of the company, that this item of $89,333.33 was due from DeGoeijen (Vol. 51-30785), and DeGoeijen having at all times recognized the obligation, and the Belt Company and its receiver, having, through the reorganization committee, collected, or made a settlement of some kind with DeGoeijen in reference to the matter, it would seem that the complainant is not in condition to now assert that the Trust Company is its debtor on account of said item of $89,333.33, for, in doing the things last mentioned, the Belt Company has placed a construction upon the transaction which shows that it treated DeGoeijen as its debtor, and not the Trust Company."

Now we have the whole story. The Belt Company treated the debt as due to it from DeGoeijen on its books and on its statements, collected interest on it, used it as an offset in settling a claim by DeGoeijen against the Gulf Company (predecessor of the Southern), and then released it, the president of the Southern Company who was one of the Belt receivers signing the release. This was in 1902. Yet in 1905, after having practically collected the debt from DeGoeijen, the Belt receivers set it up as a debt owed by the Trust Company.

And the Southern Company now contends that the charge was not vexatious.

The Stilwell contract item is still less convincing. It is one of the musty items evidencing the diligence of the Southern Company in digging into ancient volumes and the extremity to which it was obliged to go in search of a plausible cause of action. The findings of the master upon this transaction are to be found on pages 649 to 671 of Volume II of the record.

This Stilwell contract was one of the original construction contracts for a portion of the railroad of the Suburban Company, a predecessor of the Belt Company. It was made in 1889, and in 1890 the Suburban Company, though the portion was not completed, accepted an offer to turn over to it the road and materials as they then were at the contract price. This acceptance was authorized at a stockholders' meeting of the Suburban Company, May 9, 1890. Thereafter, for a period of almost fifteen years, no stockholder or creditor or other person raised the slightest question with regard to this settlement, and it stood openly spread upon the records of the Suburban Company, approved and acquiesced in by every interested party.

It remained for the receivers of the Belt Company, at the instance of the Southern Company and through its attorneys, in a suit collusively filed by a creditor whose claim arose years after the transaction was fully completed and closed, to allege in their amended ancillary bill, filed on March 22, 1905, for the first time, that the settlement was fraudulent and should be set aside.

Counsel for the Southern Company ask: "Will anyone for a moment contend that an action brought to compel restitution under these circumstances was trivial, insincere or vexatious?" We unhesitatingly answer yes, if the following circumstances also appear; that the settlement was open and spread on the records of the company; that it was acquiesced in for fifteen years; that it was an executed transaction closed for so many years that the statutory period had run against it; that the stockholders had expressly ratified it; that no stockholder and no contemporary creditor had objected at any time; that the sole stockholder at the time the action was brought, the Southern Company, had obtained the stock under the terms of a reorganization agreement ten years after the questioned settlement; that the demand for restitution was made without any offer to restore the consideration received; and that the restitution was demanded upon the ground of "control and domination" for which there was not the slightest basis in fact.

In the lower court, the Southern Company relied upon three other items as constituting the justification of its good faith—the three items as to which the master found in favor of the Southern Company. These are referred to on page 15 of its last brief, but apparently are not now urged in that brief as evidence of anything. There is good reason for this. For, as pointed out in our brief in the Circuit Court of Appeals, two of these items concerned events occurring after the filing of the original bill herein, and under circumstances which clearly indicated that they were proper charges against the Belt Company when made, but afterwards were settled by the Belt Company. The Trust Company admitted in its answer that they should be deducted from its debt.

The facts as to these items will be found: as to the $5,600.00 item, on page 365, Record II; and as to the $5,000.00 item, on pages 365-6. The remaining item of $11,250.00 arose in connection with certain Union Terminal Company coupons due August 1, 1899, which were at that time charged to the Belt Company. These coupons were paid by the reorganization committee in July, 1900, and through some error credit was not given. The record does not show how this error occurred (Rec., V. II, 726-7).

We have, then, as the net result, one error, occurring in July, 1900, readily subject to adjustment without suit, and involving a matter of only $11,250.00, which is relied upon as a justification of an accounting, going back at least to 1887, bringing in thousands of accounts and items, charging fraud and fraudulent misuse of funds, and causing ten years of ruinous litigation. It is as if a surgeon should excuse his attempt to amputate a leg by finding a splinter embedded in the flesh.

In view of the foregoing, the Trust Company might safely admit, notwithstanding a mass of unfounded charges made therein, that the Southern Company's petitions, standing alone and unconnected with the previous proceedings, do not on their face show a wanton and vexatious attack. They were, in the main, a direct attack upon the title of the pledgor Belt Company to the pledged property. As found by the master, "the intervener asserts its claim to be the equitable owner of all said collateral securities as against all parties to this suit." (Rec. II, pp. 735-6.) They assert, with some degree of plausibility, an equitable claim to certain properties standing in the name of the Central Improvement Company, again indirectly attacking the title of the pledgor. And, based upon these equitable claims, they make certain charges against the Trust Company as trustee under various corporate mortgages. As to some of the Central Company's properties, the decree of the District Court was for the Southern Company, which was reversed upon the point by the Circuit Court of Appeals on the former appeal.

But these petitions do not stand alone. The Circuit Court of Appeals, upon the former appeal, found that the Cambria bill was filed at the instance and for the benefit of the Southern Company, and the facts hereinbefore set out amply sustain that finding. The original and amended bills of the Belt receivers were instigated and fathered by the Southern Company, and it was the sole party in interest so far as those bills were concerned. That company did not simply intervene in the suit in 1905; it started the suit in 1900, and had it carried along and prosecuted for almost five years before appearing in person and openly assuming charge.

The Southern Company adroitly bases its argument of good faith upon these bills alone, entirely ignoring the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals on the former appeal to the effect that all the bills were the Southern Company's bills and all the proceedings were the Southern Company's proceedings. That was the decree affirmed by this court. Considered as a part of this consistent whole, these Southern Company interventions become but steps in the effort to obtain the Trust Company's collateral without paying the secured debt.

(c) The conduct of the litigation.

Conclusive as this must be, it is by no means all. The conduct of the litigation shows unmistakably the purpose back of its prosecution. Even if we admit that there were a few transactions which might have warranted an investigation, this would not justify what followed. A complete accounting was demanded. Every item was called in question, running back ten to fifteen years. The Trust Company was forced into five years of defensive struggle. The pleadings alone occupy more than 527 pages of the printed record. The report of the master covers more than 313 printed pages, consisting of long statements of the evidence on each point considered and then short statements of his conclusions, of which the following are examples:

> "In the opinion of the master, however, the legal effect of said consolidation is immaterial in this cause." (Rec. II, p. 769.)
>
> "For the foregoing reason, it is wholly immaterial whether said stocks came within the lien of the Belt mortgage or not." (P. 770.)
>
> "The claim of the intervener therefor was barred by the statute of limitations of this State." (P. 811.)

These were in addition to the sweeping condemnation of substantially all the charges in the bill under the caption "A Few Controlling Facts." (Rec. II, pp. 647-9.)

During the first four years of the litigation, some 9,000 pages of testimony had been taken. In 1905 and 1906, 27,000 pages of additional testimony was taken. The master stated in his report (Rec. II, p. 580) that for three years prior to the filing of the report, in May, 1910, he had given a large part of his time to the examination and consideration of this lengthy record. Small wonder, when the typewritten volumes, placed one upon another, made two stacks each as high as a man's shoulder.

Five years of pleading and evidence before the master in this accounting suit, and three years of consideration by the master, covering debits and credits during fifteen years—all resulting in the correction of a single error occurring less than two months before the suit was filed, and all requiring an enormous expenditure of time and money in their defense on the part of the Trust Company.

Nor is this all. In the meantime, two injunctions were obtained against the Trust Company, involving exactly the same matter, which had to be taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals before the Trust Company could obtain relief. (146 Fed. 337; 171 Fed. 43.) On the second appeal, in which the court stated that the transcript was voluminous, comprising 742 printed pages (p. 46), after a significant remark that the issuance of an injunction rested not in the "arbitrary whimsical will" of the chancellor but in his "sound judicial discretion" (p. 50), the court dissolved the temporary injunction, and then went further and directed the dismissal of the bill for want of equity (p. 51). Here is almost four years of additional litigation, harassing and futile of results, extending from somewhat prior to the submission to the master to well along to the time of his report.

There is still one further piece of evidence to which we would refer. After ten years of contest over this accounting, the master filed his report finding against the Southern Company on every point involved in that accounting except the one error of July, 1900. He found for that company as to its liability for the Belt debts and as to a part of the Central Company lands. But as to all the accounting, with the single exception, as to all the fraud, as to all the domination and control, as to all the misuse of funds, as to all the breaches of trust, he found for the Trust Company.

The decree of the District Court confirming the report dismissed the Cambria bill outright; dissolved the injunction against the Trust Company as to the sale of collateral; dismissed the bills of the Belt receivers except as to the three small items hereinbefore referred to; found for the Trust Company against the Belt Company in the amount of $639,658.86; sustained the pledge of securities collateral to the Belt debt; and taxed one-third of the costs against the Belt Company and its receivers.

Yet neither company sees any occasion for an appeal. After ten years of strenuous litigation, involving hundreds of thousands of dollars, if not millions, they both rest content with this decree dismissing their bills for want of equity. They did not appeal. And this, in spite of the opinion now expressed in the last brief of the Southern Company, that the master was clearly wrong as to two of the items, and that an argument against them might forcefully be made even now. One of these items amounted, as stated by counsel, to 25 per cent of the entire claim of the Trust Company, and the other to a greater sum than the entire claim.

Counsel also argue in this last brief that the evidence before the master established the charge of domination. But at the time of the decree, the same counsel, representing the Belt Company and its receivers, as well as the Southern Company, did not see fit to appeal from an adverse decision. No effort was made, apparently, to induce the Cambria Company to appeal, as it had been induced to file the suit. Its counsel, though utterly defeated, was clearly no longer interested.

There can be but one explanation for this failure to act. The Cambria Company was not concerned about any accounting or any pledge of collateral. The Belt Company and its receivers cared nothing for the indebtedness found against it and the costs decreed to be paid by them. Both and all were interested in obtaining for the Southern Company immunity from the Belt debts and title to the pledged assets. When the decree was entered, granting such immunity and a large portion of the Central Company lands to the Southern Company, all the complainants and interveners were satisfied and had no desire to risk a reversal as to those matters, by an appeal on the issues presented by their pleadings.

Can there be the slightest doubt that the Southern Company itself decided that no appeal should be taken by any of them?

It is an amazing thing that the Trust Company succeeded in carrying the burden of the combined attack of these associates. Ten years of litigation, with a decision in its favor on the original issues, but adverse to it on those issues which were financially most important, faced with a record in the trial court of upwards of 36,000 pages, the cost of printing which alone was practically prohibitive. It did succeed in appealing, however, by standing upon the face of the master's report, without the evidence, and, after vicissitudes partly appearing in this record, obtained a decree affirming the priority of its right to the pledged property, including the Central Company lands, and holding the Southern Company liable to pay the Belt indebtedness. But, even without the printing of the evidence, it was at a cost that virtually robbed it of the benefit of the victory.

And now it is seriously urged that because the Trust Company, after four years and a half of litigation induced under cover by the Southern Company, consented that that company might intervene and fight its own battle in the open, there has been a waiver of all right to complain that the litigation was wanton and vexatious. It is urged that the liability of the Southern Company, not brought into the case by the complainants, nominal or real, but by the Trust Company itself in its answer to the Southern Company's petition, filed, of course, years after the litigation had been begun, was the main issue in the case and prevents the equitable taxation of costs because it was a simple legal issue between two adversaries acting at arm's length.

The liability of the Southern Company was in no sense the main issue in the case. It came in incidentally and assumed importance only because of later developments. It was not by any means the main subject of controversy in the Circuit Court of Appeals on the former appeal. The first decision of that court does not provide for any money decree against the Southern Company, but only for a decree that the Trust Company might enforce its lien on the pledged property, including the Central Company lands, unless the Southern Company paid the secured debt. Not until the second decision did the question of a judgment against the Southern Company become of moment.

The main object of the Cambria bill was the recovery of the pledged property and its proceeds. The debt and the accounting was only incidental thereto. When the ancillary Belt bill was filed, both that company and the Trust Company were in the hands of receivers, those for the Belt Company having been appointed in a creditor's suit on the ground of insolvency and under a petition alleging the insolvency of the Trust Company. The main object of the bill of the Belt receivers was not to obtain judgment against the insolvent Trust Company or to avoid a judgment against the insolvent Belt Company, but to recover the pledged property and its proceeds. The debt and the accounting were incidental.

The main object of the Southern petition was to recover as equitable owner, the collateral held by the Trust Company and the lands of the Central Company, whose stock was likewise held by the Trust Company. It also charged a breach of trust on the part of the Trust Company as trustee under the Union Terminal Company mortgage. The issue of the Southern Company liability could not have come into the case before it became a party thereto, and its own intervening petition certainly did not present it. That issue did not appear until the Trust Company's answer to the petition raised it.

(d) Conclusion.

It is self-evident from these circumstances, pleadings and procedure, that this was not a suit bona fide instituted for the purpose of determining the issues originally presented. It is impossible "to wink so hard" as not to see that the purpose was to smother the Trust Company with difficulities and expenses until it could no longer sustain the unequal contest. The report of the master found that the Trust Company had expended $11,499.32 in party and party costs (Rec. II, p. 49), and $296,520.37 in solicitor and client costs (Rec. II, p. 59), not including various items not allowed by the master.

It thus appears that more than $300,000.00 was actually paid out by the Trust Company in defense of this litigation, although its original debt, owed by the Belt Company, was approximately only $380,000.00. The final judgment was, of course, much larger; but the major part of the recovery was for interest during the time that collection was wrongfully prevented and while the Southern Company enjoyed the use of the money.

It is true that a considerable amount of attorneys' fees are included in these costs. But as to the larger items, the fees were not paid until after a contest in court and a judgment rendered against the Trust Company on an allowance made and sustained.

It is true, also, that these costs are startlingly large. But it was the purpose of the Southern Company to make them large—so large that the Trust Company could not carry the burden. And it should not now escape the payment of such costs, made necessary by its own action, on the ground that it made them large. To permit such a thing would leave the Trust Company, in spite of its victory, substantially without the principal of its debt, and with only the interest during the time the funds were withheld by the Southern Company. Its collateral has been, in effect, returned to it reduced in value by the amount of more than $300,000.00.

VIII.

Were fiduciary relationships involved?

In addition to the matters set out herein under Point II. involving the attack made upon the title of the Belt Company to the collateral held by the Trust Company, there are several fiduciary relationships disclosed in the record which justify the taxation of solicitor and client costs. The attempts to avoid the pledge and obtain the pledged property without cost were so varied and from so many angles, that no one relationship can possibly account for them all. There is a trust relation, however, at the bottom of almost every charge.

Take, first, the intervening petition of the Southern Company in its own name. The attack upon the pledge under the after-acquired property clause of the Belt mortgage, as has been pointed out, challenged the title which the pledgee held in trust for the pledgor and made it incumbent upon the Trust Company to defend that issue. This was true directly as to the stocks and bonds pledged, and indirectly as to the lands of the Central Improvement Company claimed by the petition. The lands themselves were not pledged; but the stock of the company, the value of which depended upon the lands, was pledged, and the Circuit Court of Appeals held on the former appeal that this stock constituted an interest in the lands prior to the claim of the Southern Company. The judgment of that court was that, if the debt to the Trust Company was not paid, these lands should be sold and the proceeds applied thereon. This petition prayed that the pledged property described therein be conveyed and assigned to the Southern Company not the Belt Company or its receivers. (Rec. II, pp. 185-6.)

The amended intervening petition contained the same attack and the same prayer, with one additional charge—paragraph 13 (Rec. II, pp. 288-90). This paragraph charges a direct breach of an express trust. It is alleged that the Trust Company was named as trustee in the mortgage of the Union Terminal Railroad Company securing an issue of bonds; that "it then became the duty of the Trust Company under the express terms of said mortgage" to perform certain acts; that "unmindful of its duties as aforesaid" it diverted and misused $1,350,000 of bonds secured thereby; that this was done "wrongfully in breach of its duty as trustee," and "constituted a breach of trust on the part of the Trust Company." The Southern Company made the allegations solely as owner of all the bonds secured by the mortgage. (Rec. II, p. 290.)

If this is not a suit filed by a cestui que trust against a trustee for breach of trust, then it is difficult to explain what it is. The petitioner claims to be a cestui, and sets up the instrument under which the trustee was acting. It alleges a breach of that trust in the plainest possible language. Even in the last brief of the Southern Company it is said that the claim was "for alleged breach of trust as trustee in the mortgage made by the Union Terminal Railway Company" (p. 10).

On the succeeding page (11), however, the Southern Company changes this wording, and indicates its attempted evasion of the effects of its litigation. It there states that the issue was: did the Trust Company "assume" a relation of trust with respect to the use of the proceeds of the bonds? The entire argument of the Southern Company is based upon this attempted distinction.

We submit that in this amended petition, there is a direct charge of breach of trust against an express trustee, and that there is no question of assumption about it. We fail to find the word "assume" in paragraph 13, or any words importing the same meaning. What we find is an allegation that "it then became the duty of the Trust Company under the express terms of said mortgage" (Rec. II, p. 289). Other allegations confirm this, and no word detracts from it.

It is true that the Southern Company interpreted the mortgage as imposing duties which the trustee denied and which the court held not to be imposed thereby. But the cestui claimed under the mortgage, charged the trustee under the terms of the mortgage, and relied upon the terms of the mortgage which was charged to have been breached. The cestui had no rights to set up, except under that mortgage. It is as if a cestui should bring suit against his trustee for failure to invest the trust funds as required by the trust instrument; as if the trustee should answer that the trust instrument did not permit investment; and as if the court should sustain the answer of the trustee. Would the cestui be heard to say that he was not suing the trustee as such, but was merely trying to charge the trustee with a duty which the trust instrument did not impose upon him and which the trustee had denied?

We contend that this part of the intervening petition is a suit by a cestui against his trustee charging a breach of trust, in which the court has found that there was no basis for the suit. We contend that under the authorities heretofore cited (Point V [c]), the trustee is entitled to the expenses of his defense.

Take, next, the various bills of the Belt Company. They are in the main a mass of indiscriminate charges of domination, misuse of funds and fraud. But they contain many allegations amounting in effect if not expressly, to charges by a cestui against his trustee for breach of trust. In the original ancillary bill, there are charges that the bonds of the Union Terminal Company were delivered to the Trust Company "for the use and benefit" of the Belt Company, and no accounting made of the proceeds (Rec. II, p. 102); that the Trust Company had likewise disposed of the stock and bonds of the Air Line, belonging to the Belt Company and delivered by it to the Trust Company (Rec. II, pp. 102-3); that there were delivered to the Trust Company secured bonds and stocks amounting to more than $5,000,000.00, which were sold by it and not accounted for to the Belt Company (Rec. II, p. 103); that the stock of certain corporations, organized for the purpose of holding titles to real estate, and issued to the Trust Company "in trust for the use and benefit of the Belt Company," was misused by the Trust Company (Rec. II, p. 105); that certain shares of stock of the Central Improvement Company, "although belonging to said Belt Company, issued to said Trust Company," were disposed of by the Trust Company without accounting therefor. (Rec. II, p. 106.)

The amended ancillary bill, in addition to all the above, charges that the Trust Company undertook the disposition of stocks and bonds and unlawfully took exhorbitant commissions therefor (Rec. II, p. 233-7); that it exacted unlawful and exhorbitant trustee's fees (Rec. II, pp. 237-8); that it converted to its own use stocks and bonds delivered to it for disposition (Rec. II, pp. 238-40). The bill prayed, among other things, that an accounting be taken of the transactions and dealings "by the Trust Company for the use and benefit of and as trustee and agent for the Belt Company." (Rec. II, p. 264.) This does not refer to a constructive trusteeship by domination, for that is covered by another prayer.

The second amended and ancillary bill contained similar charges.

Here again is a specific and express attack upon a trustee, as trustee. The reason alleged in some instances is the domination of the trustee over the cestui. But the attack is a direct attack upon the trustee. This is mingled in with charges going to the validity of the pledge by the Belt Company—itself a ground for the allowance of solicitor and client costs—and with other baseless and scandalous charges. These only aggravate the offense, however, in increasing the difficulty and cost of the defense. The cestui cannot avoid the reimbursement of his trustee by including equally unfounded charges against the trustee not connected with the trust.

The Cambria bills, taken in themselves and considered as filed bona fide by that company, do not on their face attack any relationship of a fiduciary nature except the pledge. This has been discussed before. But these bills cannot be so taken and considered. The Court of Appeals decided on the former appeal that all this litigation was fathered and prosecuted by the Southern Company itself for its own ends and according to its own preconceived plan. The pleadings should, therefore, all be considered together and taken as one concerted attack by the Southern Company against the Trust Company to obtain the pledged collateral.

It cannot seriously be denied that breaches of trust in the following express trust relationships, at least, were directly charged against the Trust Company:

(1) The express trust created by the railroad mortgages executed by the Union Terminal Company, the Belt Company, the Consolidated Company, and the Air Line, in all of which the Trust Company was named as trustee;

(2) The express trust created by the delivery to the Trust Company of the stocks and bonds of the Belt and constituent companies, to be marketed by it;

(3) The fiduciary relationship arising from the pledge by the Belt Company to the Trust Company of the various securities deposited to secure the Belt indebtedness.

The Southern Company urges that the questions presented were not whether the Trust Company misconducted itself as trustee under the mortgages, but whether it assumed a relation of trust with respect to the proceeds of the bonds. We submit that there is no uncertainty about this matter in the pleadings. They allege that the Trust Company, as trustee under the various mortgages, conducted itself in a manner to breach the express terms of such mortgages. It would be impossible to state a cause of action, even prima facie, upon many of the attacked transactions, without alleging an express trust. And an express trust is alleged.

Where one company, the Union Terminal for example, delivers bonds or stocks to another, the Trust Company in this case, to be sold and the proceeds accounted for, there is no constructive trust involved. It is an express trust, of which the Trust Company is an express trustee. If it does not rightly sell and account for the bonds and stocks and their proceeds, it violates the terms of that express trust and not of any "assumed relation with respect to the proceeds." And so it was alleged in the pleadings.

In such cases, the alleged domination and control do not form the basis of the complaint. There is no cause of action stated for such domination and control. They are merely inducement, by reason of which it is alleged the trusts were violated.

We do not think there is any answer to these contentions.

The Southern Company was also an express trustee for the Trust Company.

There is a further fiduciary relationship shown by the record. There was one situation in which the Southern Company was trustee and the Trust Company was cestui que trust. That involved the property of the Belt Company purchased by the Southern Company at foreclosure sale under the plan of reorganization. Upon the former appeal in the case, the Court of Appeals held:

> "The property of the Belt Company was a trust fund. The stockholders of that company were trustees charged with the duty to apply that property to the payment of the claims of the Trust Company and of the other creditors of the Belt Company before they took to themselves any share in or benefit therefrom. When the Southern Company took their stock and gave them $4,750,000 par value of its stocks and bonds for their interest in the property of the Belt Company, it stepped into their shoes and became a trustee for the creditors of the Belt Company with plenary notice that the interest of those creditors in the property was at least as much as the value of the stocks and bonds it was giving for the interest of the stockholders, for the rights of the creditors in the Belt property were prior and superior to those of the stockholders."

It appears, therefore, that the Southern Company, holding in its hands the property of the Belt Company in trust to apply its value in part, at least, to the payment of the debt owed to its cestui que trust, the Trust Company, brings a suit in equity against its cestui que trust to nullify that trust and free the property from any claim on its part. The cestui, so attacked, is forced to protect its interest against this baseless and unwarranted suit by its trustee.

Can it be that the trustee, on being defeated in the litigation, can pay to the wronged cestui the bare value of its interest and demand the release of the entire trust property without regard to the cost and expense imposed on the cestui? Is it conceivable that a court of equity appealed to by such trustee must or should release the trust property to the trustee without requiring him to do equity by restoring the cestui to its original position so far as possible?

In Perry on Trusts, Sec. 900, it is said:

> "So if a trustee alleges in his answer that the cestui que trust is largely indebted to him, and after a long investigation it turns out that the trustee is greatly in arrears, he will be decreed to pay costs."

How much more should he be so decreed to pay costs if he initiates a baseless suit against his cestui in a wrongful endeavor to defeat the trust!

This, too, is an express trust, not a constructive trust. The Southern Company is not a trustee because of any wrongful act on its part. It is trustee because it held the stock of the Belt Company and was subject to the liabilities imposed upon stockholders in general by reason of their being stockholders. When they become stockholders, they in effect agree that the property of the corporation shall be applied first to its debts before they take any benefit. They become stockholders with that understanding.

When the Southern Company took their stock "it stepped into their shoes," as said by the Court of Appeals on the former appeal, and "became a trustee for the creditors of the Belt Company." Not a constructive trustee, resulting from some inequitable act, but an express trustee, as the successor of the former Belt stockholders, who by subscribing to or buying stock assumed a certain trust relationship to creditors.

We have here, then, a normal case of a trustee suing his cestui to defeat the trust, under aggravated circumstances. The principles hereinbefore discussed should certainly be applied.

It is urged by the Southern Company that the Trust Company was acting for the protection of its own interests, rather than in a fiduciary capacity, and hence does not come within the rule. This is true in many of the cases conceded by the Southern Company. In creditors' bills, in stockholders' bills, in partition cases and many others, the moving party is acting in his own interest. Every trustee, defending an attack of his beneficiary, is so acting.

In Walters v. Woodbridge, L. R. 7 Ch. Div. 504 (1878), a contention similar to the one here urged was answered by the court as follows:

> "Lord Romilly says that the trustee here defended himself against a false charge, and was in the same position as any other person who so defended himself; but it was a charge against the trustee in respect of acts done by him in the due administration of the trusts."

So, if the trustee is seeking to repudiate his trusteeship, and wrongfully denies the cestui's rights, the trustee is not entitled to have the cestui's attorneys' fees paid out of the fund, even if there be one; and in such a case the trustee will be personally charged with the cestui's solicitor and clients costs.

See to this effect the following cases, previously cited:

In re Clark, 174 Ia. 449, 154 N. W. 759 (1915);
Attorney General v. Old South Society, 13 Allen 474 (1866);
McGaw v. Acker, Merrall and Condit Co., 111 Md. 153, 73 Atl. 731 (1909);
Woodworth v. Old Second National Bank, 154 Mich. 459, 118 N. W. 581 (1908);
Madden v. Rosseter, 192 N. Y. S. 113, 117 Misc. Rep. 244 (1921);
American National Bank v. Warner, 176 S. W. 863 (Tex. Civ. App.) (1915).

Viewed in this light, there can be no doubt whatever of the right to solicitor and client costs. Even the contention of the Southern Company that the main litigation concerned solely the debt of the Belt Company to the Trust Company and the liability of the Southern Company therefor, becomes an argument in favor of that right.

The Southern Company, as a stockholder of the Belt Company, occupied the position of trustee of the Belt properties for the Trust Company. In repudiation of that trust, it filed a suit, not only vexatiously denying the cestui's rights, but baselessly making huge claims against the cestui. The latter answered, affirming the trust and setting up the validity of its rights. It has been put to large expense in sustaining the trust and to enormous expense in establishing its claim. It cannot be that equity will permit the trustee to return to the cestui the trust property or its equivalent—not all of it, but only the part to which the cestui is entitled—and leave the cestui to pay out of its portion the costs and expenses of establishing and enforcing the trust. It cannot be that courts of equity are without power to remedy such a wrong.

IX.

There was a fund in court.

Although no fund in court is essential to the application of the principles above set forth, there was a fund or funds here present over which the court had jurisdiction and which it was in effect administering.

The Circuit Court of Appeals, in its opinion of May 18, 1928, says (Rec., V. 1, p. 748):

> "We have here a case in which the Trust Company, a creditor of the Belt Company, in the course of the litigation uncovered and brought into the constructive possession of the court a fund from which creditors of the Belt Company were entitled to be paid. That fund was represented by the amount which the Southern Company had paid to the stockholders of the Belt Company for their stock pursuant to the reorganization plan."

The position of the Court of Appeals on this point is obviously sound, and this theory alone would be sufficient to justify the allowance of solicitor and client costs to the Trust Company.

The Southern Company, however, attacks this position. (See Sec. V., brief in support of application for certiorari.) It says that no fund was brought into the constructive possession of the court; that the decree of the lower court did not order the distribution of any fund, but merely awarded a personal judgment; and that the Trust Company asserted no claim but its own.

The argument is utterly lacking in substance, because all of the elements insisted upon by the Southern Company are present here. The decree of the lower court did not merely award a money judgment. It reached, and took possession of, and authorized administration upon the fund made available by the Trust Company's litigation. The Circuit Court of Appeals, in its former decision, expressly made the decree a charge upon certain specific described property: the pledged collateral, the Central Improvement Company lands, and the assets of the Belt Company (210 Fed. 723), and ordered that property sold in case of non-payment.

In view of the foregoing, how can the Southern Company contend that no fund was brought into the constructive possession of the court? To be sure, the Southern Company paid the debt, and thereby made it unnecessary for the court to sell the property described; but this cannot alter the fact that the decree authorized a sale of property, at least constructively in its possession.

Furthermore, the stocks and bonds pledged to the Trust Company were certainly in court, by virtue of the injunction against their sale and the appointment of the Belt receivers. The stock of the Central Improvement Company, at least, representing the lands which the Southern Company was endeavoring to secure, had a very substantial value. A part of the costs might properly be chargeable to that fund, now taken over and absorbed by the Southern Company. But certainly the fund consisting of all the interest of the stockholders in the property of the Belt Company cannot be retained by the Southern Company freed from the burden of these costs.

Nor can that result be accomplished merely by exercising astute action in paying off other creditors, and in thus isolating the Trust Company. As said by the Court of Appeals, "Such action cannot avail to destroy the equitable right of that company to some compensation for its services in this matter." (28 Fed. 2d, 246.)

Central Railroad Co. v. Pettus, 113 U. S. 116 (1884), and Tevander v. Ruysdael, 299 Fed. 746 (C. C. A. 7th Cir.) (1924), are of particular interest upon this point.

The contention of the Southern Company that recovery in this regard must in any event be limited to the amount of the unpaid Belt debts, finds no support that we can find. The following cases would seem to be against the contention:

Tevander v. Ruysdael, 299 Fed. 746 (C. C. A. 7th Cir.) (1924);

Planters Rice Mill Co. v. Merchants National Bank, 78 Ga. 574, 3 S. E. 327 (1887);

McGaw v. Acker, Merrall and Condit Co., 111 Md. 153, 73 Atl. 731 (1909);

Pickett & Sexton v. School District of Kansas City, 193 Mo. App. 519, 186 S. W. 553 (1916);

Madden v. Rosseter, 192 N. Y. S. 113, 117 Misc. Rep. 244 (1921);

In re Baldwin's Estate, (1900) 1 Irish L. R. 15.

X.

Counsel fees and costs after June, 1910, are allowable.

The Southern Company contends that under no circumstances is it liable for counsel fees incurred subsequent to the final decree of June, 1910, for the reason that thereafter the only issue in the case concerned the Southern's liability for the Belt debt.

In our opinion the only matter before this court is the power of the District Court to award any counsel fees, and the propriety of the particular items is not in issue. In view, however, of the prominence given the point in the brief of the Southern Company, perhaps a word with respect to it will not be amiss.

There are three answers to this contention, so conclusive that they need only be stated.

1. The decree of the District Court entered in June, 1910, was a single decree, covering the whole case, and must be appealed from in toto or not at all. The fees and costs subsequent thereto were incurred in such appeal, and are simply a part of prosecuting and defending the entire litigation.

2. The decree adjudged to the Southern Company the lands of the Central Trust Company, an integral part of the value of the Trust Company's collateral, and that value was not made available to the Trust Company until so ordered by the Circuit Court of Appeals and by this court. The decree of the District Court awarded the Trust Company but a half-loaf.

3. The liability of the Southern Company for the Belt debt was not the only or main issue upon the appeal. The main issue was whether the Southern Company held the Belt properties in trust and if so what its duties were under the circumstances.

The effort of the Trust Company on the appeal was to have this trust legally determined, and its expenditures were directed to that end. What the Court of Appeals and this court decided was that the trust existed and that the Southern Company must perform in accordance with the terms of that trust. It was not the liability of that company to pay money that was involved, but its obligations as trustee. Not until the decision on appeal were the Trust Company's rights as cestui recognized and enforced, and until that time the trustee and the trust property were in court, and the trustee was vigorously contesting the cestui's rights.

It is true that very large counsel fees were paid after June, 1910. This goes to the amount that should be allowed as costs, rather than to the power of the court to allow costs. It may be stated here, however, that these fees were not paid by the Trust Company except upon the final judgments of courts having jurisdiction. The facts in this regard, if they are thought to have any bearing here, can be found in Mecartney v. Guardian Trust Co., 274 Mo., 224 (1918), and Mecartney v. Guardian Trust Co., 280 Fed. 64 (C. C. A., 8th Cir.) (1922). We refer the court to these cases.

XI.

The situation in England is the same as here.

The Southern Company argues that solicitor and client costs cannot be successfully taxed in this country, for the reason that there is here no fixed standard of fees, as there is in England; that in England attorneys' and solicitors' fees are fixed by law, and are taxed against the losing party in every case, whether at law or in equity. The fact is that so far as concerns solicitor and client costs in the sense here involved, the situation in England is precisely the same as in this country. Confusion regarding the state of the English law is due to a failure to distinguish between the English terms, solicitor and client costs and solicitor and own client costs.

The English have a system, quite unlike anything in this country, by which the attorney or solicitor in a case may, on motion made in court, compel his client to pay the fees due him for that litigation. This has nothing to do with costs as we understand them. The matter concerns only the solicitor and his client, and not the rights of one party to the litigation against the other. However, these fees which may be thus collected are called solicitor and own client costs, or costs as between solicitor and own client. Any motion or application for such fees is referred by the court to a taxing master, a court official, who fixes the amount to be allowed.

See, as to the foregoing, the Attorneys & Solicitors Act of August 22, 1843, 6 & 7 Vict., Chap. 73; and the Attorneys & Solicitors Act of July 14, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict., Chap. 28.

The Solicitors Remuneration Act of August 22, 1881, L. R. Gen. Pub. St., V. 17, Chap. 44, gives to the Lord Chancellor and others the power to make general orders prescribing and regulating the remuneration of solicitors in connection with non-contentious business. Pursuant to this Act, various remuneration orders have from time to time been issued. The Act concerns only solicitor and own client costs.

It is also true that ordinary court costs in England, taxable as between party and party, include various items of attorneys' fees, more or less nominal in amount. See Aycкbourn, Practice of the High Court of Chancery, 7th Ed. (1861), p. 396; Daniell, Pleading and Practice of the High Court of Chancery, 4th Am. Ed. (1871), V. 2, p. 1439. These fees are taxable as costs in both legal and equitable actions, and in law actions go as of right to the prevailing party. They correspond to the various small fees, like the $20 docket fee under our Act of 1853, often taxable by virtue of statute or rule of court, as party and party costs in this country.

But the situation with respect to solicitor and client costs in England is identical with the situation here. They are taxed only in Chancery cases, and according to the conscience of the court. There is no fixed or established scale of charges. They are allowed only in the special types of cases herein discussed, principally in connection with litigation between fiduciaries. Turner v. Collins, L. R. 12 Eq. Cas. 438 (1871); Mordue v. Palmer, L. R. 6 Ch. A. C. 22 (1870); Andrews v. Barnes, L. R. 39 Ch. D. 133 (1887); In re Foster v. Great Western Ry. Co., L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 515 (1882); Halsbury Laws of England, V. 23, p. 183; V. 26, p. 798.

XII.

Free access to the courts.

The Southern Company fears for the principle of free access to the courts if solicitor and client costs are taxed against it in this proceeding. But its argument proves too much.

This court has frequently sustained the constitutionality of statutes providing for an allowance of attorneys' fees as costs. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Nye-Schneider-Fowler Co., 260 U. S. 35, 43 S. Ct. 55 (1922); Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Cade, 233 U. S. 642, 34 S. Ct. 678 (1914); Farmers & Merchants Insurance Company v. Dobney, 189 U. S. 301, 23 S. Ct. 565 (1902); Home Life Insurance Co. v. Fisher, 188 U. S. 726, 23 S. Ct. 380 (1902).

Congress evidently has not been much swayed by such an argument, for it has enacted several statutes allowing fees in particular types of cases. United States Code Annotated, Title 17, Section 40; Title 28, Sections 819, 824, 825, 829; Title 49, Sections 8, 16 (2) (sustained in Meeker v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 236 U. S. 412, 35 S. Ct. 328 [1914]).

We see no reason for contending that a taxation of solicitor and client costs works a denial of free access to the courts, more than does a taxation of party and party costs. The character of litigation in which solicitor and client costs are properly taxable must be borne in mind. If they are awarded under circumstances where the litigation is so unwarranted as to justify an implication of bad faith, certainly there is no substance to the argument that free access to the courts is unlawfully denied. No honest litigant is penalized.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart, 241 U. S. 261, 36 S. Ct. 586 (1915), sustains a state statute which adds 10 per cent to the amount of a judgment appealed from, if affirmed on appeal.

Rule 23 of this court provides that in all cases where a writ of error shall appear to have been sued out merely for delay, damages at a rate not exceeding ten per cent, in addition to interest, shall be awarded upon the amount of the judgment; and that the same rule shall be applied to decrees for the payment of money in equity cases. The rule has often been enforced. See Southern Ry. Co. v. Gadd, 233 U. S. 572, 34 S. Ct. 696 (1913); Texas &

Pacific Ry. Co. v. Prater, 229 U. S. 177, 33 S. Ct. 637 (1913); Hennessy v. Sheldon, 12 Wall. 440 (1870).

Moreover, the right of free access to the courts has an equally vital correlative—the right of freedom from court interference when nothing has been done to warrant being forced into court. The imposition of costs upon equitable principles is an instrument in the hands of the court for effecting justice between the parties. They may be imposed upon a defendant for an unconscionable defense, and on a plaintiff for a vexatious action. It is a shield to both parties against inequitable attacks.

If this court should hold that the District Court had no power to award attorney's fees to the Trust Company, and this court no power to authorize such an award, it would deliberately be putting out of its hands and placing beyond its reach, an effective weapon for the betterment of judicial administration. We cannot believe that the court will so deprive itself of power. It is a matter of concern not only to our client, but to all those litigants who may, in time to come, be in the same situation.

The "judicial power of the United States" is by the Constitution vested in this court and the lower Federal Courts. That is to say, all the judicial power of the United States. Is is possible that these courts are so devoid of power that they cannot regulate costs in proceedings before them? And, too, regulate costs as they have been regulated for centuries in the country from which our legal institutions were derived? Why should not the same policy which warrants this court in assessing penalties for frivolous appeals be available to District Courts to penalize the filing of frivolous or vexatious suits before them? Is not this power necessary to the protection of those courts themselves from being used as instruments of oppression?

Justice and fairness under the circumstances demand that the Southern Company reimburse the Trust Company for the expenses of this litigation. It is urged that the amount of those expenses is very large. So it is. But still not so large as the damage to the Trust Company. The expense has been incurred and paid. Who should settle the bill? The Trust Company, which has been innocently dragged through the courts? Or the Southern Company, which instigated ten years of litigation to find one small error and brought about more than any other factor the financial ruin of the Trust Company?

The decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals, rendered after a most exhaustive examination of the facts and authorities, fully upholds the Trust Company's claim, and should be affirmed.

We are not confronted with any difficulties, suggested by counsel for the Southern Company, in arriving at the amount of solicitor and client costs which should be taxed. A master has heard evidence thereon and filed his report. The District Court should be directed to pass upon the exceptions thereto.

Respectfully submitted,

JUSTIN D. BOWERSOCK,
ROBERT B. FIZZELL,
JOHN F. RHODES,
Attorneys for Respondent.

FILE COPY

FILED
MAR 20 1930
CHARLES ELMORE CROPLEY
CLERK

No. 22.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1929.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Respondent.

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF RESPONDENT, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY.

JUSTIN D. BOWERSOCK,
ROBERT B. FIZZELL,
JOHN F. RHODES,
Attorneys for Respondent.

SMITH-GRIEVES, LAW PRINTERS, KANSAS CITY, MO.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1929.

THE KANSAS CITY SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY,
Petitioner,

vs.

GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY, Respondent.

No. 22.

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF RESPONDENT, GUARDIAN TRUST COMPANY.

Now comes Guardian Trust Company, respondent herein, and respectfully petitions the court to set aside the decision and judgment heretofore on February 24, 1930, rendered herein, and grant respondent a rehearing in this cause, for the reasons hereinafter stated:

The decision of this court gives effect to a decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals and holds such decree conclusive, upon an issue which this court expressly says was not before the Circuit Court of Appeals. This court says in its opinion:

> "For the proper construction of the decree under consideration, regard is to be had to the issues be> fore the court on appeal, the findings applied for and the directions given. The proposed findings and additional recovery extended to matters not before the court. * * * The merits of the claims on which they sought recovery against the Trust Company were not before the court." (Italics ours.)

Nevertheless, this court says:

> "It is plain that the stockholders' application was denied and that the decree did not authorize or permit the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client."

If the former quotation correctly states the issues in the Circuit Court of Appeals, it follows that the stockholders' application was denied, not upon its merits, or because too late, but because the court could not pass upon a question which was not before it. The application there and the action taken upon it simply leave the situation as it was before—just as if the application had not been filed.

The action of the District Court in controversy in the present appeal, was based not upon the application filed in the Circuit Court of Appeals, but upon an application filed in the District Court after the case was remanded. To sustain the present decision, it must be held that the application was filed too late. If so, when should the question have been raised? How could it have been raised sooner?

A suit was filed by the Southern against a pledgor and a pledgee, claiming the pledged property. The pledgee defends and is defeated in the trial court. It appeals. The appellate court reverses the trial court and remands the case for the entry of a decree in favor of the pledgee. The pledgee then moves that, in the decree, it be allowed its expenses in defending the pledged property. Can it be said that this is too late?

We submit, on the contrary, that this is the usual and proper procedure. It is followed in practically every foreclosure by a trustee of a mortgage or deed of trust securing bonds. The allowances are made and the costs adjudged after the entry of the decree. It has the support of all the authorities with which we are familiar.

Missouri Pacific Ry. Co. v. Larabee, 234 U. S. 459 (34 S. C. 979);
Ex Parte Union Steamboat Co., 178 U. S. 317;
In re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247;
Sizer v. Many, 16 How. 98;
U. S. v. Pan-American Petroleum Co., 24 Fed. (2d) 206;
Mills v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 226 Fed. 812;
St. Louis & San Francisco R. Co. v. Barker, 210 Fed. 902;
Kell v. Trenchard, 146 Fed. 245;
Clark v. C. M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 105 Fed. 552;
Baltimore B. & L. Ass'n v. Alderson, 90 Fed. 489.

We think the question must be determined, not by the action taken by the Circuit Court of Appeals, on the first appeal, but on the merits of the application filed in the District Court and the authorities applicable thereto.

Respectfully submitted,

JUSTIN D. BOWERSOCK,
ROBERT B. FIZZELL,
JOHN F. RHODES,
Attorneys for Respondent.

Certificate.

I, of counsel for respondent, Guardian Trust Company, do hereby certify that in my opinion the foregoing petition is well founded in law and that the same is not made for vexation or delay.

JUSTIN D. BOWERSOCK.

mpany,
g petit made

s.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

No. 22.—October Term, 1929.

The Kansas City Southern Railway Company, Petitioner, vs. Guardian Trust Company, Henry C. Flower, Receiver.	On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

[February 24, 1930.]

Mr. Justice Butler delivered the opinion of the Court.

The question is whether the Guardian Trust Company, in addition to amounts taxable as costs between party and party, is entitled to recover anything on account of counsel fees or other expenses as costs between solicitor and client.

In a judgment creditor's suit brought in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri by the Cambria Steel Company against the Kansas City Suburban Belt Railroad Company, receivers were appointed for the latter. It had given its notes for large amounts to the Trust Company and pledged stocks and bonds as collateral security. The Kansas City Southern Railway Company had acquired on mortgage foreclosures the properties of the Belt Company, and of the Kansas City, Pittsburg & Gulf Railroad Company.

The Trust Company claimed that the Southern Company, having succeeded to the properties of the Belt Company and of the Gulf Company on terms that preferred shareholders to creditors, became liable for their debts.* It brought three suits in a Missouri court to compel the Southern Company to pay the debts owing to it by them. Thereupon the Southern Company brought two suits against the Trust Company in the United States court to enjoin prosecution of the state court cases. One related to the actions on the debts of the Belt Company (146 Fed. 337) and the other to all the actions. 171 Fed. 43. Injunctions granted by the lower court were dissolved by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

*Northern Pacific Ry. v. Boyd, 228 U. S. 482, decided while this case was pending in the Circuit Court of Appeals on the first appeal.

In the creditor's suit, the Belt Company and its receivers filed an ancillary bill against the Trust Company to have the claims of the latter against the former declared invalid, to recover the collateral security, and to have an accounting. The Southern Company intervened, claiming under the foreclosure, and sought to recover the collateral security and other property from the Trust Company. The decree of the Circuit Court, except as to matters not important here, denied relief against the Trust Company, established its claims against the Belt Company and, notwithstanding the Trust Company's contention that the issue was not before the court, adjudged that the Southern Company was not liable therefor, and ordered that one-third of the costs be borne by the Trust Company and two-thirds by the Southern and Belt Companies.

The matters adjudged in favor of the Trust Company were not taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals for review. The Trust Company appealed. It insisted that the lower court erred in holding that the Southern Company was not indebted to it. Preferring to pursue that company in the actions pending in the state court, it had not prayed judgment in this suit against the Southern Company. It also maintained that the lower court erred in holding it liable for any part of the costs.

After the case had been argued and submitted but before opinion was announced, owners of a small minority of the shares of the Trust Company were permitted to file a suggestion that the Trust Company should have judgment against the Southern Company for the debt of the Belt Company. The court reversed the decree below, decided the Southern Company became liable for that debt, postponed for further argument the question whether under the pleadings the Trust Company might have judgment therefor, and held it was entitled to recover its entire costs. 201 Fed. 811, 829.

Later the same stockholders by leave of the Circuit Court of Appeals filed, and at the final submission of the case were heard in support of, the following suggestions:

That the court embody in its order for reversal a special finding that the creditor's bill, ancillary bill and intervening petition were instigated and prosecuted by and for the Southern Company without good faith, and that the entire litigation was trivial, wanton and oppressive. That it direct the lower court to reserve jurisdiction to ascertain the amount of solicitors' fees and other expenses necessarily incurred by the Trust Company in making its defenses, to find the amount of such expenses, tax them as costs in the case and enter a further decree against the Southern Company therefor. Or in the alternative that the final decree below be without prejudice to the right of the Trust Company to sue the Southern Company for such expenses. That such additional decree also include the expenses and damages incurred by and resulting to the Trust Company from the second injunction suit (171 Fed. 43) and that it be without prejudice to the rights of the Trust Company to move for such damages and expenses in the first injunction suit. 146 Fed. 337.

In its second opinion the Circuit Court of Appeals dealt with these suggestions. 210 Fed. 696. It said (p. 723):

"A deliberate consideration of this petition and of the exhaustive arguments of counsel have, however, persuaded that inasmuch as the questions suggested came for the first time into this suit at the rehearing in this court, as no evidence has been taken relative to them and as the evidence upon the issues tried in this case was not brought to this court, it would be unwise and might be unjust to adjudicate the questions presented by the petition of these stockholders. Moreover, as this court cannot rightly determine the questions relating to the costs to be taxed at this time, as there are established rules of practice concerning them and as directions to the court below to open and try new issues might, and probably would, prolong this litigation through several years more, our conclusion is that our just course is to leave the taxation of costs to the court below under the principles, rules, and practice in equity." And, "as a conclusion of the whole matter," it gave directions for the entry of a specific decree with "costs."

And the court adjudged that the decree of the lower court be reversed and remanded the case "with directions to render a decree for the Trust Company in accordance with the views expressed in the opinion of this Court". The Southern Company appealed but did not raise any question concerning costs. And there was no cross-appeal. February 21, 1916, this court affirmed the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals. 240 U. S. 166. The mandate set out the decree below, ordered that it be affirmed and remanded the case to the District Court.

April 15, 1916, pending exact determination of the amount conceded to be payable under the decree, the Southern Company paid $821,623.28 to the Trust Company. Later the payment being found in excess of the amount required, the difference was adjusted. April 18, 1916, the mandate was filed in the District Court. October 4, 1922, the Trust Company applied to have final decree entered, and claimed not only such costs as are taxable as between party and party but also counsel fees and other expenses as costs between solicitor and client. The court construed the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals to find that in carrying on this litigation there was lack of good faith and a purpose on the part of the Southern Company to despoil the Trust Company, held itself bound by such findings, and interpreted the decree to require it to ascertain and tax against the Southern Company counsel fees and other expenses incurred by the Trust Company in making its defenses.

A special master was appointed to ascertain and report the amount of such expenses. The Trust Company presented items of its demand in two groups. The first included those claimed to be taxable as between party and party; the second included other expenses amounting to $319,829.97 of which $299,137.30 was attorneys' fees, the balance being to cover printing briefs, services of experts, miscellaneous and incidental disbursements. The master found the costs taxable as between party and party and as to that there is no controversy here. He also found the Trust Company entitled to counsel fees and other expenses amounting to $296,520.37 to be taxed as costs between solicitor and client. After hearing upon exceptions the court, contrary to its earlier decision, held that the proper construction of the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals limited recovery of costs to those taxable between party and party, and entered decree accordingly.

The Trust Company again appealed. The Circuit Court of Appeals, apparently assuming that its decree and the mandate of this court authorized the District Court to allow the Trust Company costs as between solicitor and client, reversed the decree. 28 F. (2d) 233. It referred to the character of the litigation, held that federal courts of equity have jurisdiction to allow such costs citing the practice in the High Court of Chancery in England as applicable here, concluded that the Trust Company is entitled to such an allowance and remanded the case with directions to the lower court to make proper allowances for costs as between solicitor and client.

Did the mandate of this court authorize the District Court to make any allowance in favor of the Trust Company on account of attorneys' fees and other expenses to be taxed as costs between solicitor and client?

The decree here affirmed required the "taxation of costs . . . under the principles, rules and practice in equity". It undoubtedly covered ascertainment of amounts taxable between party and party. There was no specific reference to any additional allowance. The language used disclosed no intention to require more than the usual taxation. When used in a judgment or decree without qualification, the word "costs" means the amounts taxable as such under Acts of Congress, rules promulgated by its authority and practice established consistently with governing enactments. Newton v. Consolidated Gas Co., 265 U. S. 78, 83. Ex parte Peterson, 253 U. S. 300, 316. In actions at law costs follow the result as of course, but in equity costs not otherwise governed by statute are given or withheld in the sound discretion of the court according to the facts and circumstances of the case. The nominal amounts fixed by statute (28 U. S. C., §§ 571, 572) and taxable as attorneys' fees are not meant to cover the compensation to which lawyers in charge of the litigation are reasonably entitled. A decree merely allowing costs to be taxed does not mean that anything is to be included on account of counsel fees in addition to the amount specified in the statute. Even if it be assumed that federal equity courts have jurisdiction to allow costs as between solicitor and client and to include therein attorneys' fees in excess of the amount prescribed by statute—and as to that we express no opinion—the purpose to authorize such costs and to make such allowance should be clearly expressed in the decree. 2 Daniell's Chancery Pleading and Practice, 6th Ed., p. 1410.

For the proper construction of the decree under consideration, regard is to be had to the issues before the court on appeal, the findings applied for and the directions given. The proposed findings and additional recovery extended to matters not before the court. The costs taxable as between party and party were involved on the appeal and the court reversed the decree of the lower court which charged one-third against the Trust Company. No question of costs as between solicitor and client had been raised below. No issue of bad faith had been framed, and no such charge was suggested until after the filing of the first opinion. The stockholders' second application, made pending rehearing, contained the first request for a finding of fact on which to base a decree for allowance of attorneys' fees and other expenses to the Trust Company. As there was no appeal by the Belt Company or the Southern Company, the merits of the claims on which they sought recovery against the Trust Company were not before the court.

The lateness of the application, the lack of evidence and danger of injustice mentioned in the opinion were good reasons why the court should deny the application. The suggested danger of prolonging the litigation by trial of new issues was a reason for refusing to direct the lower court to open the case and to make the requested determinations. The failure of the court to make the requested special finding, to adopt the alternative suggestion or to take any action in reference to the parts of the application relating to the Trust Company's damages and expenses in the injunction suits goes to show a purpose to deny any recovery of expenses in addition to the costs which under established practice are taxable as between party and party. And the opinion makes it clear that the decree directed to be entered below was intended to be an end of the whole matter. It is plain that the stockholders' application was denied and that the decree did not authorize or permit the taxation of costs as between solicitor and client.

The mandate required the execution of the decree. The District Court could not vary it or give any further relief. In re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., 160 U. S. 247, 255. Gaines v. Rugg, 148 U. S. 228, 241. In re Washington & Georgetown R'd. Co., 140 U. S. 91, 96. Ex parte The Union Steamboat Company, 178 U. S. 317, 319. That court was right in holding that, by the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals and the mandate of this court, the costs recoverable by the Trust Company were limited to those taxable between party and party.

Decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals reversed and that of the District Court affirmed.

A true copy.

Test:

Clerk, Supreme Court, U. S.